Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak with reference to certain important items that I think should be considered in connection with the naval appropriation bill now before the House.

By an act of Congress approved June 14, 1934—Public, No. 347, Seventy-third Congress—authority was given to acquire additional tracts of land adjacent to and lying southeastwardly from the Hampton Roads naval operating base at Norfolk, Va., this land being generally known as East Camp, together with such additional land adjoining this said East Camp site as necessary for the development and expansion of naval air activities at the Norfolk station and comprising approximately 540 acres, being bounded by Masons Creek on the north and east, Bush Creek on the west, and the Virginian Railway on the south. There was by Congress authorized to be appropriated for the purchase of this entire tract the sum of $400,000.

By an act of Congress approved April 15, 1935—Public, No. 36, Seventy-fourth Congress—authority was given the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction at the "Naval air station, Norfolk, Va.; barracks and mess hall for enlisted men at cost of $500,000."

In hearings before the Naval Appropriations Committee in the Seventy-fourth Congress, Rear Admiral Smith, Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy Department, pointed out the immediate necessity of a sea-wall replacement at the Hampton Roads naval base to protect and preserve filled areas comprising a major portion of the water front of that important operating base. Admiral Smith estimated the cost of this sea-wall replacement at $600,000. The Seventy-fourth Congress eventually appropriated $300,000, or half of this estimated cost, and there has been a beginning on this important work, but $300,000 more is needed to complete the project.

The Norfolk Naval Air Station is one of the most important in the country and possibly the most important on the Atlantic coast.

The aircraft overhaul department at the Norfolk Air Station, already developed into great importance—though greatly cramped for operating floor space—was as far back as June 1934 commended for "remarkable efficiency record" by Rear Admiral E. J. King, then Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics. Further, in commendation of the aircraft overhaul department at Norfolk, Rear Admiral King said:

> The overhaul shops at Norfolk were first among Navy shops to attain a consistent average of 40 calendar days for the overhaul of scout-type planes. This was accompanied by marked savings in man-hours and material required for all types of airplanes, without cheapening the quality of overhaul. In engine overhaul, the Norfolk shops were first to achieve a major overhaul of a 1340 engine in less than 130 direct man-hours, and this was accompanied by a reduction in calendar days and material required for overhaul without any sacrifice of the quality of overhaul. This preeminence has resulted in economics at Norfolk and has pointed the way to possible economies in other Navy shops. These results are the more remarkable in that they have been accomplished during a period of diminishing work load and drastic reduction in shop force.

Now, the Norfolk aircraft overhaul department has grown so until there is not room for wholly efficient work without a great deal of lost motion. There is at this time, by urgent necessity, in temporary use an airplane hangar for wing, carpenter, and cleaning shop work. A great deal of time is thus lost in carrying airplane parts back and forth between this hangar and the main overhaul shop. Accompanying photographs here exhibited give some idea of crowded and almost unworkable conditions for greatest efficiency in one of the Nation's most important aircraft overhaul shop divisions. Here the sum of $500,000 is urgently needed for replacements and extensions.

With the Navy greatly increasing its aircraft—this bill we today consider showing more than $29,000,000 for replacement, additional increment, new planes for Naval Reserves, and so forth—what is to be done when provision is not at the same time made for adequate aircraft overhaul-department facilities?

And what is to be done to care for the enlisted personnel, with no action taken for the appropriation of funds under authorization already made for adequate barracks and mess hall to replace present dilapidated buildings at the Norfolk naval base, a condition already known to some Members of Congress, who have seen existent inadequate barracks and mess-hall conditions at the Norfolk base? If the American Fleet should be suddenly transferred to the Atlantic coast and to Hampton Roads, where it would naturally come for base, there would be found an almost collapsed condition for care, especially of aircraft personnel, because of inadequate housing facilities at the Norfolk base. Even with appropriation of the $500,000 already authorized, provision would only come from this amount to care for the housing in barracks quarters of some six to eight hundred men. But shortly and before anything could be done, at best there will come the commissioning of the new aircraft carriers Enterprise and Yorktown, and in this connection there will be needed at the Norfolk naval air base quarters for some 1,200 men, all in addition to the main crews of the Enterprise and Yorktown, these 1,200 additional men to be engaged with 8 squadrons of airplanes—some 140 planes in all—in maneuvers from July to the close of the current year. Under present conditions, inadequate barracks at the Norfolk base will result in a large part of these 1,200 men having to be housed on the outside.

It is to be greatly regretted that neither the general Budget, as it came to Congress, nor the Appropriations Committee, in framing the legislative bill now before us, found it possible to care for the important items I have here presented as well as many much-needed improvements at the Norfolk Navy Yard, where there is great requirement for such things as additional pier, quay walls, and so forth, for repair and other operations, new dispensary building and accessories, additional cranes, important foundry additions, improved railroad tracks, and so forth. The last Congress fortunately appropriated $125,000 for important additional machine-shop construction at the Norfolk Navy Yard. This construction will soon be under way. But, when completed, there will be only a building, a shell as it were, with no machinery that should have been provided for at a cost of not less than $150,000. This machinery, however, may be had out of general appropriations to the Navy for mechanical tools provided in the present bill; but, even so, there will be nothing available until July 1, unless Congress should make present contemplated appropriations available upon passage and approval of this bill, and such should certainly be done.

I submit these presentations as highly important to the general welfare of the Navy and important establishments thereof at strategic Atlantic coast locations. [Applause.]

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. VINSON of Kentucky] having resumed the chair, Mr. BLAND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 5232, the naval appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

746. By Mr. CULKIN: Petition of the New York State Bar Association, opposing legislation affecting the membership of the Supreme Court; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

747. Also, petition of Charles D. Card and others, of Watertown, N. Y., opposing legislation preventing the free dissemination of information and curtailing the right of free speech; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

748. Also, petition of Nellie Guinup and others, of Watertown, N. Y., opposing legislation preventing the free dissemination of information and curtailing the right of free speech; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

749. Also, petition of Clara McKinney and others, of Brainardsville, N. Y., opposing legislation preventing the free dissemination of information and curtailing the right of free speech; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

750. Also, petition of H. Anderson and others, of Watertown, N. Y., opposing legislation preventing the free dissemination of information and curtailing the right of free speech; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

751. Also, petition of Arthur J. Peterson and others, of Watertown, N. Y., opposing legislation preventing the free dissemination of information and curtailing the right of free speech; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

752. Also, petition of G. A. Gaines and others, of Smithville, N. Y., opposing legislation preventing the free dissemination of information and curtailing the right of free speech; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

753. By Mr. FITZPATRICK: Petition of the Italian Cloak, Suit, and Skirt Makers' Union, Local No. 48, urging the judicial reform as outlined by the President; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

754. Also, petition of the Hat Trimmers' Local No. 21, Yonkers, N. Y., urging support of the President's judiciary program; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

755. By Mr. FORD of California: Resolution by the Los Angeles Central Labor Council, representing more than 75,000 members, emphatically approving the changes in the Federal judiciary, including the United States Supreme Court, as they believe that through this proposed legislation laws for the betterment of all the people and advancement of the Nation as a whole can be enacted and made effective; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

756. By Mr. FULLER: Memorial of the Arkansas General Assembly, urging an appropriation of $14,000,000 for vocational education as authorized under the George-Dean Act; to the Committee on Appropriations.

757. Also, petition of M. G. Ellis and 64 others, of Gentry, Ark., protesting against the appointment of additional Supreme Court Justices; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

758. By Mr. MAPES: Petition of 102 residents of the Fifth District of Michigan, protesting to the possibility of legislation suppressing freedom of religious worship, free speech, and a free press; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

759. By Mr. MERRITT: Resolution of the Citizens' Independent Convention of Rye, N. Y., a nonpartisan convention, disapproving and opposing legislation recently submitted to the Congress by the President insofar as such legislation proposes to increase the size of the Supreme Court or to effect a wholesale change in its membership under threat of such increase, thereby tending to impair its independence as a judicial tribunal; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

760. Also, resolution of the Champlain Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of Crown Point and Port Henry, urging opposition of any bill which increases the size of the Supreme Court and destroys its potency; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

761. Also, resolution of the Queens County Council, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, requesting that Congress provide an additional hospital of such size in the city of New York as shall accommodate veterans now forced into private institutions; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

762. Also, resolution of the Queens County Council, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, requesting that the Veterans' Administration open additional beds at the Brooklyn Naval Hospital to the veterans of foreign wars in hospitalization; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

763. Also, resolution of the Bayside Republican Club, disapproving of the recent proposal of the President of the United States to enlarge the personnel of the Supreme Court by the appointment of six additional Justices in the event that the sitting Justices who have reached the age of 70 do not choose to retire; and in reaffirming its complete confidence in the integrity and impartiality of that august tribunal as now constituted; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

764. Also, resolution of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, that this association, however its members may differ in their views of recent decisions of the Supreme Court on constitutional questions involving the scope of the Federal and State power in social and economic legislation, the proposal of the President in his message of February 5, 1937, and embodied in Senate bill 1392 and House bill 4417 to affect the decision of such questions by changing the membership of the Supreme Court would, if enacted, make the Court suspect of subservience and the Executive of domination; it is unsound in principle and dangerous as a precedent and violates the historic American principle of the independence of the judiciary; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

765. Also, resolution of the Tioga County Bar Association, in annual meeting assembled, endorsing and approving the resolution of the New York State Bar Association, and condemning the plan of the President of the United States as an attempt to subordinate that incorruptible defender of our American liberties, the Supreme Court of the United States, to the present administration; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

766. Also, resolution of the Jefferson County Bar Association, unalterably opposing the granting to the President the power to appoint six additional Justices of the Supreme Court and urging the Senators and Representatives in Congress to lend their influence and to cast their votes against the passage of such proposed legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

767. Also, resolution of the Bayside Hills Civic Association, opposing the proposed tax of 1 cent per gallon on fuel oil, when used for the generation of heat, as it would be discriminatory and one that would impose such a serious hardship on users as to necessitate their abandoning oil-burning heating systems, and thus discouraging the ownership of small homes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

768. By Mr. RUTHERFORD: Petition of the citizens of Nicholson, Wyoming County, Pa., protesting against the President's proposal to increase the number of members of the United States Supreme Court; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

769. Also, petition of certain citizens of Canton, Bradford County, Pa., protesting against the President's proposal to increase the number of members of the United States Supreme Court; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

770. Also, petition of certain citizens of Hallstead, Susquehanna County, Pa., protesting against the President's proposal to increase the number of members of the United States Supreme Court; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

771. By Mr. ASHBROOK: Petition of James F. Campbell and 82 residents of Knox County, Ohio, protesting against the President's Supreme Court proposal; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

772. By Mr. PFEIFER: Petition of the board of estimate and apportionment of the city of New York, requesting construction and equipment of the two new battleships to the Brooklyn Navy Yard; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

773. By Mr. BURDICK: Petition of the Twenty-fifth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota; to the Committee on Agriculture.

774. By Mr. SHAFER of Michigan: Petition of S. R. Truex and 42 other citizens, of Red Bank, N. J., urging the passage of House bill 167, known as the longevity bill, calling attention to Congress for a change in the retirement law and to weaknesses in the Social Security Act; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

775. By Mr. TURNER: Eighteen petitions of citizens of Columbia, Tenn., requesting that no law be passed that would disturb or abridge the religious rights and privileges of all our people; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

776. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Pomery Civic Club, relative to the flood-control dam in the Ohio Basin; to the Committee on Flood Control.

777. Also, petition of Charlotte Morris, opposing any change in the laws of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, MARCH 5, 1937

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O give thanks unto the Lord and call upon His holy name; He has been always mindful of His covenant and promise. Heavenly Father, accept our thanksgiving and praise for the privilege of another day. Give us understanding minds and hearts. Teach us to know that life is a great opportunity and that the world is full of open doors. Allow not our contact with it to cloud the vision and the ideals of the soul. Thou eternal source of life and light, giver of unspeakable gifts, from whose abundance come the blessings of man, may we abound in every good work. Steady our hearts; keep us in the ways of patience, obedience, and service; guide us with Thine eye and keep us this day without sin. In the name of our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the reading of the Journal, disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk, and disposition of the call of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the address of the gentleman from North Carolina on next Monday, if there be time, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] may have 1 hour in which to address the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL, 1938

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5232) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5232, the naval appropriation bill, 1938, with Mr. BLAND in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY].

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, as a layman and neophyte in matters pertaining to the Navy and the established naval policies, I approach the consideration of the matter in hand, as a member of this committee which has ultimately brought it to your attention, in a state of mind which is perhaps best described by an illustration.

When first assigned to membership on the Committee on Military Affairs, a matter having been submitted for consideration which troubled me very considerably and being undecided as to who was right and as to what to do, I turned for advice to certain friends of mine, competent by reason of their experience, to give me the information I sought. Answering my inquiries, one of them said to me: "If you were suddenly confronted as a layman with the responsibility of building a suspension bridge across the whirlpool rapids below Niagara Falls, you will admit that you would have to take advice from somebody. Would you take counsel and get all the information you could from the very highest grade and best structural engineers and bridge builders in the country, men who had demonstrated their ability, had experience covering years, and were ready to submit a definite plan; or would you take the suggestions and be governed in arriving at your own judgment as to how to proceed and what to do by the advice to be had from the fireman on board the boat Maid of the Mist, concerning whose intentions there could be no question but whose activities and experience were limited and had been circumscribed?" Of course there could be but one answer.

Without taking too much of your time and addressing myself especially to those who, like myself, know too little about it, may I say that this measure was sent down to us by the President and that the Budget as it originally came before the committee estimated the necessary expenditures for the fiscal year to be $562,425,709.

After protracted and exhausting, as well as exhaustive, hearings, at which we had present and on the stand everybody from whom we thought any information could be obtained, by reason of which we would be authorized to reduce the Budget estimate—after, I say, a month and a half of taking testimony and going over the Budget item by item—we cut out $36,000,000 in round numbers. That is to say, after those in authority and who were informed had satisfied the Bureau of the Budget that the minimum of their needs was estimated at $562,475,709, and in face of the fact that the former Congresses and administrations had established the policy responsible for the Budget estimate, it was up to us to determine what was and is the smallest sum that could be taken out of the pockets of the taxpayers and, at the same time, provide for a businesslike and economical operation of the Naval Establishment, and we cut the estimate $36,000,000.

In our bill there is a $10,000,000 item heretofore appropriated which we had to carry along and reappropriate, so that actually the new money carried in this bill is $516,555,428.

I say to you, gentlemen, that, whether we like it or not, is not the question. That, in our judgment, is the minimum amount necessary in order to pay the bills which the Naval Establishment, by virtue of existing laws and established policies, is authorized and empowered by legislation of Congress to contract.

The Committee on Appropriations may say with the soldier, in the words of Tennyson:

> Theirs not to make reply,
> Theirs not to reason why,
> Theirs but to do and die.

If Congress will continue to appropriate money and to authorize the expenditure of the same and to determine policies involving the expenditure of money, the responsibility rests upon this committee for bringing in and submitting to you its estimate of the lowest possible amount under and with which the directed expenditure can be accomplished.

You might as well understand that there is no prospect of declining naval costs; on the contrary, from what I have already learned, it seems to me, without any reference to what any other country in the world is trying to do, that there is bound to be an appreciable and immediate and continuing upward trend. Replacement, construction, modernization programs, aviation expansion, increased maintenance and operating costs are bound, gentlemen, to swell the aggregate of future annual appropriations for the Naval Establishment to sums much larger. You might as well face the fact.

It stands to reason that just as long as you approve formulated programs, thereby establishing and authorizing policies which involve and necessitate the expenditure of money, just so long your Committee on Appropriations having to do with the Naval Establishment will have to present to you a bill covering the expenditure of increasingly larger sums of money annually. Gentlemen, the time to stop is before you begin.

The American people should understand what confronts them. With the fact that the treaty navies have expired confronting us, before we undertake to employ our vast resources, and to impose further tax burdens upon the public, in an attempt to lead the mad race involved in building naval armament to assure our supremacy on the seas, the United States should take the lead in insisting that other nations meet with us to consider all questions involved—the possibility of renewing the treaties—to the end that reduction in expenditures may be made, and our naval burdens as well as those of the other countries be lightened.

It is true that there are those who contend that the Washington Limitation of Armament Conference, and that the resulting limitation of the naval armaments of 1921–22 were both a farce; but it is equally true that the consensus of opinion in this country is to the effect that the treaty of Washington for the limitation of armaments, negotiated in 1921–22, was one of the greatest steps in the direction of peace and understanding that was ever taken in this war-worn world.

Everybody knows that naval armament races create suspicion, distrust, hatred, and finally end in war to determine the mooted question as to which nation rules the waves.

The world knows that we intend to protect ourselves, and to maintain a reasonable and an adequate naval strength for our own defense. Moreover, the world knows we are competent to take care of ourselves. We are therefore in a position not to challenge the powers to an armament race but to challenge the powers to meet us around a table and to determine it to be the policy of the world powers not to enter into any armament race.

The great powers of the world which are strong upon the sea—and I am advised that Great Britain and Japan have already intimated a willingness so to do—should be invited by us to sit down around a common table and to work out some plan that will put a stop to all this talk of a naval armament race; reduce the naval budgets of all the countries involved; relieve the individual taxpayer to that extent, and which will, even in these terrible and threatening days, be one step toward world peace.

I commend to you the careful reading of the report of your committee so ably drawn and so forcefully and intelligently presented to you by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. UMSTEAD], the chairman of the subcommittee.

There may be items in the bill which for some reason or other known to some Member might be stricken from it without jeopardy to the national defense, but if there be such an item your committee has overlooked it. We undertook to eliminate from this bill every single cent that we could not be convinced it was absolutely and necessarily vital for the reasonable and adequate preparedness of this country to spend; and I stand on that statement. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLUMLEY. I yield.

Mr. RICH. First, I want to congratulate the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee on keeping the appropriation below that which the Navy Department requested, if they deemed it too great from the Department. Each department of Government is requesting additional funds for their operation this year over and above the amount they were allotted last year. When will it ever stop? How can the Committee on Appropriations or how can Congress keep down the requests by these departments in order that we may be able to keep them within reasonable bounds of expenditures with receipts to the Federal Treasury? What is the observation of the gentleman about keeping down these expenditures of Government?

Mr. PLUMLEY. I will say to the gentleman, so far as the subcommittee on appropriations for the Navy Department is concerned, we gave them very definitely to understand that we proposed to cut unless they could satisfy us that their requests were justified.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Vermont has expired.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, after the very splendid presentation yesterday by the chairman of this Subcommittee on Appropriations, little need be said today. I feel that the response on the part of the Members indicated yesterday the confidence which they have in the recommendations made by the chairman of the subcommittee. I believe that confidence is going to be manifested today in the general support of this appropriation bill.

I would be remiss were I to fail to acknowledge to him the appreciation of the members of the committee for the courtesy that he rendered to the members of the committee at all times. I feel the House owes the chairman of this subcommittee a vote of thanks for the way in which he conducted the hearings and for the report which he brought to you yesterday.

Time will not permit lengthy observations on any particular parts of the bill. It probably is not necessary. We of the committee feel that this bill needs no defense. We feel that the bill stands on its merits.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN] yesterday took occasion to question the need of a navy and urged that the present naval program was an unnecessary expense. I believe due reflection and careful analysis by the membership will convince it that the program which is presently being pursued is a program of wisdom, and if the self-respect which we have heretofore commanded is to be continued, then a navy such as we contemplate is an absolute necessity.

I want to direct the attention of the membership for just a moment or two to that which might be said to be collateral to the actual appropriation bill, but which nevertheless has a bearing upon it.

It is the question of the selection board, the forced elimination of officers as a result of the action of the selection board. Growing out of the observations that were made here last year, the Naval Establishment saw fit to have the general board give a report on the question of selection boards. A rather detailed examination appears in the hearings. I believe a reading by the Members will indicate that the Naval Establishment acknowledges that the selection board's program is not completely satisfactory. They realize that we are assuming a financial obligation growing greater year by year as a result of the forced retirement of officers who they acknowledge are competent. Illustrations appearing in the hearings will indicate that there might be five officers whose fitness reports in every instance indicate a satisfactory service, but that of those five officers one would be selected for promotion while four would be involuntarily retired from the service. Such a program must be changed. Either the number of midshipmen at Annapolis must be reduced or some other means must be found by which we can save the cost of these involuntary retirements, by which also the Naval Establishment will be permitted to continue in service men who have demonstrated their ability.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. If I have time later, I shall be pleased to yield. I will try to be courteous.

During the course of the hearings the suggestion was made as to the advisability of having a secret poll of the naval officers to record their approval or disapproval of this selection-board program. Numerous complaints have come to me, and probably other Members have received complaint of this involuntary retirement from service. Expressing purely a personal opinion, and certainly not binding the committee, I can see no reason why those charged with the administration of naval affairs should object to having a secret poll taken of the officers of the Navy to record their approval or disapproval of this selection-board program.

Personally, I think there is a certain degree of demoralization, so far as morale goes, growing out of the present operation. I believe that the morale of the men would be materially improved were they to feel that some time in the future they would not face the possibility, to some extent looked upon by some of them as ignominy, of being forced to retire from the service with which they have been identified for years and to which they have given the best years of their lives. Punishment might be in order. Some of us who are enthusiastic in this matter might suggest that the Appropriations Committee refuse to appropriate for the retirement of men who are involuntarily detached from service. To penalize those men would not be fair; but I do direct the attention of the Naval Affairs Committee, and I plead particularly with the very able chairman of that committee that corrective measures should be introduced, considered by the establishment and by his committee so that in the Congress of next year we might have something which will do away with the complaints that presently prevail, and avoid the tremenduously increasing cost of the retirement of officers who have demonstrated their worth and ability.

Another observation that comes to me as we think in general terms of this program of the Navy is the policy that has been pursued in one instance by the Naval Establishment in the procurement of a piece of equipment which it has admitted was purchased for no reason other than to try to drive down the price of a private contractor. Against the opinion of some of us, and after we had registered definitely our objection, the piece of equipment was purchased last year involving the investment of $100,000. It was certainly represented—if not purposely at least the impression was left—that that piece of equipment was to be used in doing certain work. Some of us were surprised to learn this year that there was no intention of using that piece of equipment for the doing of any work, but that it was purchased with but one object in mind, that object being to try to drive down a private contractor's estimate for the doing of certain public work. I question the advisability of such a policy. Let there be bidding, let there be competition; but to use public funds and to impress upon the taxpayer group that we are making an investment in a piece of equipment for the ostensible purpose of doing public work and then in the following year bringing in an admission that the equipment was purchased not for that purpose but to drive down a fair price by a private contractor, to my mind, is not in accord with the established policy and does not inure to the benefit of the Naval Establishment.

As we think about battleships and cruisers, as we think about these combatant units of the fleet, let us not be unmindful of the personnel.

I want to take this opportunity to make just a very humble plea for the enlisted personnel and some of the officer personnel who presently are assigned in the Canal Zone. I say to the membership here today that if they had the opportunity of examining into, of personally investigating conditions in the Canal Zone faced by our enlisted personnel, they would feel that an investment for proper accommodations, barracks, housing, and so forth, is a crying need today. Many of the enlisted men are forced to accept accommodations in most undesirable sections of the cities at both ends of the Canal that were never intended as proper accommodations for our men of the fleet. The Naval Establishment should put on its priority list a constructive program that would provide for the enlisted personnel particularly, and for the officer personnel to a lesser degree, assigned to the Canal Zone. They should furnish accommodations in the Canal Zone by which those men and their families might feel that a Government to which they are rendering service is sufficiently appreciative to provide accommodations for them in keeping with their station in life. This should be done without delay.

In the absence of my distinguished colleague from Nevada, I should like to say a word on the subject of the acquisition of strategic war materials. I hope that the House will demonstrate its confidence in the program that we have provided looking toward the acquisition of these strategic war materials. We had it last year in conference. We unfortunately lost it. I hope there will be a loyalty and a unanimity of support back of the House demanding that the strategic war-material acquisition clause be continued in the bill by the conferees after their appointment.

Then I should like to make an observation about conditions at the South Charleston plant. Many of you will remember the white-elephant story we heard here last year. The rather interesting thing that has developed since last year is a complete "about face" by the Naval Establishment in connection with this Charleston plant. We had been led to believe that the Naval Establishment would look with approval upon the sale or disposition of that plant. Inactive for many years, it was looked upon as a continuing liability. It entailed the expenditure of funds year by year and with attendant deterioration and depreciation of plant and equipment. We spent thousands and thousands of dollars since the plant has been placed in its inactive state, and we had supposed that we had come to the point where we would dispose of the plant.

The Navy comes along now with the proposal that we should not dispose of the plant. We now find the situation developing that, in addition to the funds provided in the appropriation bill for the maintenance of this white elephant, this inactive plant—this plant that has not turned a wheel for years—the Naval Establishment has procured from the W. P. A. large sums of money, approximately a hundred thousand dollars for work in and about that inactive plant. If the Naval Establishment proceeds on a program of wastefulness and an utter disregard of public funds, it is inviting the objection of those who take exception to a Navy second to none in the world.

I believe the Naval Establishment is charged with the responsibility of discharging as a trustee the trust that has been committed to it by the Congress and by the people, and to simply go to this emergency agency and procure from that emergency agency vast sums of money to put into this plant that is dead, and for which some of us had hoped to sing a requiem, spending thousands and thousands of dollars for useless purposes, is not warranted and is not in any way justified.

We have had the suggestion made that the steel industry's actions brings about the possible reopening of this plant. May I suggest to the committee what such a program would entail? The machinery and equipment there is antiquated. It was never installed for the purpose of turning out steel such as the present naval construction program requires.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, this plant has practically been dismantled. The suggestion made would require the employment of highly trained technicians, who would command in private life large compensation from private employers. It would likely take 3 years to put it into shape so that it might be in a state of production. In the meantime I ask the question: Are we to entirely stop our naval program in order to permit this plant at Charleston or any other plant to get under way in order to provide the steel necessary for our construction program?

Mr. TERRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TERRY. I was interested in the statement the gentleman made a while ago in reference to the officer personnel of the Navy. The gentleman has given the matter a great deal of study. I should like to know his opinion as to the advisability of reducing the number of midshipmen. Is it the opinion of the gentleman that we have too large an officer personnel; and if so, should that continue as we go along toward building the Navy up to treaty strength?

Mr. DITTER. I believe that the hearings definitely indicate that if we are to have a treaty Navy it will require an officer personnel such as is provided for in this bill and such as we anticipate or contemplate during the next few years. However, I am rather persuaded that the big bulge created as the result of the number of midshipmen presently being admitted to the academy must be reduced in some way so that when it comes to the point of funneling out and elimination, as presently prevails, there will not be the forced retirement of this large number of very, very capable men.

I confess, sir, my own limitations. I rather challenge the very splendid, intelligent, and exhaustive examination of the Naval Establishment to bring about a construction program. As I stated, I confess my own limitations so far as making definite suggestions are concerned.

We are talking today about aviation. Still I have records which indicate that it is contemplated that six officers having an experience ranging from 3 to 22 years will be forced to retire. We are trying to train a lot of younger officers for aviation duty, and at the same time we cast into discard this splendid group of men which has been trained and which as a result of years of experience brings contributions to the aviation unit.

Mr. TERRY. Is it the opinion of the gentleman that under present conditions we have too large a number of midshipmen in the academy?

Mr. DITTER. I feel that the number there probably can be carried, but I believe that looking into the next 2 or 3 years there will certainly be a need for cutting down that midshipmen group.

Mr. TERRY. There was requested in this appropriation the sum of $750,000 to enlarge Bancroft Hall. The committee, it seems to me, has wisely cut that out. If there is no necessity for these additional men, it seems to me we should reduce the personnel in the academy.

Mr. DITTER. I think the observation of the gentleman is well taken.

I submit this further observation: While the interest of Members in activities in their districts is natural and commendable, we venture the observation that a naval program cannot be circumscribed by the limitations of local interests and that it is hardly the proper vehicle for the personal aggrandizement of any Member. Publicity efforts seeking to impress upon a constituency the granting of funds related to national defense needs as a result of a Member's position stigmatizes a defense program with the unsavory flavor of local politics and inevitably subjects a Member to the possible charge of selfish purposes at the expense of the national needs. The first is not desirable, the second is regrettable.

A word is in order here on the subject of armaments and peace.

Men and women throughout the world yearn for peace. Were the people of many nations given the right to express themselves, widespread objection would be heard to the frenzied efforts of dictators to maintain their rule and autocratic sway by the development of gigantic war machines. Demand for cannon fodder goes to the point of penalizing childless marriages. Crushing tax burdens are saddled upon already impoverished people to perpetuate the rights of dictators.

No one dare charge us with such motives. Our national-defense program is based solely on that which is necessary for defense needs according to the opinion of those charged with the responsibility of forming our national policies. Under no circumstance do we approve a course which could be construed as a participation by this Nation in an armaments race. Such a course cannot command the support of a nation which in times past has exerted every influence and demonstrated every purpose to curtail the construction of armaments. The spirit which prompted this Nation to destroy millions of dollars' worth of armament as an evidence of its sincerity of purpose to limit the naval construction of the nations of the world still prevails. We reluctantly admit failure in our efforts to have limitation agreements entered into by those nations which have heretofore been parties to such covenants. For this failure we are in no way responsible.

We still entertain the hope that agreements may take the place of a competitive arms race. This cannot be done unless a like disposition is evidenced by other nations. We cannot come to an agreement with ourselves. We are receptive today, as we have been in the past, to any overtures which may be made looking toward agreements with other nations which will result in a decrease of armaments.

In the absence of any agreement or the presence of any evidence of any disposition on the part of other nations to even approach negotiations, no other recourse is left for us but to provide adequately for the national defense. This means a navy such as we provided for in the present bill.

Since the Revolutionary War, which established our independence, this Nation has fought five wars with foreign nations. The War with France was fought by the Navy in the West Indies. The War with Mexico was fought in Mexico and the Republic of Texas. The War with Spain was fought in Cuba and the Philippines. The World War, so far as we were concerned, was fought in Europe.

In the War of 1812, and in this foreign war only, was our territory invaded. Such invasion was made possible by the overwhelming strength of the British fleet. With regard to the possibilities of invasion it is well to recall the so-called opium wars conducted by Great Britain against China in the 1840's. A handful of British subjects in ships 5,000 miles from home were able to impose their will and force concessions from a Chinese Government whose subjects were from three to four times the present population of the United States. Again, in 1900, in the so-called Boxer Rebellion, some 10,000 allied troops landed and marched a hundred miles to the capital of China, which they seized, and forced their will again upon the Chinese Government. It may be said that times have changed and that present rapid means of communication and transportation make a repetition of such campaigns impossible. On the contrary, it is believed that the present rapid means of transportation make more vulnerable a weak, rich, flabby nation. Looking again to China, we see the activities of Japan in that country.

The only sure defense against aggression and ultimately against invasion is the means of defense within the Nation itself.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD].

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I have requested this time for the purpose of making an announcement on a matter of considerable public interest pending before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and on which I have received a great many inquiries.

On Tuesday, March 9, the committee will start hearings on the Bonneville Dam and power proposition. A number of people have expressed an interest in that matter. This project provides for a means of transmission and sale of surplus power produced by the Bonneville Dam. As I stated, hearings will start on Tuesday, March 9.

On Wednesday, March 17, hearings will be commenced on the question of the pollution of the navigable waters of the United States. That is a matter of general public interest, and many people from all sections of the country have been making inquiries concerning it. [Applause.]

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, with all the billions which have been spent for relief purposes and the further appropriation of $780,000,000 in the recent deficiency bill to continue relief until July 1, 1937, there remains an acute situation in need of immediate attention in the drought counties in the great dairy section of the Northwest. The relief funds which pour out so liberally in other parts of the country are not being expended in such amounts and in such manner as to meet the problem which has confronted the dairy farmers who have no feed with which to maintain the dairy herds which they have been years in building up. Unless something is done for their relief at once, the plight of all such farmers will daily become more serious.

For weeks representatives from the dairy districts of Wisconsin and other Northwestern States have sought to obtain action upon the part of the Works Progress Administration and the Resettlement Administration to meet the conditions. From the Works Progress Administration we obtain the statement that the W. P. A. is an urban set-up, and is not intended to cover farm relief in the form requested; that farm problems have been turned over to the Resettlement Administration.

From the Resettlement Administration we have the explanation that feed loans are being made to farmers without other credit facilities, upon such security as the farmer may have, but that the funds available are not sufficient to meet the demands.

Thus after many weeks of endeavor, thousands of dairy farmers have exhausted their supply of feed for their stock and are forced to sell their herds, in many instances their only source of income.

There are 29 counties in Wisconsin which suffered of the disastrous drought of 1936, and about the same area was covered by the drought of 1934. There are 11 such counties in the Ninth District which I represent. The conditions in those 11 counties are about the same as in the other 18 Wisconsin counties, and not different from the several hundred counties in Iowa, Minnesota, North and South Dakota. The number of farmers in these counties can only be estimated, but probably is 200,000 or more.

In the Ninth District of 11 counties there are about 628,000 head of cattle, mostly dairy stock. In the 29 counties the total number of cattle is in excess of 1,500,000, a greater number than there are in the State of Pennsylvania, or in either Michigan, Ohio, or Indiana. About 5 percent of all the dairy cows in the United States are in the 29 counties in the drought afflicted section of Wisconsin.

For 6 years those counties have suffered partial or complete crop failure because of drought. In 1934 and 1936 the failure was practically complete as to the grain crops upon which the dairy farmers depend for the winter supply for their herds. Furthermore, the continued drought conditions have killed out hundreds of thousands of acres of alfalfa and clover crops and ruined pasture lands of an equal area.

This era of drought conditions is something which had never before come to Wisconsin.

In consequence of the drought of 1936, farmers were obliged to commence drawing on their feed supplies ordinarily held for winter consumption in August and September. Before winter came, many of them were purchasing feed stuffs from other sections and other States. Many farmers reduced their herds to their foundation stock, selling at such prices as they could obtain for cattle in no condition to bring more than a small portion of their real value. Many cows worth from $75 to $125 in the spring of 1936 were sold at from $25 to $40. Reports now indicate that thousands of farmers are being obliged to sacrifice their dairy stock at similar low prices. Herds that had been years in building are being sold for lack of feed.

Those of us from dairy districts who have sought to obtain Federal aid to relieve these distressing conditions have been and still are being supplied with detailed as well as general information as to the steadily growing seriousness of the situation. I have received hundreds of letters from farmers in my district who are losing their all. Many of them will lose their farms as well as their stock. Some of them will be forced from their homes by foreclosure and compelled to enter the ranks of the unemployed.

The county boards of our district and many farm organizations have backed up the demands of relief administrators, county agents, and individual farmers for Federal action. Resolutions describing the situation arrive daily. Those interested—and everybody in the dairy counties is interested—cannot understand why, with hundreds of millions going out to city people, to flood sufferers, and even to the slum dwellers of far-away Honolulu for housing relief, our Government continues to deny our own farmers a share of its attention.

The Wisconsin Legislature has repeatedly called upon the Federal agencies to make the loans which thousands of farmers must have to save their stock from sacrifice sales.

In August, the Works Progress Administration set up projects in the drought counties to enable farmers to earn money with which to purchase feed for their cattle. Assurances were given that this form of relief would be continued and that farmers would be able to earn enough to maintain their families and their herds. In November an order was issued discontinuing W. P. A. participation in the program on December 15. The Resettlement Administration was then authorized to provide grants to needy farmers. It has aided so far as its funds would permit, but it has not sufficient appropriations to more than partly meet conditions.

When the relief deficiency bill came before Congress, the Wisconsin Representatives and others from the dairy country were among those who urged an increase of Resettlement Administration funds to $400,000,000 for the very purpose of aiding the thousands of farmers in dire need of assistance. Our endeavors proved futile.

Among the communications I have received setting forth the conditions in Wisconsin is one from Walter Ebling, of the Wisconsin Department of Markets, who has made an extensive study of them. In brief, the following is a summary of his statement:

Wisconsin feed supply, including all counties, from 1936 crops, 73 percent of 5-year average. In drought counties only 57 percent of grain production of 1935. At present prices for milk and feedstuffs, 100 pounds of milk buys only 87 pounds of feed, or only 58 percent of what the same amount of milk would buy in 1935. At present prices, in terms of grain, eggs have a buying power only 51 percent of 5-year average. Drought of 1936 destroyed new seeding for hay and pasture in drought counties.

Regarding needed relief, he states:

Estimate 45,000 farmers in Wisconsin without cash or credit resources urgently needed for livestock feed to carry dairy herds through remainder of indoor feeding season, with average need of $200 each, or $9,000,000 in all. There are 15,000 farm-labor families, and small-acreage farmers who need subsistence grants for 5 months. More than 40,000 farmers will need seed, averaging $75 per farm. There are 30,300 farmers on rolls obtaining subsistence grants for living necessities. Unless rapidly moving program is initiated which will enable farmers to get feeds, heavy liquidation of livestock must occur, which will seriously cripple State's great dairy industry, our largest source of farm income.

Another statement covers the situation in Dunn County, one of the best dairy counties in the State, which has 65,500 dairy cattle, and which formerly had an income of about $7,500,000 annually from dairy products. It was compiled by Frank W. Kelly and Mr. W. A. Goodwin, members of the Dunn County Drought Committee. The survey was made at the close of the W. P. A. program for drought farmers in December 1936. The survey covered 1,814 farms owned by applicants for drought relief. These farms are located in 22 townships:

Eighty-seven percent of the farms of which the titles were held by the farmers were mortgaged in an average amount of $3,409, or a total of $3,792,788 on 1,134 farms. Thirty-two percent of the farms included in the survey are occupied by renters. The average chattel debt was $594 and the unsecured debt amounted to $342. The total debt on this group was $4,790,500.

Gross income per farm was $732, computed on 12 months, which included benefit of the better 1935 crop year. Deducting taxes, interest, insurance, and other costs, the average net income was not over $400. Computing farm and household workers of farm families, the average wage was less than 30 cents per day per person.

The grain supply on two-thirds the farms was exhausted in December, compelling farmers either to buy feeds or sell their stock. The farmers prefer a work program to obtain funds for subsistence of their herds, and would willingly work on local projects for that purpose.

An individual case showing the sad situation all too common in these drought counties is that of P. J. Stevens, of Cylon, Wis., which also has been mentioned on this floor by Congressman GEHRMANN. Mr. Stevens spent 60 years developing a fine farm in St. Croix County. Honest, frugal, and thrifty, a man of energy and industry, he brought 200 acres of rich soil under cultivation, erected a substantial farm home, barns, and other outbuildings. He built up a good dairy herd. Then came the years of adversity, with low prices for farm products, and then the 6 years of drought. On February 26 his farm was sold under foreclosure proceedings brought by the Federal Land Bank of St. Paul. The amount of the mortgage was less than the replacement value of the buildings on the farm. Mr. Stevens at 78, and after a lifetime of toil and saving, now is turned adrift, without home or a means of livelihood. There are many such instances. Even now there are more than 1,200 farm foreclosure cases pending in the 11 counties of the Ninth District. Many of them have been brought by the Federal land bank. There will be many more good farmers like Mr. Stevens losing out. Some will become tenant farmers on farms bought in by land banks, insurance and trust companies at foreclosure sales. At such sales farms are bought at the amount of the mortgage lien and not at the appraised value upon which the loans are made.

The urgency of the matter of providing feed loans on a basis on which the farmers can meet them by employment on local projects of the W. P. A. being the most feasible, the debt situation may well be considered. Figures are available for only 7 of the 11 counties of the Ninth District. Briefly summarized, they are:

Barron County, one of the richest dairy counties, which formerly had an income exceeding $9,000,000 annually from dairy products and now receiving about half that amount, has 5,639 farms. In 3 years 221 farms have been sold under foreclosure proceedings, with an acreage of 20,000 acres. Of that number, 135 farms were bid in by land banks, insurance and trust companies, practically all of which are now operated by tenants. There are 1,500 more farms mortgaged to land banks alone, with a total indebtedness exceeding $5,000,000, of which 35 percent are delinquent. Barron County, with about 80,000 dairy cattle, needs $500,000 immediately to carry its herds through the remainder of the season.

Chippewa County, with 4,053 farms and 72,000 dairy cattle, has 329 farms mortgaged to the Federal land bank alone. Feed and seed loans are in excess of $174,000. The Farm Credit Administration has approximately 1,000 unpaid loans from 850 borrowers. With feeds exhausted, more than 2,000 farmers are in urgent need of loans for feed and many of them of loans for seed.

Clark County, one of the largest dairy counties, with more than 200 cheese factories, has 5,348 farms with about 98,000 dairy cattle. The Federal land bank holds first liens on 1,250 farms, in the amount of $5,500,000, on which liens 320 are delinquent. There are 700 P. C. A. loans aggregating $200,000. Sixty percent of the farmers have borrowed money with which to buy feed, and fully as many were out of feed for their stock on March 1. The county agricultural committee states that $500,000 is needed for feed and seed.

Trempealeau County, with 3,000 farms and 62,000 dairy cattle, has 452 Federal land bank loans, in the amount of $2,260,000. At least 500 farmers were without feed for their stock on March 1 and $100,000 is needed at once for feed and seed.

Dunn County, previously mentioned, needs $480,000 for feed and seed loans. It has 3,500 farms. Other farm indebtedness than real-estate liens exceed $1,800,000. One-third the farmers had exhausted the feed supplies for their stock on March 1.

Pepin County has 1,017 farms on which there are 108 land-bank loans. On 402 farms the mortgage debt exceeds $680,000. About 40 percent of the farmers have been buying mill feeds, and more than that number have been buying since March 1. About half the farmers will have to buy seed grain.

Pierce County has 3,200 farms and 50,500 dairy cattle. The Federal land bank holds mortgages on 501 farms in the amount of $2,000,000 or more, and 117 are delinquent in their payments. There are 361 P. C. A. loans oustanding, amounting to $189,821. One-half the farmers are buying feed for their stock, and there are 500 farmers in need of feed for their stock who have no means for purchasing it.

What is true of these rich and at one time very prosperous dairy counties is true of the many others in the drought section of Wisconsin and also of Minnesota. The drought effects varied some in the different counties, but, in general, it was the same.

The situation, involving many thousands of farmers and along with them the businessmen of their small towns and cities, has become such that urgent action is necessary to prevent lasting damage to a basic industry. It also involves the future of hundreds of thousands of farm people who have been brought to their present plight through no fault of their own.

Our Government is expending billions for general welfare. Surely it has the means to aid those who are so sorely beset in that section of the country which produces 45 percent of the Nation's dairy products. Those distressed farmers are as much entitled to consideration as are any others. Action must be immediate, however, if further and greater distress is to be avoided.

To bring immediate relief I have presented a bill to appropriate $30,000,000 to the Works Progress Administration with which to make loans to farmers who must have feedstuffs to save their herds, the loans to be paid by labor on local projects to be set up by that administration. The Works Progress Administration has ample facilities to immediately launch the necessary programs. Congressman GEHRMANN is the author of another measure for the same purpose. It is not important to me which measure shall be taken up for consideration, but one or the other, or some other to be formulated by the committee, should be given immediate consideration. The facts warrant prompt action and that action should be had. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS

PAY, SUBSISTENCE, AND TRANSPORTATION OF NAVAL PERSONNEL

Pay of naval personnel: For pay and allowances prescribed by law of officers on sea duty and other duty, and officers on waiting orders, pay—$34,762,731, including not to exceed $1,695,100 for increased pay for making aerial flights, no part of which shall be available for increased pay for making aerial flights by any officer above the rank of captain, except not more than two officers of the rank of rear admiral, nor by nonflying officers or observers at a rate in excess of $1,440 per annum, which shall be the legal maximum rate as to such nonflying officers or observers; rental allowance, $7,275,000; subsistence allowance, $4,358,427; in all, $46,396,158; officers on the retired list, $9,000,000; for hire of quarters for officers serving with troops where there are no public quarters belonging to the Government, and where there are not sufficient quarters possessed by the United States to accommodate them, and hire of quarters for officers and enlisted men on sea duty at such times as they may be deprived of their quarters on board ship due to repairs or other conditions which may render them uninhabitable, $9,000; pay of enlisted men on the retired list, $7,600,000; interest on deposits by men, $3,000; pay of petty officers (not to exceed an average of 8,240 chief petty officers, of which number those with a permanent appointment as chief petty officer shall not exceed an average of 7,198), seamen, landsmen, and apprentice seamen, including men in the engineer's force and men detailed for duty with the Bureau of Fisheries, enlisted men, men in trade schools, pay of enlisted men of the Hospital Corps, extra pay for men for diving, and cash prizes (not to exceed $106,000) for men for excellence in gunnery, target practice, communication, and engineering competitions, $78,484,680, and, in addition, $10,000,000 appropriated in the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1935, for a "floating dry dock, type B, including mooring facilities and accessories", such sum being hereby reappropriated for the objects embraced by this clause and paragraph; outfits for all enlisted men and apprentice seamen of the Navy on first enlistment, civilian clothing not to exceed $15 per man to men given discharges for bad conduct or undesirability or inaptitude, reimbursement in kind of clothing to persons in the Navy for losses in cases of marine or aircraft disasters or in the operation of water- or air-borne craft, and the authorized issue of clothing and equipment to the members of the Nurse Corps, $1,775,210; pay of enlisted men undergoing sentence of court martial, $25,000, and as many machinists as the President may from time to time deem necessary to appoint; pay and allowances of the Nurse Corps, including assistant superintendents, directors, and assistant directors—pay, $558,880; rental allowance, $24,000; subsistence allowance, $23,871; pay, retired list, $243,249; in all, $850,000; rent of quarters for members of the Nurse Corps; pay and allowances of transferred and assigned men of the Fleet Naval Reserve, $15,290,000; reimbursement for losses of property as provided in the act approved October 6, 1917 (U. S. C., title 34, secs. 981, 982), as amended by the act of March 3, 1927 (U. S. C., title 34, sec. 983), $10,000; payment of 6 months' death gratuity, $150,000; in all, $159,593,048; and no part of such sum shall be available to pay active-duty pay and allowances to officers in excess of nine on the retired list, except retired officers temporarily ordered to active duty as members of retiring and selection boards as authorized by law: Provided, That, except for the public quarters occupied by the Chief of Office of Naval Operations, the Superintendent of the Naval Academy, and the Commandant of the Marine Corps and messes temporarily set up on shore for officers attached to seagoing vessels, to aviation units based on seagoing vessels including officers' messes at the fleet air bases, and to landing forces and expeditions, and in addition not to exceed 40 in number at such places as shall be designated by the Secretary of the Navy, no appropriation contained in this act shall be available for the pay, allowances, or other expenses of any enlisted man or civil employee performing service in the residence or quarters of an officer or officers on shore as a cook, waiter, or other work of a character performed by a household servant, but nothing herein shall be construed as preventing the voluntary employment in any such capacity of a retired enlisted man or a transferred member of the Fleet Naval Reserve without additional expense to the Government, nor the sale of meals to officers by general messes on shore as regulated by detailed instructions from the Navy Department;

Mr. SUTPHIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUTPHIN: Page 27, line 12, after the word "Department", insert the following: "Provided further, That except officers who are qualified as aviators, no appropriation contained in this act shall be available for giving flying training to officers above the rank or relative rank of lieutenant in the Navy."

Mr. SUTPHIN. Mr. Chairman, for some time past a dangerous and demoralizing policy has been followed by permitting high-ranking officers of the Navy to transfer to the Flying Corps. This not only materially increases the expense of the corps but is demoralizing to the junior officers—men who have given their lives to flying. This amendment will correct this vicious practice and to support this amendment is certainly a step toward economy in the administration of the Navy Department. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey called his amendment to my attention a few moments ago for the first time, and I am inclined to think there may be some merit in his proposal. However, it is my information that the gentleman has introduced a resolution or a bill, which is now pending before the Committee on Naval Affairs, seeking to accomplish what he is now proposing in this amendment.

No evidence, Mr. Chairman, is before the Committee about this question, or of how it might affect the operation of the Navy's aviation force, and, in my opinion, should not be acted upon in such a hasty manner without a hearing, without the production of any evidence to justify such a course——

Mr. SUTPHIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UMSTEAD. Not right now. I will yield to the gentleman in a moment.

And I respectfully submit to the Committee that this amendment ought not to be adopted.

I now yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. SUTPHIN. I may inform the gentleman from North Carolina that I believe the present practice is demoralizing and is upsetting the orderly procedure of the Flying Corps.

Mr. UMSTEAD. If that be true, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman ought to have given our committee at the proper time, when we were holding hearings upon this bill, the information which he states he has and upon which his conclusion is based.

Mr. SUTPHIN. I regret I did not have the opportunity.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I regret it also, and I hope this amendment will not prevail, and that the gentleman will come before our committee and give us the information next year.

Mr. SUTPHIN. I will be pleased to do that.

Mr. UMSTEAD. And if the gentleman can show us there is merit in his proposal, although we are not a legislative committee, his proposal or any other proposal looking toward increased efficiency in the Navy will have our sympathetic consideration.

I trust the amendment will be voted down.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

FUEL AND TRANSPORTATION, BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS

For coal and other fuel for submarine bases and steamers' and ships' use, including expenses of transportation, storage, and handling the same and the removal of fuel refuse from ships; maintenance and general operation of machinery of naval fuel depots and fuel plants; water for all purposes on board naval vessels, and ice for the cooling of water, including the expense of transportation and storage of both, $8,847,076: Provided, That fuel acquired other than by purchase shall not be issued without charging the applicable appropriation with the cost of such fuel at the rate current at the time of issue for fuel purchased: Provided further, That the President may direct the use, wholly or in part, of fuel on hand, however acquired, to be charged at the last issue rate for fuel acquired by purchase, when, in his judgment, prices quoted for supplying fuel are excessive: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available, any provision in this act to the contrary notwithstanding, for the purchase of any kind of fuel oil of foreign production for issue, delivery, or sale to ships at points either in the United States or its possessions where oil of the production of the United States or its possessions may be procurable, notwithstanding that oil of the production of the United States or its possessions may cost more than oil of foreign production, if such excess of cost, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy, which shall be conclusive, be not unreasonable.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: On page 33, line 16, strike out the sign and figures "$8,847,076" and insert the sign and figures "$8,173,528"; and on page 34, line 9, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the purchase of any fuel or fuel oil to be used in any fleet maneuver or fleet employment plan in waters more than 300 miles distant from the coast line of the American Continent."

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the amendment is clearly in order, as being within the Holman rule.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I am sure that every Member of this legislative body has at some time or other reflected upon the huge defensive expenses of the country and wondered in what respect we could make an affirmative gesture in the direction of peace. I have thought about it a long time. Obviously we have to have an adequate Army, and obviously we have to have an adequate Navy, but it seems to me that somewhere along the line we can impose certain restrictions that will be conducive to peace between this and other countries. It seems to me that one of the first desiderata in getting at the structure of peace is to eliminate friction between this and other countries. Let me repeat. We have to eliminate every possible friction and provocation between this country and other countries, and one of the ways in which it might very well be done is to limit the maneuvering of the American Fleet to American waters. The amendment is nothing more than a limitation that prevents the fleet employment plan or maneuvering of the fleet if it is distant further than 300 miles from the American coast line. I need only point out what the experience was a year or two ago when our fleet was maneuvering 7,000 miles from our coast line. The Tokyo papers were filled with headlines, and it is only yesterday that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] inserted in the RECORD a statement taken from a Tokyo paper indicating that those oriental people are constantly afraid that this country has militaristic designs upon Japan. We can give assurance to every country in the world when we keep our fleet within our own waters that we have peaceful intentions.

I have heard a great deal upon the floor of this House in the last 4 years to the effect that while we want a large Navy—and our defensive expenditures are now approximating the billion-dollar mark per year—we want to be at peace. Very well. Here is an opportunity for every member of this committee to register himself in behalf of a restriction on the tactical activities of the American Fleet that will keep it within American waters and eliminate those provocations with foreign countries. The only way I could get at it was to strike out enough money in this bill which covers 793,000-odd barrels of fuel oil for fleet purposes. In other words, that is the additional fuel oil they want this year for their so-called fleet employment program, and if that is stricken out and that proviso placed in the bill as a limitation upon the operations of the fleet, then they must remain within 300 miles of our coast line. It does not in any way impair our Panama Canal activities, because the American coast line includes both South and North America, and I think it is a very definite and affirmative action in behalf of peace and a declaration of our peaceful intentions so far as other governments are concerned.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. If I heard the gentleman's amendment correctly, under it we could not have maneuvers in Hawaiian waters.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Fleet maneuvers?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not know that we ought to have them there, if we are going to give the Asiatic countries alarm and leave a misimpression in the minds of other governments.

Mr. KNUTSON. But Hawaii is a part of the United States.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Suppose it is. Can the gentleman give any good reason why the fleet should be maneuvering away out there in the Pacific?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes; I could give several reasons.

Mr. WADSWORTH rose.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to ask a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. My question is along the line of that propounded by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. DIRKSEN. And I say in answer to that it occurred to me that we can still keep our fleet in American waters. We have no business with a fleet employment program that will take us away out in the Pacific thousands of miles and probably endanger our relationship with peoples in the Orient.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the gentleman is consistent with respect to his ideas as to Hawaii and the fleet having maneuvers in that neighborhood, then we should withdraw from any fortifications in the island of Oahu and withdraw our Army on the ground that it is a menace to Japan.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not believe that argument obtains.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think it does.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not know that fortifications are such a menace. There is something altogether different about a fleet maneuvering and how it may be interpreted by the people of foreign countries. The mere existence of fortifications means nothing. They are static as distinguished from the active disposal of warships in foreign waters.

May I emphasize in connection with this amendment that it in nowise impairs the naval activities of this country. It does not prevent our naval vessels from journeying into the remote corners of the world. It does not affect the personnel of the Navy. It does not interfere with the general operations, such as training and target practice. It does not prevent this Nation from making hydrographic studies anywhere on the oceans and of gathering necessary data. It places no restrictions upon the sending of our vessels anywhere upon any legitimate errand. It applies exclusively to fleet maneuvers and to the fleet employment program. It seeks to prevent the working out of tactical problems in the other man's back yard. No one will contend that peaceful motives are inspired by going over to oriental waters, thousands of miles from our coast line, and there brandishing our weapons as if to inspire fear. Fear may be a basis for momentary respect and good will, but it does not last very long.

Some day I fancy that in crystallizing a naval policy we shall adopt some restriction under which war games will be played in our own front yard, and that means in American waters.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order and rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the interest of the gentleman from Illinois in the subject of peaceful relations with other nations. I am also interested in having this country do anything it reasonably can to further peaceful relations with other nations, but I am surprised at the proposal involved in this amendment. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] would seek by this amendment not only to control the policy of the Navy of the United States, without a hearing, dealing with a technical subject, but he would also say to the Hawaiian Islands, a possession of the United States, where we are spending millions of dollars upon our Pacific base, "We will let you loose today." I cannot believe that the gentleman intended to do what his answer to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] indicated he intended to do by offering this amendment. It would prevent the Navy of the United States from holding any maneuvers in Hawaiian waters or anywhere between here and the Hawaiian Islands, and it would put the Congress in the position, without any evidence and without any hearing, of passing an amendment which would virtually control the technical operations of the defense of the United States.

I, therefore, ask the Members of this House to vote down the amendment.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Under the gentleman's amendment, if we were to have fleet maneuvers off the coast of Alaska it would be close enough to some Asiatic power to come within the gentleman's idea.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The fact of the matter is that they do not go up there——

Mr. UMSTEAD. I do not yield for a speech. I yielded for the gentleman to ask a question.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I was attempting to answer the gentleman from Minnesota.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Two amendments have now been offered to this Navy appropriation bill, and we have proceeded some 31 pages in the consideration of the bill. When both of these amendments were offered it was suggested by the chairman of the subcommittee that because those matters were never a matter of public hearing or because they had never been brought to the attention of the committee before this time, those amendments ought to be summarily defeated. If we are to legislate in this fashion it means that no idea or no thought or no plan of any Member of this House that has not been first thought of by that Member in time to be presented to the committee should be considered. If we are going to legislate that way nothing that we Members who are not members of the Committee on Appropriations may wish to add to a piece of legislation coming from that committee will be considered. If that is the case, then we might as well not spend any time discussing it but pass the bill in toto as it comes from the committee.

I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois. I think if this country is going to use its Navy for defensive purpose solely, we should not be frightening foreign nations by conducting maneuvers thousands and thousands of miles from our shores.

The chairman of the subcommittee said that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] would control the policy of the Navy. I think the Congress should control the policy of the Navy. It is the right of the Congress to control the policy of the Navy, and it is the right of any Member of Congress when these bills come up to offer any amendment that he wishes which will control the policy of the Navy and restrict it in any of its operations that we may see fit to do.

I hope that as we proceed to consider this bill amendments will not be defeated simply because they have not been brought before the Committee on Appropriations heretofore, and that the merit of any and all amendments offered here on the floor be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The suggestion made by the chairman of the subcommittee that these matters should be heard in committee before they are brought on the floor is deserving of the utmost consideration.

Mr. Chairman, why appoint committees? According to the theory of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY], carried to its ultimate conclusion, there is no necessity for this committee. If we are to accept the gentleman's conclusions, we should wait until the bill is brought on the floor of the House and take it up without any previous consideration by the committee at all. I am certain that no one would seriously take the position that we should legislate by impulse or caprice or without studying the questions involved; certainly not without due and deliberate consideration in both the House and the committee. If these amendments have merit, study by the committee will make them all the stronger and at the same time afford opportunity to best adapt them to the rest of the bill.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman, I recognize, is the outstanding parliamentarian of the House, but he indicates by his remarks that we should not attempt to bring up matters or offer amendments on subjects that have not been considered by the committee. If that be the rule, why is the bill read for amendment?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I have failed to make my position clear to the gentleman from Wisconsin. I did not say amendments should not be offered from the floor. That would mean acceptance of the bill as reported by the committee and without consideration in the House. My remarks were addressed to the stricture upon the chairman of the committee and criticism of his suggestion that amendments of such importance be submitted to the committee and opportunity given for their study during the hearings on the bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I understand that the chairman of the subcommittee, in addition to giving that wise advice, also opposed the amendment itself because he said he was astounded at it.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. And I agree with him that to so shackle our Navy as to make it impossible, whatever the emergency might be, to maneuver the fleet outside of territorial waters might be attended with grave consequences.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy Yard, Pearl Harbor, Hawaii: Improvement of harbor and channel, $1,000,000; mooring facilities and accessories, $275,000; improvement of water supply, Aiea, $140,000;

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have been detained on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee during the discussion of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention particularly to facilities for drydocking capital ships on the Pacific coast. On the Atlantic coast we have five drydocks for capital ships; if I recall correctly, one at Boston, one at New York, one at Philadelphia, one at Hampton Roads, and one at the eastern entrance of the Panama Canal; but when a capital ship passes through the Panama Canal it must travel 3,000 miles to San Pedro where the Pacific Fleet is based most of the time, and then about 1,100 or 1,200 miles farther to the only graving dock on the Pacific coast which has the facilities requisite to take care of a capital ship.

The Navy Department, in order to remedy that situation, has in the past recommended the building of a floating drydock. This was authorized and an appropriation of $10,000,000 was made. It was found, however, that the lowest bid was more than $16,000,000. The point is, it seems to me, that in order to give the Pacific coast the proper facilities there should be other graving docks on the Pacific coast to take care of capital ships. There should be one on the southern California coast 1,100 or 1,200 miles this side of Bremerton, Wash. For the same money that is being considered for the building of a floating drydock we could build a permanent graving dock in southern California and one at Pearl Harbor, too; it could be done for probably less money than would be required for the building of one floating drydock. I believe the hearings show that the last graving dock for capital ships was built at Philadelphia at an expense of about $6,000,000.

I wish some Member would tell me the reason for building a floating drydock at a cost of $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 when we could build two or three permanent graving docks for the same money. If we built these graving docks in southern California and at the Hawaiian Islands, the facilities would be so located as to be of great benefit. For instance, Los Angeles Harbor is 2,200 miles from Pearl Harbor, and it is approximately the same distance from San Francisco to Pearl Harbor; but there is a long stretch for any ship to travel from the Panama Canal to Bremerton, Wash.—about 4,300 miles—in order to reach the facilities necessary for the repair of these capital battleships. So I call the attention not only of the committee but of all the Members to my belief that it would be more economical and more efficient to build two permanent graving docks than to expend all the money on one floating drydock.

By unanimous consent, the pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval War College, Newport, R. I.: Addition to library building and accessories, $155,000.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN (after counting). One hundred and five Members are present, a quorum.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF AERONAUTICS

AVIATION, NAVY

For aviation, as follows: For navigational, photographic, aerological, radio, and miscellaneous equipment, including repairs thereto, for use with aircraft built or building on June 30, 1937, $750,000; for maintenance, repair, and operation of aircraft factory, air stations, fleet air bases, fleet and all other aviation activities, accident prevention, testing laboratories, for overhauling of planes, and for the purchase for aviation purposes only of special clothing, wearing apparel, and special equipment, $18,064,000, including $250,000 for the equipment of vessels with catapults and including not to exceed $50,000 for the procurement of helium, which sum of $50,000 shall be transferred to and made available to the Bureau of Mines on July 1, 1937, in addition to which sum the Bureau of Mines may use for helium-plant operation in the fiscal year 1938 the unexpended balance of funds transferred to it for such operation in the fiscal year 1937, and the Bureau may lease, after competition, surplus metal cylinders acquired for use as helium containers; for continuing experiments and development work on all types of aircraft, including the payment of part-time or intermittent employment in the District of Columbia or elsewhere of such scientists and technicists as may be contracted for by the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, at a rate of pay not exceeding $20 per diem for any person so employed, $3,500,000; for new construction and procurement of aircraft and equipment, spare parts and accessories, $27,186,000, of which amount not to exceed $13,000,000 shall be available for the payment of obligations incurred under the contract authorization carried in the Navy Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1937; in all, $49,500,000; and the money herein specifically appropriated for "aviation" shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with existing law and shall constitute one fund: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $1,582,340: Provided further, That in addition to the amount herein appropriated, the Secretary of the Navy may, prior to July 1, 1938, enter into contracts for the production and purchase of new airplanes and their equipment, spare parts and accessories, to an amount not in excess of $15,000,000: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed, upon the request of the Secretary of the Navy, to transfer not to exceed in the aggregate $50,000 from this appropriation to the appropriations "Pay, subsistence, and transportation, Navy", and "Pay, Marine Corps", to cover authorized traveling expenses of officers and enlisted men in connection with flying new airplanes from contractor's works to assigned station or ship, including travel to contractor's works and return of personnel to stations of duty, and the amount so transferred shall be in addition to any limitations contained in the appropriations "Pay, subsistence, and transportation, Navy", and "Pay, Marine Corps": Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for maintenance of more than six heavier-than-air stations on the coast of the continental United States: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the construction of a factory for the manufacture of airplanes, or for the construction or manufacture in a Government-owned factory or plant of airplane engines, other than experimental engines, or airplanes, other than airplanes for primary training purposes, except airplane engines and airplanes building or which had been formally ordered on or prior to March 2, 1937: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, determine, and pay out of this appropriation the amounts due on claims for damages which have occurred or may occur to private property growing out of the operations of naval aircraft where such claim does not exceed the sum of $500.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEAVY: Page 43, line 11, after the words "United States", strike out all down to and including the figures "1937", on line 18.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in offering this amendment is to increase the efficiency of aviation naval service, and in the interests of economy.

It will be seen, particularly on page 42 of the bill, that a provision of $15,000,000 is made for the purpose of allowing the Navy Department to enter into contracts for the production and the purchase of new airplanes and their equipment, spare parts, and accessories. The amendment I propose is to strike out the proviso on page 43 of the bill, wherein it is stated that the Government may not expend any part of this appropriation in any one of its own plants or factories for any part of an airplane or a completed plane. It goes even further than that, in my judgment. There is a provision at the top of page 42, line 4, making $13,000,000 available for commitments and obligations of a certain kind and the remaining $14,000,000 is available for new planes and equipment. This is limited likewise by this proviso, and none can be spent in any Government factory or plant.

The issue is this: If you believe that this sum of approximately $30,000,000 must, in spite of the better judgment of the naval officials, be spent with private concerns, then you want this proviso kept. If you believe that the matter of spending this enormous sum should be left to the judgment of the naval officials and they to decide if greater economy and efficiency would result in expending the money in Government owned, controlled, and operated aviation factories, they may so spend it. In other words, if you believe as I do, that the United States Government should construct all of its equipment in Government plants insofar as it is possible, then you will favor this amendment.

This rider has been written into this appropriation measure for the sole purpose of denying to the public of the United States the right to spend its own money for war purposes in its own factories that they have built at the public expense. It seems to me that this is a glaring instance of writing into an appropriation bill a provision that the private munition makers of Amerca must not alone be given a preference but that they must be given an exclusive right to every dollar of this enormous sum that we are providing for the Government to spend in connection with naval airplanes.

I cannot conscientiously support this naval appropriation so long as it carries within it this discrimination against the Government itself. It is just such incidents as this and such practices as this that, in my judgment, result in the private manufactures of war equipment and war materials, spending millions, creating public sentiment that will permit the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars in war preparation, irrespective of whether such preparations are essential or not, and it is such propaganda that ultimately leads to war.

I trust that the committee will support my amendment to strike this limitation from the naval appropriation bill, and that we will not be put in the position of virtually earmarking $30,000,000 of public money for the profiteering war makers.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in order that the Members may have a picture of this situation, I think they ought to know just exactly what this language in the bill does and just exactly why it is desirable that it be there. This airplane factory was constructed during the war. For many years thereafter the Navy Department spent millions and millions of dollars attempting to manufacture airplanes at this plant, and those planes were a failure. They spent millions of dollars on experimental work and accomplished practically nothing.

At the present time the situation is about like this: There have been about 165 training planes constructed or under construction at this plant. If you figure the cost of these planes, taking into consideration what a private plant would have to carry, according to Admiral Cook, Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics—and I obtained these figures yesterday, so they are up to date—the cost, if let by contract, would be $6,780 apiece. The cost of manufacturing them in this plant is $7,655, on the same basis, almost $900 more than it would cost to construct them by contract. Is not that a yardstick enough?

Mr. Chairman, this limitation permits the continuation of the manufacture of the training planes at this plant. This only seeks to prevent the enlargement of its activities. There is no reason why we should put the Government in the plane-manufacturing business any more. As a matter of fact, this plant is much more suitable for the repair and reconstruction or reconditioning of planes than it is for the manufacture of new planes, and, as a matter of fact, the plant is much more needed for that purpose.

Mr. LEAVY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEAVY. Is there any reason why the naval authorities themselves should not be the judge as to whether they should spend this money?

Mr. TABER. There is every reason why they should not be the judge. Every time you give these admirals a lot of jurisdiction in the way of hiring help in factories, they branch out just as far as they can, and it has always resulted disastrously to the Treasury of the United States; it has retarded the efficiency of the Navy and the things that have been produced for the Navy. Those who are interested in an adequate national defense want to see the equipment for the Navy the very best, but secured at a reasonable price. The only way we can bring that about is to have these things contracted for, as far as possible, by private plants.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The effect of this limitation is in the interest of economy?

Mr. TABER. Absolutely.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is the reason why the subcommittee put it in the bill?

Mr. TABER. That is my understanding.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If this amendment is adopted, it means the cost will be at least $800 or $1,000 more, and then we would not get planes as efficient as those manufactured by private industry?

Mr. TABER. That is my understanding.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, there never has been any substantial airplane development by the naval forces or the naval airplane factories. There have never been improvements in efficiency and in effectiveness of the airplanes made by these naval factories. It has all been done by contract with private parties and that is the only way we have got results.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. The greatest advance in airplane construction has been by privately operated factories?

Mr. TABER. That is the only way we have procured advances.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the members of the committee will support the Appropriations Committee in its effort to keep the manufacture of airplanes on an efficient basis so that when we spend a dollar we will get a dollar's worth in return and thereby have a chance to produce enough planes with the money we can afford to spend to take care of the aviation needs of the country. I do not think we can do it the other way so well. I hope the Members will insist on this provision staying in the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to one other thing. This limitation does not prevent the manufacture of spare parts, it does not prevent repairs being made by this establishment, but it does prevent and limits them to the making of repairs and to the construction of training planes. Perhaps that is farther than they should be permitted to go at this plant. At any rate, I hope the House will keep them within reason in the operation of this plant.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. If this provision was not in the bill, then the Navy Department would be authorized to use some of this money for the construction and maintenance of this plant up in Pennsylvania?

Mr. TABER. They would be authorized to use some of it anyway, because this permits them to construct training planes up there; it permits them to manufacture spare parts and that sort of thing, but it would prevent them from constructing these large fighting planes that we contract for, because they have never shown any aptitude or capacity to do that sort of work, nor have they shown any aptitude or capacity to design engines or to do work along that particular line.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If it were not for this proviso in the bill, the Navy Department would be authorized to construct at least 10 percent of the total airplanes at the experimental plant at Philadelphia?

Mr. TABER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is rather important, in that it deals with the Air Service. There is a school of thought today that believes, perhaps, that the wars of the future will largely be fought in the air. The Navy Department builds, perhaps, half of its construction. Now we are setting a new policy in the Air Service. We are going to depart entirely from Government participation in the construction of aircraft. You are entering upon a new policy, and you are deciding that what was good for the Navy is not good for the Air Service.

I am surprised that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], being a conservative, has not more faith in the admirals than he has. Well, the same admirals whom you do not trust to hire these employees are the same admirals who are going to fight the wars of the future—which I hope may never happen—and it seems to me that the United States Government, as big as it is, ought to be able to embark upon this undertaking of at least having a suitable yardstick program in connection with our Air Service just as they are doing in the Naval Construction Service.

I do not see anything to fear in this proposition. I know you cannot go with me now on my bill for complete Government manufacture of all arms and munitions, but that is one thing we are going to come to in this country. We do a lot of talking about it in the service men's organizations, and there are a lot of men here who would vote for a complete Government program to build all of the aircraft, naval vessels, and all the munitions of war.

This is really an important amendment, and it is an amendment offered to bring to the attention of the Congress the fact that you are going to embark on a new venture that will probably affect the battlefield of the future in the air, and you are departing from your established naval policy. [Applause.]

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment here proposed is not only not in the interest of economy, but is certainly against the efficiency of naval aviation.

Some of you gentlemen know that I fly as a pilot; in fact, I do a great deal of flying. I have been flying for 20 years, and I may tell you that not only is it not an economy to have these planes built in this way but the planes themselves are not satisfactory. I am not indicting anybody in the Navy. We have the finest corps in the world, but they are not qualified to build these airplanes, and they have not done a successful job of building airplanes in the past. The naval aircraft factory, as a matter of fact, ought to be limited exclusively to overhaul. Even their training planes are not comparable with what we can purchase by contract for the same amount of money.

Comparing surface ships and airplanes, of course, is ridiculous, because there is no comparison. The airplane is still a matter of experiment and development, and it takes large amounts of money to do experimental and development work. We do not provide the aircraft factory nor can we provide that factory with the millions of dollars that the private concerns have available for development and experimental purposes. I might be in favor of this proposal if we would grant, say, $5,000,000 to provide an experimental fund, such as private concerns are required to have. However, we do not do this and we are not going to do it, and you know we are not going to do it.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. It is my information the Navy Department itself does not want this expansion.

Mr. MAAS. That is correct. The Navy is in entire accord with the committee's provision as it is.

Mr. KNUTSON. Because they realize they could not build as good planes as they can buy under the present system.

Mr. MAAS. The admirals, since they are mentioned, are not in favor of doing this type of manufacturing up there. They do no want to do it, and they know we are better off not to do it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Are the admirals for an air force at all?

Mr. MAAS. Most of them are; yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. If the construction of the airplanes is an experiment, why should not the Gvernment participate in the experimental work?

Mr. MAAS. Because we are not in a position to do that kind of experimental and development work, together with the necessary testing, and so forth. The actual building of a service-type plane there is not satisfactory, because when we buy privately built planes they are built under competitive tests and the Navy tries them out; and if they are not satisfactory, they do not accept them. But here the very men who build them are going to be the same people who are going to decide whether they are satisfactory or not.

The factory does experimental work and will continue to do so. But the complete operations necessary in building battle planes from design, experiment, construction, and test cannot be satisfactorily done on either an efficient or economical basis at the Naval Aircraft Factory with the limited appropriations for design and experiment.

The Naval Aircraft Factory is limited in its funds by appropriations for the specific purposes authorized. In the development of large battle planes sometimes several millions of dollars are spent before a successful model is produced. A number of private companies are constantly doing this experimenting and developing, involving in the aggregate many millions of dollars. If the Naval Aircraft Factory is to compete in the manufacturing of battle planes with outside factories, we must duplicate all of the experimental funds of all the competing factories.

If we are not to provide such necessary funds, then it is exceedingly unwise and even dangerous to have the Naval Aircraft Factory go into a program of production on battle planes.

The question of Government manufacture of munitions is one that is too broad to go into at the present time; but we tried Government building of airplanes during the war, and you know what happened. It was one of the most colossal failures we have ever engaged in; and I may say that if we adopt a general policy of the Government building or manufacturing all its munitions and war supplies we will have taken a step that we will regret more than any we have ever taken before.

There has been much talk about neutrality. We are trying to obtain neutrality; but if we launch into the policy of manufacturing all our own munitions, building all of our own ships and all of our own airplanes, we will so burden the people of this country financially that the whole thing will collapse, because today munitions making is a side line with all of the private factories. We would have to duplicate all these factories, the overhead of which is now carried by commercial products. Furthermore, when we got up to peak production in the building up of our necessary defense supplies we could never cut down from peak production even after we acquired an adequate stock of supplies, because you could not throw people out of work in such Government plants, and you know it. Politics would prevent creating such unemployment. We would keep on building and building and manufacturing munitions until we would become a real world powder keg in this country.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. Are not the airplane manufacturers and the munitions manufacturers the people who make the sentiment for war?

Mr. MAAS. Oh, no; they do not manufacture anything but airplanes.

Mr. PIERCE. Then the history we have been reading and the reports of these investigations are not true. As I have read them, these men are the ones who employ propagandists to put on these campaigns.

Mr. MAAS. I do not believe the airplane manufacturers have been putting out any propaganda to start a war.

Mr. PIERCE. And neither have the Navy men?

Mr. MAAS. Certainly not. They have the most to lose by a war.

Mr. PIERCE. Are not the munitions manufacturers the greater makers of war?

Mr. MAAS. The Navy and munitions makers are the result of wars and world greed, not the cause of either. China wanted peace and so provided no protection against war. China has been virtually dismembered as a result. The lack of a navy and an adequate army and munitions supplies did not save China.

The United States wants peace, but we are practical enough to provide adequately to enforce and protect that peace.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this amendment close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. I know very well the experience that the United States had in connection with airplanes during the war. It was a most regrettable and tragic thing. I do not understand, however, that the private manufacture of airplanes helped the situation to any extent. Quite the contrary. We were confronted with a problem which might have been different had we gone through the difficult period of bringing up the efficiency of our own Government service to the point where it could have done a good job in things like the manufacture of airplanes.

The only change that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY] proposes by his amendment is to remove a restriction now contained in this bill against the possibility of the Navy going forward with work along this line. If, as has been said, the Navy now builds training planes, and if, further, as has been, and I hope mistakenly, charged, the Navy is incapable of building and designing planes, we are guilty of a very serious blunder in allowing the Navy to even build training planes. I should hate to believe that the Navy is so incompetent as has been implied. I find that when a move is made in the House which in the opinion of many may be in the interest of peace, that that move is sometimes criticized upon the ground that it is an undue interference with the Army or the Navy, but when a move is made in which some of us believe and which we believe would in the end prove important for true and effective national defense, then we are told that the Navy is inefficient and incapable of doing a good job. Again, why is it necessary to put on this limitation or any limitation if the admirals are all opposed to doing anything about Government manufacture, anyway?

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS. Yes.

Mr. MAAS. The reason that the Navy is not capable of building these planes is not because they are not competent officers of the Navy, but it is because there are no funds provided for experimental purposes. Does the gentleman realize that private industry has spent millions on millions for experimental purposes?

Mr. VOORHIS. I want Uncle Sam to be in a position to have the benefit of some of that advancement in science and I believe he could get it. What I am pleading for is not that we initiate here a big program of Government manufacture of airplanes, but that we do not by the passage of this legislation definitely close the door to such a possibility and definitely make it impossible for our Navy to gain that experience.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Under the limitation all experimental planes can be built there now. The gentleman is advocating that 10 percent of the number required by the Navy be built at Philadelphia. As a matter of fact, the Navy Department has never advocated that. The Navy Department has not come to Congress asking that this be done.

Mr. VOORHIS. I understand, but as a matter of principle some of us would like to see that limitation left out, because we do not want to shut the door in the face of such a possibility.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. But the gentleman is mistaken. We are not shutting the door. They have the right under the limitation to have all experimental engines manufactured at the plant at Philadelphia?

Mr. VOORHIS. My point is that it might be important for us to go further than that at some time.

Mr. Chairman, the question of neutrality has been raised and I just want to point this out. If we really mean what we say about neutrality legislation, then we mean that for the sake of doing what we can to prevent the possibility of American entry into war, we are willing to sacrifice to some extent at least our insistence on complete defense of freedom of the seas. Under such circumstances I believe the national-defense program should be considered in the light of our present belief on neutrality; and the first step to be taken, I think, would be to make a sincere effort to determine the difference between offensive weapons and defensive weapons. Indeed, I would greatly favor a complete and thorough study by a special committee to determine the vital defensive needs of the United States, including the Panama Canal and Hawaii. Without such knowledge we are legislating in the dark.

Mr. MAAS. If the gentleman will permit, I can give him a definition right now. If you are in front of the weapon, it is an offensive weapon, if you are behind it, it is a defensive weapon.

Mr. VOORHIS. I understand what the gentleman means, but I am quite sure that there are other distinctions, too. It seems to me that airplanes and submarines are among the best defensive weapons we can have, and that Admiral Sims might have known something about the defensive quality of battleships when he suggested that in case of a defensive war the best place for battleships might be up the Mississippi River. Our greatest need is for accurate information in Congress concerning this vital question of national defense. For example, I shall vote for this appropriation bill because I am for national defense. But I shall do so with some misgivings lest I am actually voting more money than is really needed for our country's defense—money which, in that case, had better be spent for the construction of homes, the relief of farmers, the work of flood control, or in some other constructive way instead of on armament. Adequate armament for defense may prevent war. In this sort of world we must provide such armament for our Nation. But too large an armament may quite as well arouse fear and suspicion and in the end lead to war. Admittedly the problem is an extremely difficult one, but it is one that absolutely must be solved. Let us set ourselves the task, therefore, of determining what national defense really implies and requires.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I think that this involves a fundamental theory of government. I am not going to give a lecture on history, but this reminds me of the origin of the United States Army. You know when we started to get a United States Army, people said that we should not have a public army; that we ought to have an army like the Hessian forces that we fought during the Revolutionary War, because we would not be having a war all the time and we would have so much overhead, and that public armies were inefficient anyway, and that when we got into a war we could just hire a mercenary army; but, nevertheless, we decided to have an army, and we went ahead and got an army. Then we decided to have a navy. Some of these arguments today are the most archaic arguments I ever heard in my life. Back in Philadelphia in 1830 they began to have public education, and they said it would be a waste of money to have public education; that there was too much overhead to have public education. It would destroy the initiative of the honest mechanic where any man could go out and educate his child. It is the same old argument that we have all the time.

It seems to me that we, as Congressmen, are putting an unnecessary restriction on our own Government of the United States. If our admirals do not have sense enough to carry on their business, we ought to get new admirals, and we ought to have some confidence in the Government of the United States. That is all we are doing. We are putting an unnecessary restriction on the Government of the United States. It seems to me we are sabotaging our own program. You know we are supposed to be the representatives of the people of the United States. The Senate is supposed to be a sort of House of Lords, but last year the House of Lords knocked out this program and we had it in. I think they will do it again. In other words, it shows that we have no confidence in the Government of the United States.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. Did I understand the gentleman to say that on matters of naval and military policy he would be guided by admirals?

Mr. MAVERICK. No; I did not say that.

Mr. BREWSTER. I thought that is what the gentleman said.

Mr. MAVERICK. No; I did not say that. The gentleman misunderstood me. I always try to use my own judgment. I even differ with the Supreme Court occasionally.

The argument before us is the same thing that they bring up against the Tennessee Valley Authority every time that question arises. They say we are just ruining business all over the country. What are they doing in the Tennessee Valley Authority? They are selling electricity for one-half and one-third what they sold it for before. They say it is in the interest of economy. It is the same old story. Then somebody gets up and gives the single testimony of an admiral saying they lost so much on an airplane. Let us grant that the Government of the United States has had some operations that are not as efficient as something else. The answer to it is that it is not always true, and that the Government as a rule does its work fairly well, and that we should not, as a matter of principle, take this up. If what they say is true, we can abolish the Post Office and turn it over to Mr. Insull. We can abolish all of our public operations, but if we have a national defense, if we have an efficient national defense, we must have an efficient branch of the Government that at least knows how to run its business.

Look at the contemptuous attitude of the steel companies, saying that they would not comply with the laws of the United States. What do you think has happened in Europe? Some of the big cartels over there have been contemptuous with the government, and the government has taken over the munitions business. It has taken over the steel business and run it for the benefit of the nation.

I think this amendment ought to be adopted. I think it is a fundamental thing where we are backing up the Government.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I infer from the gentleman's remarks that he would be in favor of the Government taking over all business. You want to take over the power and light business. You want to take over the munitions business, and you want to take over the steel business. You might as well take it all over and be done with it. I will say to the gentleman that after you have taken it all over, you will not have any government.

Mr. MAVERICK. Now, that is the kind of a ridiculous statement that the gentleman makes, saying that I would take over all business. That statement just has not got any sense. I did not say it.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I think the subcommittee on appropriations is to be congratulated for having brought in this bill with this limitation. It is limitations of this kind and investigations of this character that the subcommittee has made in presenting this bill that have brought about a reduction of some $35,000,000 under the Budget estimate. It is certainly in the interest of economy not to have the Government engaging in the manufacture of airplanes at the experiment station in Philadelphia.

This amendment brings about two things. It brings about economy. It is not economical for the Government to engage in the manufacture of 10 percent of all the airplanes acquired by the Navy. On the other hand, it will produce inferior planes, because experience in the past has demonstrated that even the experimental engines are not entirely up to the standard produced by industry.

Let me say in conclusion the Navy Department is not here advocating this. This measure has never been presented to Congress at the request of the Navy Department. It was put in the bill in the Senate because some Members of that body are of the opinion that practically all Government munitions should be made in Government navy yards and Government arsenals, but this House will be doing the proper and economical thing if it supports the committee's limitation, and you should vote down this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

MARINE CORPS

PAY, MARINE CORPS

Pay of officers, active list: For pay and allowances prescribed by law for all officers on the active list—pay and allowance, $4,166,211, including not to exceed $245,017 for increased pay for making aerial flights, none of which shall be available for increased pay for making aerial flights by nonflying officers at a rate in excess of $1,440 per annum, which shall be the legal maximum rate as to such nonflying officers; subsistence allowance, $532,608; rental allowance, $653,181; in all, $5,352,000; and no part of such sum shall be available to pay active-duty pay and allowances to officers on the retired list.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: On page 44, after line 13, insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the payment of any officer on the active list who shall be on duty in China after January 1, 1938."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I send another amendment to the desk which applies on page 45, and ask that the two amendments be considered together, because they are identical.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: Page 45, line 14, after the figures "$8,845,000", strike out the semicolon, insert a comma and the following language: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the payment of any enlisted man on duty in China after January 1, 1938."

Mr. DIRKSEN. I take it, Mr. Chairman, I may proceed for 10 minutes, having two amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I have always said that there is a road away from war. There are five stages on this road. The first one is to get away from friction and provocations with foreign countries. The second one is mandatory neutrality. The third one, of course, would be an adequate defensive establishment for the needs of this country. The fourth would be to picture war in all its dismal horrors and divested of all its glory. The fifth would be to develop an affirmative peace consciousness in the country.

It is sheer stupidity to talk about universal peace unless it is backed up by some affirmative action. I offered an amendment this afternoon that sought to limit the maneuvering of our fleet to the coastal waters of this country. That is a part of such a program. You may call it an astounding amendment or an astounding bit of policy, but I assert the time is coming when that is going to be written into the organic law of this country as part of the naval policy of this country.

The feelings of my own heart are embodied in the pending amendments to make no part of these appropriations available for the payment of any troops in China after January 1, 1938. This will give this country 10 months to wind up its affairs in China and bring our troops back to this country. If the members of the committee do not know it, let me say that we have 1,603 marines on duty in China today. Two-thirds of them are in Shanghai and the other one-third is in Peking. Why are they there? We put them in China in 1901 under a treaty for a very definite purpose; ostensibly to guard a railroad along with 30 or 40 other nations that were participating at that time.

There is no reason for keeping troops in China in this day and age—fancy 1,600 marines over there! You can put them in one side of this Chamber and still have room left. Would anybody contend that 1,600 American troops in China can ever protect our interests in case John Chinaman one day decides to shake his lethargic self and do battle—1,600 mere American soldiers in two Chinese towns 10,000 miles from home. The result is what? Nothing but friction, nothing but provocation that may ultimately lead to the display of ill will between this country and China. We had an example of it in a bill presented on this floor a week ago last Wednesday by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to pay $300 to a Chinese lady in Tientsin who operated a restaurant. It happened that an American marine had gone into her restaurant at 12:30 after midnight on the 3d day of January, 1929. He decided to stage a one-man offensive. He decided to indicate to all China that he was a member of the American marines. He took out a knife and proceeded on a one-man offensive. They had to haul the lady to a hospital. The result was $54 worth of repairs.

Then came the bill for $300 to the American Congress 9 years after a private in the Marine Corps had cut up a lady in Tientsin, China. This will result in nothing but friction, nothing but difficulty, and it may one day disturb the gracious attitude of the other nations toward our country. This is a step in the direction of peace and will avoid friction. One of the things we can do is to make no money available in this bill for the payment of officers and troops in China after the 1st of January, 1938. This gives us 10 months to wind up our affairs. Let us tell them to come back because they have no business over there.

It reminds me of a story I heard about an incident abroad. They tell about Queen Victoria coming down the stairway, and her beautiful queenly robe brushed against the wet paint. So she insisted that a sentry be brought to stand at that turn in the stairway so it would never happen again. After the paint dried they left the sentry stand there on duty for 16 years. That represents what happened so far as our troops in China are concerned. We put them there after the Boxer Rebellion in 1901, and they are still there, serving no definite purpose.

We have no troops in any other country, so far as my knowledge goes, except China and the Philippines. If a case can be made out for their existence over there, it must be rather transparent. Imagine the existence of 1,600 Chinese marines in New York City or Washington or San Francisco. Just how long would we as Americans tolerate such a condition? If I interpret the American spirit aright, it would be but a little while until we would make short shrift of them.

Now, it may perchance be that since China cannot well help herself, we can continue to maintain a handful of troops in that country. But the fact remains that their very presence must react upon the oriental mind, precisely as the presence of Chinese troops in Washington or New York would react upon the minds of the citizens here.

The moment our troops over there come to harm there will be a swelling demand for an investigation, for apologies, and for all those bewildering actions that go to make up modern diplomacy. Such incidents always leave a scar, and from those scars can come unexpected complications. To withdraw these troops means the elimination of possible friction, and the elimination of friction is a happy way of avoiding possible future conflicts.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this Congress is confronted with the largest appropriation measures for armaments ever presented in peace time. Each year we have been increasing our spending on armaments until we have reached the billion-dollar mark. The estimates for the coming year are twice as great as the amount spent in 1934 for the same purpose, and more than the entire Budget in 1916. This ever-increasing expenditure of the taxpayers' money goes on and on, and yet we never reach what the big-army and big-navy supporters call an adequate national defense. The facts are that we go on spending the Nation's money without having any definite or well-developed plan of national defense.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. I only have 5 minutes.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Did I understand the gentleman to say this bill carries more funds than have ever been carried in an appropriation bill for the Navy Department?

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. I am referring to our whole armament program.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, the Democratic platform in 1932 had this to say:

> We advocate a firm foreign policy, including peace with all the world and the settlement of our international disputes by arbitration; no interference in the internal affairs of other nations; * * *; the pact of Paris abolishing war as an instrument of national policy to be made effective by provisions for consultation and conference in case of threatened violation of treaties. International agreements for reduction of armaments. * * *"

Those statements embodied in the Democratic platform of 1932 have been thrown to the winds, and we have embarked on a mad armament race that will fast lead this country into bankruptcy. In the 19 years since the World War this country has spent twenty-four and a half billion dollars for national defense. That is more than twice as much as either France or Italy spent, 5 times as much as Japan, 10 times as much as Germany, and $2,000,000,000 more than was spent by Great Britain in the same period. These figures are based on official records. Today, after leading the armament spending race for more than 19 years, our naval and military experts tell us that we still do not have an adequate national defense and that we must have a bigger Army and bigger Navy for national security.

Against whom are we arming? Are we preparing to defend our shores or are we developing a military machine for aggressive warfare? Are we preparing to send our Army and Navy all over the world to protect investments made by some of our citizens in foreign countries? If the World War taught us anything, it was that we should take care of our own affairs and mind our own business. That war will have cost us, by the time the last veteran is pensioned, hospitalized, and buried, over $100,000,000,000, without taking into cognizance the tremendous moral loss the American people have sustained.

This Navy appropriation bill calls for $526,555,428. That figure does not represent anything like what we will spend on our Navy during the coming fiscal year. The one-half billion dollars called for in this bill will be supplemented, just as it has been in the last 4 years, by money taken from relief and deficiency appropriations. Since July 1, 1933, we have allowed $292,966,923.32 to be transferred from relief or emergency appropriations to the Navy. Additional millions have been provided through deficiency appropriations.

Not only does our Navy demand bigger and bigger regular appropriations but, in addition, they take the money we appropriate to buy food, clothing, and shelter for our poor. What has this money secured for us? The answer is simple: It has kept us going along our unplanned course of national defense. It has kept us in the biggest naval building race in history. The money has gone into the maintenance and upkeep of useless naval stations which should have been abolished years ago, and now we are fighting it out with Great Britain to see who can keep the biggest navy afloat.

We talk about national defense, yet the very figures and expressed statements of our naval officers show that we are doing only one thing, and that is carrying on a building race with Great Britain. Let us take a look at the figures showing present naval strength plus the building program for the next fiscal year in Great Britain and this country. These figures tell their own story. We have on hand in under-age vessels 186,323 less than Great Britain. We have appropriated for or have under construction 10,440 tons more than Great Britain. Great Britain leads us in projected tonnage by 166,000 tons. No other power comes anywhere near approaching those figures.

If anyone holds for a single moment the idea that we are building this Navy to protect our own waters, I refer them to page 688 of the hearings on this bill, where the Navy Department requests $21,000,000 for a floating dock at Singapore. Now, Singapore is not now or never has been within American territorial waters. If we are to have a navy to patrol the oceans of the whole globe, we should have docks and naval establishments in every country of the civilized world, and there are plenty of big-navy advocates who would hold that such a policy would give us an adequate national defense.

Several years ago Rear Admiral Magruder wrote an article in the Saturday Evening Post criticizing the Navy. He was rewarded for his article by being removed from command. Admiral Magruder openly laughed at a vice admiral commanding a fleet of one light cruiser and six destroyers, and a rear admiral whose fleet consisted of four fuel and supply ships and five tugs. He further pointed out that each admiral appointed to such a command insisted upon having his full complement of junior officers, servants, and band. No wonder we need so much money for a navy.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, Commodore Jahncke, a sincere naval officer, served as Assistant Secretary of the Navy under the Hoover administration. He had been in charge of navy yards. On his retirement he pointed out the enormous dissipation of our naval appropriations in the maintenance of useless navy yards. Our Navy, thinking in terms of the Pacific, maintains seven navy yards on the Atlantic coast, and for years the recommendations have been to decrease the number of yards on the Atlantic coast to four. Every penny diverted from furthering the national defense reduces the effectiveness and protective value of that national insurance.

As an instrument of national defense our Navy is needed for operations in our own waters. In the words of one of our greatest national-defense experts, "We do not need a navy to send upon missions from which they cannot return." Any naval or military expert will agree with Gen. J. Franklin Bell, who years ago pointed out that Subig Bay in the Philippines could not be defended and that the naval station at Cavite was in the same fix. Trying to maintain a navy to protect the Philippines is as foolish a policy as could be followed. Manila can provide only food and minor repairs. There is no coal and iron, and now that we have given up the Philippines we might well bring our Navy home.

A navy to protect our shipping has become a farce. There are no pirates. In times of war we cannot protect our shipping through waters controlled by great powers. Trade routes would be patrolled by submarines, aircraft, and surface vessels operating from nearby bases, and our warships, trying to protect our shipping in those zones, would be faced with the handicap of operating thousands of miles from our own base. The Navy as a "big stick" can be effective only when the other fellow is weak. Under the policies pronounced by our great President, we have cast off the role of the bully and completely discarded the big-stick policy.

These are the facts of national defense as they pertain to our Navy. The time has come when, if we would translate into something more than mere words the peaceful expressions of our Government and the sincere aspirations of our people, we must put an end to this billion dollar armament spending. My colleagues, with all the sincere love of country that a man may possibly hold, I oppose this measure and call upon you to help restore this country to the paths of peace rather than to continue on the road to war. [Applause.]

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and desire briefly to refer to it.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment not only affects international arrangements but trespasses upon policies of our State Department. This Nation, as I understand, has marines on duty in China as legation guards, at Peiping and perhaps at Shanghai. I trust without further consideration the Members will vote down the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DIRKSEN) there were 17 yeas and 55 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous supplies, material, equipment, personal and other services, and for other incidental expenses for the Marine Corps not otherwise provided for; purchase, repair, and exchange of typewriters and calculating machines; purchase and repair of furniture and fixtures; repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; and purchase, exchange, and repair of horse-drawn passenger-carrying and other vehicles, including parts; veterinary services and medicines for public animals and the authorized number of officers' horses; purchase of mounts and horse equipment for all officers below the grade of major required to be mounted; shoeing for public animals and the authorized number of officers' horses; books, newspapers, and periodicals; printing and binding; packing and crating of officers' allowance of baggage; funeral expenses of officers and enlisted men and accepted applicants for enlistment and retired officers on active duty, including the transportation of their bodies, arms, and wearing apparel from the place of demise to the homes of the deceased in the United States; construction, operation, and maintenance of laundries; and for all emergencies and extraordinary expenses, $2,330,000: Provided, That there may be expended out of this appropriation (including the exchange value of any vehicle that may be used as part payment) for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, the gross cost of any one vehicle not to be in excess of the respective amounts as follows: 2 at $1,300 each; 2 at $900 each; 8 at $700 each; 10 station wagons at $700 each; and 5 motorcycles at $300 each.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, on yesterday the following colloquy took place, and I refer to page 1848 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The chairman of the subcommittee said:

Projects authorized here, yonder, and everywhere throughout the United States carry with them when estimates come to us to make them effective the necessity of appropriating money to carry out the will of Congress. So those of you who come here today and fight and oppose naval appropriations I ask you, where were you when the bills were passed authorizing the appropriations?

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UMSTEAD. Not now. I shall be glad to later.

Mr. BIERMANN. The gentleman asked a question.

Mr. UMSTEAD. If the question hits the gentleman, I shall be glad to yield later, but not now.

The question did hit the gentleman, myself, and the gentleman did not yield later, but I do not mind that.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. Does he ask me to yield now?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I ask the gentleman if he thinks he is fair?

Mr. BIERMANN. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact I have not yielded to him? The gentleman did not yield to me then, or at any other time during his speech, but I do not mind that at all.

I was here battling the Vinson Navy bill, which I think is a curse to the country and a curse to the international situation, and if the gentleman from North Carolina has the fine intellect I think he has and the fine sense of obligation which I am sure he has, I am sure he will live to regret the day he supported a bill like the Vinson Navy bill.

As to the proposition that any expenditure authorized by a committee has to be followed by the Appropriations Committee, that is so utterly ridiculous and preposterous it amazes me that the gentleman makes that kind of statement in the RECORD.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I decline to yield.

The very fact that the Appropriations Committee holds extensive hearings and that they increase or decrease according to their wisdom shows there is nothing to that kind of statement. If the Appropriations Committee was bound to make an appropriation for every authorization, the Appropriations Committee instead of being one of the great committees of the House would be merely a subordinate and auxiliary committee.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. UMSTEAD].

Mr. UMSTEAD. I wished to ask the gentleman from Iowa if it is not a fact that I declined to yield to anyone yesterday until I finished my general statement?

Mr. BIERMANN. I will say that——

Mr. UMSTEAD. Is the answer to that "yes" or "no"?

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Then did I not yield to every person in this House who asked me to yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I think that is true.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Then, why did not the gentleman ask me to yield to him, if he desired recognition?

Mr. BIERMANN. Now, I wonder if the gentleman will answer me "yes" or "no"——

Mr. UMSTEAD. One further question——

Mr. BIERMANN. I cannot let the gentleman take up all my time.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Is it not also a fact that without being requested to do so, I gave the gentleman 15 minutes' time on yesterday?

Mr. BIERMANN. That is true.

Mr. UMSTEAD. And announced that I would give it to him, and still the gentleman did not ask it. I went down and asked him on the floor yesterday evening publicly if he was ready to use the time I had reserved for his use, and in the 15 minutes allotted to the gentleman from Iowa he did not refer to the colloquy he is referring to this morning.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes in order to answer this multitude of questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. BIERMANN. The reason I thought the gentleman from North Carolina should have yielded to me at the spot where I asked him to yield was that the gentleman said, "I ask you", and he looked in my direction, "I ask you where were you when the bills were passed authorizing the appropriation?" That was the appropriate spot and the place where my answer should have appeared in the RECORD, but now the RECORD seems to show that those of us who oppose this outrageous appropriation of $526,000,000 were negligent in our patent duty to come in here when the Vinson bill was on the floor, and I wanted to show in the RECORD at that spot that we were here, and I think the gentleman from North Carolina should have yielded to me for that purpose.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I cannot yield all my time; but if I have time to yield, I will.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I did not object to the gentleman's request for additional time.

Mr. BIERMANN. No; but the gentleman has taken up a lot of my time. I will yield to him if I have some time.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I may say to the gentleman——

Mr. BIERMANN. I have not yielded, and the gentleman is familiar with the rules and knows he cannot interrupt me.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I understood the gentleman had yielded to me.

Mr. BIERMANN. The gentleman's speech would seem to indicate that the opponents of this appropriation bill were negligent in their duty to come in here and oppose the authorization bills and that we were not here, and the purpose of my request of the gentleman to yield was to show, at that point, that we were not at all negligent.

As to the time the gentleman yielded me, the gentleman stated here yesterday that Members had been asking for time for 4 days. I, perhaps, am not so well acquainted with the rules as the gentleman, but it was not my impression that a person asking time on a bill would have to see the chairman of the committee 4 days or 3 days or 2 days in advance of the time the bill comes on the floor, and as to the 15 minutes the gentleman yielded me, I am grateful to him for doing that. It is significant that he said a few moments ago that on yesterday evening he did yield me 15 minutes, with emphasis on the evening. I think there were not over 25 persons in the Hall at the time the gentleman yielded me the time.

If the gentleman now wants me to yield further, I will do so.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I will say to the gentleman, of course, I have no control over the number of men who stay on the floor to hear him speak. I personally like to hear him, because I am very fond of the gentleman from Iowa. There were other men who spoke yesterday evening as late as the gentleman from Iowa.

Now, one further observation; the gentleman said I happened to look toward him when I made some statement yesterday on the floor. I, of course, undertake to cover the audience to which I am speaking, and if my eyes happened to fall on the gentleman at any particular moment and sting his conscience, I, of course, did not mean to do so, and I regret that it caused him any undue concern; but now that the gentleman has raised the question, I ask the gentleman where he was last year when the Alameda project in California, carrying an ultimate expenditure, limited in the act, of $15,000,000, was under consideration on the floor, and I was here trying to stop its passage? I ask the gentleman if he was here or if he raised his voice?

Mr. BIERMANN. I do not recall that.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Does not the gentleman recall that I later mentioned to him that he was not here?

Mr. BIERMANN. No; I do not recall that. I may say to the gentleman that I do not have such an absolutely accurate memory as to recall every debate and every conversation that takes place on every single item of this bill or any other measure.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEFAN: Page 49, line 12, add a new paragraph, as follows:

"No part of the funds appropriated in this act shall be used for further improvements in naval stations in the Philippine Islands or Philippine waters."

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment because of my great interest in efficiency and economy in all Government expenditures. Please stop to realize that here we are spending over half a billion dollars of taxpayers' money for the purpose of running our Navy business for 1 year. This spending is during peacetime, and we are told that we are not preparing for war with any nation. I offer this amendment, Mr. Chairman, not because I am against the Navy. I am for an adequate national defense—a good Navy, a good Army, and a good Aviation Service for actual defense. I know this must cost a lot of money; but I feel that now that we are at peace, we should trim down these expenditures in order that all of this money is spent efficiently, economically. This amendment is offered in the hope that we can trim this vast sum down and for the purpose of being helpful to the Committee of the Whole in pointing out where I believe some of this money can be saved.

A big saving can be made now by holding down useless appropriations for naval stations and military and naval services in the Philippine Islands, which we are abandoning soon and where the people have been led to believe that we will give them their liberty and freedom.

I supported the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] because I personally know that a great deal of money could be saved through the adoption of his amendment.

But, Mr. Chairman, I cannot sit idly by at this moment when we are asked to spend more than half a billion dollars for our Navy when simultaneously I have in my hands scores of telegrams and letters from farmers in my district telling me that livestock is starving and that these farmers cannot obtain a loan for feed and seed to continue their farming operations. These people who raise our Nation's food cannot get this help at a time when we so easily spend billions for many unnecessary activities. This morning delegates from my district came to my office pleading the cause of these needy farmers, who are in the same condition as the flood sufferers in the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys, because in my district we lost a crop. These penniless farmers wonder how we so easily spend billions of dollars for other purposes when they must witness the starving of their livestock. They wonder why we cannot trim down some useless expenditures and do something to stop the exodus of these farmers from their homes. Hundreds of these are headed for the towns and cities to go on relief. This is no idle statement. It comes directly to me from the lips of farm bureau officials who were in my office today. We who have been pleading the cause of these farmers since last December hope that this Congress will trim down on these useless expenditures and give more than "lip service" to the real agricultural needs of our Nation.

I also want to commend the members of this Committee on Appropriations for cutting down the appropriations just a little. These members have labored many hours on this bill. They have held many hearings, but I find nothing in these hearings which would indicate that anything had been done regarding the cutting down of useless expenditures for our naval or military activities in the Philippine Islands.

I have taken the floor several times on this subject. I had intended to say something about it when we get the Army appropriation bill, which I understand will also call for more than half a billion dollars. But with the call of distress from home and the indications that nothing is being done to cut some of these useless expenditures on the other side of the world prompts me to mention the subject again.

For more than 30 years we have spent millions of dollars each year of our taxpayers' money for military and naval activities in the Philippine Islands. Our Army there has done nothing for 30 years. They have taken no part in the protection of the islands internally or externally. Certainly they are not needed there now. Could we not bring them back home for national defense and save millions of these dollars for other and useful purposes?

I wish to make again the statement I made to Members last year—that by maintaining this useless and idle army in the Philippine Islands it presents a menace and real obstacle to the independence and freedom for the Filipino people—a freedom and independence which I believed we helped to celebrate in Manila last year. Certainly we could help the Filipino people by removing this idle army and at the same time divert some of this money which we are spending there for better use here. I believe we could at least add a little to the appropriations which we need so badly in our farming sections. I cast no reflections on our officers, soldiers, marines, or naval men. I believe we have the best soldiers and sailors in the world. Many of them agree with my argument on this particular subject. Some of those who agree with me have seen much service in the Philippines. The Philippine Constabulary, aided by the Philippine National Volunteers and other Philippine organizations, can protect those islands internally. Let us take our boys home. Let us save this money which is spent uselessly. Let us show the Philippine people that we really meant what we promised when we told them that now they are a free country. Do not let this menace remain in the islands. Give the Filipino people a real chance to practice how to run a republic. By keeping a big army over there these people feel that we do not mean what we say. It remains as an obstacle to their freedom and it spends millions of American taxpayers' dollars uselessly.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. What is the Army doing in the Philippines at the present time?

Mr. STEFAN. As I told my colleague from Wisconsin a year ago, our Army in the islands that we pay for with American taxpayers' money has done nothing there for over 30 years. Philippine people tell me that by maintaining that Army there we create a menace to their real freedom and independence which we promised them. They refer to our trip to the Philippines as a junket. It was a junket if we did not mean it when we promised them independence.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Could the gentleman give us information about what the cost is per year now to maintain the Army in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. STEFAN. I do not have the cost for 1936, but in 1935 the Department informed me the cost would run to many millions of dollars per year. I do not know what it costs to maintain the stations at Olongapo or Cavite. My colleague from Kentucky would perhaps like to know that there are 6,386 enlisted scouts and 52 Philippine Scout officers in the Philippine Islands drawing pay from the United States Treasury. Besides that there are 4,317 American enlisted men and 535 Regular American Army officers in the Philippines drawing pay from the United States Treasury. Besides that there are 55 warrant officers and 42 nurses in the Philippines also drawing pay from the United States Government.

The officers of the Regular Army and the Philippine Scouts for the fiscal year 1935 drew in salary alone $2,056,829. The Army nurses drew $69,469. The warrant officers drew $129,775. The American enlisted men drew $1,680,360. The Philippine Scouts enlisted men drew $1,210,199. This makes a total of $5,146,631 which we pay to our standing army in salaries alone in the Philippine Islands—that in a single fiscal year.

Of course, this does not include the tremendous amount of money we spend every year to transport officers and enlisted men and their families to and from the Philippine Islands, nor does it take in the maintenance of military equipment and buildings and other expenses. These are from figures given me by the Department for 1935, and I am unofficially informed that there has been no reduction this year. I hope the committee in charge of the Army bill will start reducing this useless expense for the next fiscal year. I hope that this will answer the question by the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. Chairman, it is with great seriousness that I call attention of Members of this House to these problems. Knowing that we are spending more than we take into this business which we call the Government, knowing that the Government as such is really the people who sent me here to represent them, knowing that the financial business of these people is critical, knowing that this Government owes close to $40,000,000,000, and still hearing the pleas of honest, hard-working farm men and women who have no feed with which to feed their flocks nor seed with which to plant the new crop, I would be negligent in my duty if I did not make some remonstrance against useless expenditures of any kind.

This discussion has turned somewhat into the army phase of the matter rather than the naval question, but both questions point to the same target. It is for that reason I have diverted. I also wish that the membership would begin studying the various proposed bills which have in mind efficiency and economy. Before I have taken the floor to champion these causes and I pledge my support to any bill which will tend toward combining the Army and Navy under one head of national defense in order that these two competing branches of our defense service can be run efficiently, economically, and become more effective as a real defense service for our great Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I find that at the turn of the century we spent, in round figures, $54,000,000 on the Navy. In 1925 that had increased by 600 percent. In 1930 there was a further substantial increase, and today we are asked to appropriate $528,000,000 for the Navy, which is $220,000,000 more than was carried in the appropriation bill of 10 years ago. I believe in adequate preparedness, but I am wondering what country we are arming against. We have thought for years and years that with 3,000 miles of sea on each side of us we were relatively safe, and yet with the constant increase in appropriations for preparedness it makes one wonder where it is going to stop. I am informed that the Army bill will call for something like $300,000,000, which will mean a total of nearly $900,000,000 for preparedness for the fiscal year 1938. When I first came to this body there was an annual expenditure in round figures of about a thousand million dollars for the entire operation of the Government, and now we are spending 80 percent of that amount in preparedness alone. Are we justified in making these enormous appropriations? For my part, I do not know just what I am going to tell my people upon my return home when they ask me why we have so greatly increased appropriations for preparedness. I am for adequate preparedness, but I have not seen anything that would lead me to believe that it is necessary to make these enormous expenditures at this time. I should like to have a little information on the subject. I should like to know what country we are arming against.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. BIERMANN. On yesterday I asked the same questions I have asked again and again, but nobody has answered them and nobody will. I asked against what nation we are preparing. Nobody answered it. I asked the proponents of this bill to produce the name of a single Army officer or a single Navy officer who will say it is possible for this country to be invaded. I ask that question again, if there are any more jingoes who think they can answer this question. I should like to have it answered. I suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota, when he goes home, that he tell his constituents he voted against the naval appropriation bill, and he will have a clearer conscience, and I think he will have more votes.

ARE WE MEETING OUR RESPONSIBILITY?

Mr. KNUTSON. What disturbs me is the responsibility that rests upon each of us. There is not a man within the sound of my voice who does not want to vote every dollar that is necessary in order to assure the American people that degree of protection that is necessary to their well being. This bill disturbs me. I am not a small-navy man. I believe in appropriating every dollar that is necessary for the protection of this country, but I have not been able to convince myself that the spending of $528,000,000 next year is necessary in order that we may be fully prepared.

PRESIDENT SHOULD CALL DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE

Can it be that we have joined that mad race now going on over in Europe? If so, who is there to call a halt? Why does not the President of the United States call a disarmament conference for a limitation of armaments? I am satisfied there never was a time since the armistice was signed when the powers of the world were more ready to listen to reason in the way of spending money for preparedness.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I will say for the information of the gentleman and other Members present that I am expecting in a few moments to personally offer an amendment to this bill authorizing and requesting the President of the United States to call such a conference. [Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. That is fine.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, if we are going to call a disarmament conference, of course we should do so before this money is expended, because a great many of these vessels will require many years in their construction.

I, for one, want to see my country prepared for all emergencies, but I must confess that I fear we are not going in the right direction. What we need most is an air force—a force of trained airmen and sufficient airplanes to keep away from our shores anyone who would threaten us with invasion.

Let me say to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] that I was here in 1921 when we were considering the question of disarmament.

We had just emerged from the World War—a war which we were told was to end all wars, guarantee the territorial integrity of small nations, and make the world safe for democracy.

We were also told that we were fighting that war to end militarism or military autocracy, which means, when reduced to its final analysis, overgrown naval and military establishments in times of peace, combined with universal compulsory military service and dictatorial powers concentrated into the hands of a few men.

That war had almost exhausted the manhood and resources of this world and had shaken our civilization to its very base. More than 10,000,000 young men, the pick and flower of the world's best manhood, had gone down to nameless graves beneath the sword of modern militarism.

It had placed a crepe on almost every doorknob in Europe, and had left broken hearts, vacant chairs, widows' weeds, and orphaned children in almost every home. It had left every park and public place filled with the maimed, the blind, the wounded and disabled victims of that conflict. It had left the world staggering under burdens of debts that it will take hundreds of years to pay. As someone said, "It had left the depressed people of Europe to struggle up the hill of the future, to stumble, faint, and fall under the cross of taxation upon which they and their children and their children's children were to be crucified."

It had left the world seething with hate and teeming with bitterness, the like of which humanity had never known.

With this horrible experience fresh in mind, Congress called this Disarmament Conference of 1921. Those were eventful days in Washington. The people of a war-weary world were hopefully appealing to the members of that conference, representing the leading nations of the earth, to lead them back into the paths of permanent peace.

That conference met on the 12th of November 1921. There came to Washington at that time the most powerful, the most eloquent, the most influential delegate that ever attended any conference in all the history of the human race—the dead body of the Unknown Soldier—one of those countless thousands of young men whose names disappeared with their bodies as they had gone down in the recent contest for the military supremacy of the world.

He was buried at Arlington the day before this conference met. President Harding, in delivering his address on that occasion, had to have an amplifier, radio service, telephone and telegraph wires to make his voice heard throughout the country. But this delegate of delegates needed no assistance to carry the voiceless eloquence of his silent protest against war, against armament, against militarism throughout the length and breadth of the land, and to find for it a responsive chord at the fireside of every American home.

He was accompanied by one of the world's greatest interpreters, the sorrowing figure of a widowed war mother who had lost a husband and three stalwart sons in the war, and who had come 3,000 miles to place a wreath upon his bier. If there were people who could not appreciate his appeal, or who did not realize the sacrifice he had made, they could not fail to understand when they looked upon her withered form and saw his message translated into terms of a mother's sacrifice and a mother's love.

He was given a great reception, such as few kings, princes, or potentates have ever received or ever deserved. The procession down Pennsylvania Avenue surpassed all description, and the floral tributes coming from every quarter of the globe have probably never been equaled.

More than 50,000 people bowed in reverence as he was consigned to his last resting place of vantage in Arlington Cemetery. He had set the stage for the disarmament conference, and, we might say, had delivered the welcome address.

The next day the conference convened. I attended every session. In the words of Irvin Cobb, "I had a reserved seat at the greatest show on earth." Seated around the conference table were the chosen representatives of the leading nations of the world, while back of them sat the foreign diplomats, heads of the various armies and navies, other ranking officials and visiting dignitaries without number.

Secretary Hughes was chosen as chairman, and proceeded to deliver the welcome address. He did not argue, but confined himself to the statement of a concrete proposition for a limitation of armaments that, if properly carried out, would have meant the permanent peace of the world. He did not need to argue the case. That had already been done by the silent delegates at Arlington, whose mute but thrilling message had touched the heart and awakened the conscience of a war-torn civilization. His appeal had been heard at last, and by it he had possibly ushered in a new day, when war between civilized nations might cease, at least for years to come, and when the great burdens of taxation which wars and armaments entail might be lifted from the masses of the world.

But it seems now that times have changed. The sacrifices of the last war are being forgotten and the world seems to be preparing for another conflict which might spell the end of civilization. America should keep out of it; and in order to keep out of it, instead of building these enormous battleships we should build up our air force and prepare to defend our country from invasion, and should then keep our nationals out of the war zone.

If we enter a mad race of naval armament instead of leading the world in the paths of peace, we might contribute to another conflict that would wreck what civilization we have left and bankrupt every nation on earth, including our own.

At that time we had in the United States Army one of the great men of this world, Gen. "Billy" Mitchell, who has now passed away, and who deserves the lasting gratitude of every human being on American soil. [Applause.] He pointed out then that what we needed was an air force, and said he could destroy any vessel afloat from the air. They put on a bombing contest to test out General Mitchell's statement, and the air force destroyed every vessel they shot at. Finally they said, "Oh, well, airplanes can destroy these small vessels, but suppose we brought a real war vessel out. What effect do you think the air force would have?" He told them to bring it out, and they did. They brought out the biggest one we captured during the World War, an interned German ship called the Ostfriesland. The Republicans were in power then, and they set the day for that test, on the very day Congress had set to vote on the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill, so that Congressmen could not go.

That was very appropriate; for nothing has done more to perpetuate this mad race for armament than the muzzling of General Mitchell by his superiors in the War Department, and nothing has done more to wreck the peace and prosperity of this world than did the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act.

So they came out with the Ostfriesland. The first bomb missed it. The next one went down by the side of it, and as one man said blew a hole in it in which you could have rolled a dwelling house. The Ostfriesland turned over, and the third plane dropped a bomb right on top of it, and they have not seen it since. [Applause.]

You can build all the battleships you want to, but when it comes to modern warfare with a modern air force they will be absolutely helpless.

We have not an adequate air force. I will probably offend some Army and Naval officers when I tell you that our air force is wholly inadequate and far behind the other branches of the service. This was clearly demonstrated a year or two ago when we had to cancel the air-mail contracts and call on the Army to fly the mails. They were not able to do it, and we had to call them off.

Every morning at 3 o'clock there passes my window a young man who flies the mails. If we were to get into a war, I would rather have that man defend my home or my town or our shores than to have a dozen antiquated ground officers trying to run the air force who do not know anything about flying. This may be pretty plain language, but I am telling you how I feel.

Why this mad race for armament? I will tell you why. Trade is the international lifeblood of civilization. When you raised these tariff walls and shut out foreign trade you threw great bodies of people in foreign countries out of their supply of raw materials. Today they are crying and begging for raw materials, yet farms in America that produce raw materials are being sold for taxes. When you passed that tariff bill you killed our foreign trade and made enemies of our former friends.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. For a question; yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman is aware that this administration is negotiating trade agreements with almost all the large countries in the world. Has not that brought about the sad condition in this country of which he complains?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Minnesota does not know the facts. He is misinformed or uninformed. As a matter of fact, we have made these treaties with only a few countries. We have not touched the real trouble yet, but we are going to before we stop. What I am driving at, however, is that you are not going to be at peace with the world unless you trade with the world. Just as surely as the world stands, when you raise a tariff wall and say to the world, "You cannot trade with us", right then you make enemies. These trade treaties that are being negotiated by Cordell Hull are doing more to eliminate international bitterness toward the United States than anything else that has transpired since 1921. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield for a question.

Mr. RICH. I think the gentleman's statement would be all right, providing we let all the foreign countries get all advantages of the agreements and all the gains that might come from these agreements. Sooner or later the American laborer, the American farmer, and the manufacturer, and the American people in general will find it was a sorry day on which America entered into these agreements for which Secretary Hull and President Roosevelt are assuming the responsibility, a responsibility that the gentleman from Mississippi and the other Members of Congress should assume as Members of Congress. That power as per the Constitution was vested in Congress before the abdication of the Congress to Mr. Roosevelt.

Mr. RANKIN. O Mr. Speaker, as I have said before, nothing dies harder than an old regime. [Laughter.]

We are legislating for the future. I do not want to go against the committee—I want to go with them—but I submit that we must change our policy with reference to the subject of armaments.

We are changing our international policy. Instead of the world condemning Cordell Hull, he is acclaimed as one of the greatest benefactors of mankind, because he is undoing some of the iniquitous tariff policies for which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] voted and for which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] now raises his voice in praise. [Applause.]

In addition to opening up international trade and restoring the peace of mankind we should readjust and overhaul our entire defense system and build up an air force instead of building cumbersome naval vessels. We may use the Panama Canal for purposes of illustration. At one end of the Panama Canal we have some 9-inch guns on top of a mountain. Under what is known as the thumb rule, those guns are supposed to shoot 1 mile on a level for every inch in diameter. When they were put there they were fine, but what would they be worth now against airplanes coming from a carrier 50 miles away?

We should let the world understand that no power on earth can ever invade America. But, instead of pouring money by the hundreds of millions of dollars into the coffers of the steel trust, the armor-plate manufacturers, and the munitions trust, we should build an air force and train an air personnel that could take care of America under any and all circumstances. Then we should open up the channels of trade and resume our leadership among the nations of the earth. We will then be doing more to perpetuate the peace of mankind than we will by spending these vast sums of money and laying keels for vessels that will not only be obsolete before they are finished but which will be obsolete before they are begun. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to get a little information from the chairman of the subcommittee. The information I want, if he can give it to me, and I am sure he can, is as follows: It has been stated in the debate that since 1933 the Navy Department has received in excess of $250,000,000 out of the money appropriated by Congress to the W. P. A. for relief purposes; that is, since 1933, probably when the first appropriation was made. I would like to be informed about that, if the gentleman will give me the information.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I shall be glad to give to the gentleman such information as I have. It is my recollection that since 1933 approximately $293,000,000 out of emergency funds has been allocated for use by the Navy Department.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Is it contemplated that in addition to this $528,000,000 we are now appropriating to the Navy, the Navy expects to use any of the money that Congress has recently appropriated for W. P. A. purposes?

Mr. UMSTEAD. It is my understanding that the Navy Department does not expect to receive any of the money recently appropriated.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASSINGALE. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. But that $293,000,000 was used on projects, was it not?

Mr. UMSTEAD. The $238,000,000, or approximately that sum, was used for the original construction program in connection with the enlargement of the Navy. That embraced, as I recall it, 32 ships and was applied to the construction of those ships. The balance of the funds were used throughout the Naval Establishment at shore stations and at other places to enable the program to be effectively carried out and in order that work could be given to those who were the unfortunate victims of the depression.

Mr. McCORMACK. As I understand it, the funds used, for example, from the W. P. A. allocation were for projects in navy yards, in navy training stations, or in shore establishments where work relief labor was employed? That was in the program?

Mr. UMSTEAD. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. McCORMACK. My purpose in asking these questions is so that there might not be any charge that there was a wild conspiracy on foot to capture this W. P. A. money. This money was used in connection with work projects.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts there was submitted to the committee a complete statement of the allocation of emergency funds, and any Member of Congress may see that statement by calling on the clerk of the committee.

Mr. McCORMACK. And the Navy Department, in connection with these work projects, did what other regular establishments did?

Mr. UMSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, may I say to the gentleman from Massachusetts I was not indulging in any wild speculation or any attempt to reflect upon the policy of the Navy Department. I am just as much in favor of a strong national defense as is the gentleman from Massachusetts. My position is that I do not believe it ought to be the policy of the Navy, the Army, or any other branch of the Government of the United States to deplete the money which Congress has appropriated for the relief of destitute people in the Midwest section of the United States, and that was the only object I had in asking the chairman of the subcommittee the question.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, may I say to the gentleman that the interpretation he made on the words I used is a reasonable one, but one that I did not intend. If the gentleman will look at the RECORD tomorrow, he will realize my question in no way was directed at himself, but at what might be construed to be the answers to the questions, unless the statements of the chairman were amplified by showing that the money was in the main used for work relief projects.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. The gentleman from Massachusetts made the statement the $290,000,000 that was diverted from relief funds to the Army and Navy was used for the purpose of giving people work. Would not that have resulted in the employment of labor just as much if it had been used for the building of schools and homes?

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman's question answers itself. The fact remains an explanation was asked as to the purposes for which the $290,000,000 was used, and an explanation was partially given. I made inquiry to break the figure down. The result is that the Navy Department has done what other regular establishments of the Government have done. They have created projects to enable us to carry out effectively the W. P. A. program, and the main beneficiaries have been those who were the unfortunate victims of the depression.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. While the gentleman is breaking down those figures, let us break them away down to the bottom. How much of the $293,000,000 was used for actual relief work or wages and how much was used to buy plates for some of these ships or to buy armament material?

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman can ask the chairman of the subcommittee in his own time. The questions I asked of the gentleman satisfied my inquiry.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. GRISWOLD. May I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, if he knows, whether it is a fact that the contracts let under this W. P. A. money, such as the ones let to the Camden shipyards, were let on competitive bids, the same as all other naval contracts?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I may state to the gentleman that every contract let to a shipbuilding company has to be let on competitive bids. Contracts or allocations made to navy yards do not have to be on competitive bids.

Mr. GRISWOLD. There was no distinction in the method by which this money was expended and any other money that was used for the same purposes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. None at all.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I do this for the purpose of asking the gentleman from North Carolina, the chairman of the subcommittee, a question.

I note the gentleman stated that the committee is recommending that the President call a disarmament conference——

Mr. UMSTEAD. The gentleman misunderstood me. I did not make that statement. I said that I proposed to offer the amendment. It is not a committee amendment and no one has any responsibility for it but myself.

Mr. DOWELL. As I understood, it was the committee that intended to recommend it.

Mr. UMSTEAD. No.

Mr. DOWELL. May I further suggest, in view of the possibility that a conference may be called, why should we pass this enormous building program at this time, at least not until we ascertain if a disarmament conference may be called and this vast expenditure avoided?

Mr. UMSTEAD. Of course, I think the answer to the gentleman's question is apparent. In the first place, I think we should do well to hope to be able to hold the building of navies somewhere about the limits fixed by the recently expired treaties. If we could accomplish that much through another conference, we should be going a long way toward solving the international problem of armaments; but I do not even have the hope that we could accomplish by any conference a reduction to the limits contained in the treaties which existed prior to December 31, 1936; and let me repeat here that this bill does not provide for any item of expense which was not contemplated by the limitations imposed by those treaties.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman will recall that in the other disarmament conference we did scrap a number of vessels that were in building process.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I hope the gentleman will not get the impression, when I introduce my amendment, that it can possibly entail any repetition of what happened to this country as a result of the Washington conference.

Mr. DOWELL. But should not the gentleman proceed slowly now with this appropriation? This money is greatly needed for other purposes at the moment, and should we not wait until it is determined whether or not such a conference may be successful that we may be able to avoid this vast expenditure?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I cannot agree with that position.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $7,978,153, to be accounted for as one fund: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $80,000.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. UMSTEAD: Page 49, after line 22, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"That the President of the United States is authorized and requested to invite the Governments of Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, and Russia, and any other governments which, in the judgment of the President should be invited, to send representatives to a conference for the purpose of entering into an agreement or understanding by which the naval expenditures and building programs of each of such Governments may be substantially reduced upon such terms as may be agreed upon, which understanding or agreement is to be reported to the respective Governments for approval."

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I have previously stated that the amendment just read is being offered by me on my own responsibility. It is not a committee amendment. I have consulted no authority of the administration. I have consulted none of the leaders of the House. I am offering the amendment on my own initiative because, in the pursuance of what I deem to be my duty, I am anxious to see to it, so far as I can, that every effort is made by this Nation of ours to achieve, if possible, in this hour of international difficulty, some limitation on the rising cost of the building of armaments.

I do not agree with any of the gentlemen who are undertaking, since I mentioned this amendment, to create the impression that the fact of its being offered should be taken into consideration in connection with amounts of money in the bill now before the Committee. On the other hand, I do not see how any person now on this floor or in the Congress, whether he be for a big navy or a little navy, can possibly have any objection to the amendment. I cannot see how any citizen can object to this amendment. It may do no good, Mr. Chairman—I do not know. It may not be the means of accomplishing anything—I do not know. I hope and I fervently pray that it may.

If by the calling of a conference some such limitations as existed prior to the termination of the Washington and London Treaties might be arrived at by the leading nations of the earth, then, certainly, this effort would be thoroughly justified.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, the amendment is no one's suggestion but my own, and I am speaking with the authority of no person connected with the Congress or the administration. I offer it as my effort and my suggestion, to see if some way cannot be found whereby some limit may be fixed upon the cost of armaments. I trust that the amendment meets with the approval of every Member on this floor. [Applause.]

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question in order to secure some information. Considering our past experience with other nations, does the gentleman expect that we could have any consideration, even if we had such an arrangement? If we had such an agreement, does the gentleman believe it would be worth anything to us after we got it?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I am not undertaking to look into the future and prophesy.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Do we have to look into the future? Does the gentleman at this time feel that the word of nations who repudiate their indebtedness to this country is good?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I feel justified in thinking that in men or nations there is always something good if it can be aroused.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I certainly agree with the gentleman, if we have men to deal with; otherwise not.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, I arise in opposition. If a man breaks his word to you once, it is his fault or it is your fault, but if he does it the second time, it is your own fault, because you have given him an opportunity to do so. In principle I agree with the gentleman's idea. It is a good thing for the nations of the world to sit down in conference and endeavor to limit armament if they can. Facing the matter, not academically, but as it is, it seems to me idle and foolish and a foolish waste of time for us to endeavor to get the nations of the world together again in any kind of a conference to limit armament, when it has been incontrovertibly proved by recent facts of history that the words of these nations unfortunately are not good.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS. May I finish this first? I believe the United States of America should adopt an adequate naval policy, a policy as regards military and naval service that it thinks adequate; and I think we should "stick to our knitting" and build up our own defenses and let the rest of the world take care of itself, knowing that the word of the statesmen of the rest of the world is no good. I now yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Can the gentleman point out to this Committee in what particular any nation which signed the Washington or the London Treaty failed to live up to either treaty?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I was not referring to that. I was referring to the general proposition of treaty breaking in the world today, wherever we look at it.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I am dealing with armament-limitation treaties; and the Washington and London Treaties are the two with which we have had experience. If the gentleman knows of any respect in which the nations signatory to those treaties failed to live up to them, I should like to have that information.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Answering the gentleman, if I know that John Smith has a reputation as a word breaker, I am just a fool if I put myself in his power by sitting down in conference with him. This is the condition regarding the nations of the world today. I repeat that I am very much against this amendment. I believe we should have our own policy and stick to it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. UMSTEAD] has been frank in stating that this amendment is offered by himself, without having had consultation with any member of the administration and without consultation, indeed, with the leaders of the House. I would not for one moment impugn his motives. He is looking toward an ideal which rests in the hearts of a great many people, but a thing of this sort should not be embarked upon without a good deal of exploring of the field in advance. I think the House, if I may be impertinent enough to say so, is scarcely prepared to vote "yes" or "no" upon an amendment of such supreme importance in the foreign relations of the United States. If the House is to propose in this fashion an international conference looking toward a limitation in naval armaments, it seems to me that such a measure should come to us from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which committee will have a chance to discuss, for example, with the Secretary of State of the United States, the wisdom of embarking on such an undertaking. If I may criticize the offering of such an amendment today, it is on this ground: That is is thrown too suddenly into the House. It is already apparent that some Members distrust its efficacy. No one has had a chance to secure in advance from those who manage the international relations of the United States any information in respect to it. I think this is not the time to attempt such a thing, and I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order comes too late; debate has proceeded upon the amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. This is a very unusual amendment. None of us but are in accord with the spirit of the amendment, but this is one of the most unusual situations I have seen since I have been a Member of the House during the last 9 years—a chairman in charge of a bill in his own individual right suddenly offering to the House an amendment that nobody has given consideration to. The gentleman's action is completely inconsistent with his utterances in the early part of the consideration of this bill when two or three Members of the House offered amendments. In an argument against these amendments he said they had not been presented to the members of the Subcommittee on Appropriations; they had not received consideration; therefore, for that reason, in the main, the amendments offered should be defeated.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] offered an amendment, and in part the argument was advanced against his amendment; and the argument appealed to me. Another gentleman, prior to that amendment, offered an amendment, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY] mildly defended the right to offer the amendment, and undertook to meet the argument of the chairman of the subcommittee. I felt as the chairman of the subcommittee felt, yet the gentleman himself suddenly offers an amendment of great import, an amendment of great seriousness, without any consideration, without even the subcommittee considering it in executive session. He not only seeks to "authorize" but he "requests" the President of the United States to do something that he has a right to do without this amendment, and which under the Constitution, in the performance of his duty, he should do.

We must remember that only a few months ago we had a conference in London. It was not due to any lack of effort on the part of the representatives of our country that that conference was a failure.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It must be apparent to every Member of the House that the amendment is not germane, yet nobody rose in his place to raise a point of order that the amendment is not germane. Here comes an amendment that has no relation to the paragraph marked "Marine Corps Reserves", yet nobody rose in his place to raise a point of order. The gentleman from Massachusetts had his opportunity——

Mr. McCORMACK. Is the gentleman from Illinois undertaking to censure the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No, indeed. I am simply telling the gentleman that he could have stood in his place and raised the point of order.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Massachusetts is as well acquainted with the rules as the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think he is better acquainted with them.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not admit that. The gentleman from Massachusetts knew he could have raised a point of order, but I was willing to have the amendment offered and considered on the floor of this House.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Very well.

Mr. McCORMACK. Does the gentleman from Illinois recognize that the gentleman from Massachusetts has a right to do that?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes. I say nobody stood in his place and raised a point of order.

Mr. McCORMACK. I want to address myself to the chairman of the subcommittee. Has the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. UMSTEAD] placed himself in the embarrassing position of offering something that he has argued against previously in debate when other amendments were offered which had not been considered by the committee?

Mr. UMSTEAD. Oh, I do not think so. I do not think the gentleman's premise is correct in drawing his analogy.

Mr. McCORMACK. Wherein is the gentleman incorrect?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I rose to ask the gentleman now having the floor a question. If he will be so kind as to answer, then I will undertake to answer his question. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCORMACK. If the gentleman is going to ask me a question——

Mr. UMSTEAD. I do not desire to be technical about it.

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, we understand.

Mr. UMSTEAD. This amendment carries no appropriation; does not affect any appropriation at this time. It is a matter about which every Member of the House entertains his own opinion. It is a simple proposition of requesting the President to call such a conference. It is not mandatory.

Mr. McCORMACK. Has not the President got that power? I realize all those things. I did not yield to the gentleman to make a speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. I now yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Now, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact, and I am sure he simply has overlooked it, that the Washington conference was called by an amendment to a naval appropriation bill, and it appears in the bill just as I have offered it here. I have not followed the exact language of the amendment that was included in the naval appropriation bill preceding the Washington conference. I have made some changes in it. That conference was based on an amendment in a naval appropriation bill and did not come out of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I have followed the precedents of the House about this matter.

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, the gentleman does not need to get excited, because I am not.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I am not excited.

Mr. McCORMACK. Now, let me ask the gentleman: Does the gentleman know whether or not the Member who offered that amendment offered it without consulting anyone?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I do not.

Mr. McCORMACK. Does the gentleman know whether he consulted the other members of the committee or the President of the United States at that time?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I do not.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from North Carolina has done nothing of that kind, has he?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I have not, and I have so stated three times.

Mr. McCORMACK. I know; and the gentleman is chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I stated that I was introducing this amendment on the basis of my own initiative and on the basis of my own individual responsibility as a Member of this House. [Applause.] No Member of this House loses that responsibility by virtue of membership on any committee. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is adhering strictly to a right; but when he acts as chairman of a committee and brings in a report of the committee the gentleman cannot act strictly in the same way he would were he not chairman of the committee. He has certain responsibilities imposed upon him by reason of being in charge of a bill. That responsibility is to protect the report of the committee and not suddenly inject into the debate or into the bill an amendment which has never been considered by the committee. Under a strict interpretation of the rules, of course, the gentleman can do it, but that is hardly compatible with his responsibility as chairman of the subcommittee. I feel justified in thinking that the gentleman should not have done it. [Applause.]

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Replying to the gentleman, I may state that I realize I have not been chairman of a subcommittee very long. This is the first year I have undertaken to labor in such capacity.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman has done a wonderful piece of work, and I compliment him.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I am not certain that I am familiar with all of the proprieties and niceties incident to the chairmanship of a committee, but I have had no rebuke so far with reference to my relationship with my committee.

This is a matter that is not in this bill. This is a matter that is not considered in this report. This is a matter that could be offered by way of amendment on most any bill under consideration. Why, then, do I not as an individual Member of this House have the right—not to take advantage of the House or any member of my committee—to offer on this bill or any bill an amendment to express something which I think may have in it some possibility of good and have it considered unless it is ruled out on a point of order?

Mr. McCORMACK. Is the gentleman through?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I am for the present.

Mr. McCORMACK. I reiterate what I previously said, that the gentleman from North Carolina has done the very thing that he has indirectly criticized other Members for doing. He has suddenly offered an amendment which has not been considered by the committee, an amendment which he has not even taken up with any of the leaders of the House, an amendment on which he has not consulted the President of the United States.

How do I, as a Democrat—and I am talking now to the Democratic side, and I favor personally the purpose of the amendment—know whether the President of the United States wants that amendment in the bill at this particular time? The gentleman from North Carolina is no more strongly in favor of peace than I am. The gentleman from North Carolina is no more strongly in favor of a limitation of armaments than I am. My friend from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN] and I agree in the principle, although we disagree honestly as to the method, that there should be a sharp reduction in armaments.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Although we may be in disagreement as to some matters, I have profound respect for their position and for the right of those Members to entertain the views that they do; but how do I know that the President of the United States wants this amendment in the bill? I would vote for it, I would propose it, I would espouse it as strongly as any man in the House if I knew he wanted it; but I do not know whether the President of the United States, who is my President—and if I may without being misunderstood by my Republican friends—he is the leader of my party. I want to know, first, whether he wants it, whether it is going to embarrass him or not.

I am not opposed to the objectives of this amendment, but I do not know whether it is wise at this time. I feel that I am speaking in vain. I feel that the amendment will be adopted, but I do not know whether it is going to be wise. After its adoption, if it proves to be embarrassing, I know that other Members of the House, particularly other Democrats, will regret that the amendment was so suddenly offered.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, so that all of us may get a clear picture of the proposed amendment, that it be again read by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again read the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in all the years I have served as a Member of the House, there has not been a man for whose character, for whose ability, and for whose gentlemanly qualities I have more respect than I do for the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. UMSTEAD], and what I shall say at this time I want it understood is in no way a criticism of him for offering this amendment. In my individual capacity as a Member of this House, I believe I should state that the amendment presented at this time for consideration is a mistake. Whether we vote this amendment up or down, in my opinion, we may be misunderstood. Therefore I am going to suggest that for the present at least, upon an amendment as far reaching as this may become, there should be consultation, not only in committees but with those who are in responsible positions in the executive departments of the Government, to find the situation we are now in and whether or not matters of this sort have been considered by the executive and the administrative departments of the Government. If a vote is demanded upon this very important and far-reaching as well as very vital question, I trust the Members of the House will vote it down.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, so the record may be clear, I am in favor of adequate national defense, if and until a peace resolution is adopted by all nations; but at this time, if the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee will agree to withdraw his amendment, I have a joint resolution prepared which I will introduce today which requests that the President call a conference of the leading nations when and if said resolution is adopted by Congress.

Mr. Chairman, prompted by an honest desire to do something effective toward achieving universal peace, I have taken this responsibility in the hope that, regardless of party lines, the Members of Congress will have the courage to face the issue and that abler and more experienced men than I may be induced to carry this fight to a successful conclusion.

In presenting this resolution I dare to take the first step in the conviction that the will for permanent peace burns in every human breast and that the greatest number of inhabitants of the earth do not want war but peace. Given their choice and the chance to express that choice, the inarticulate population would vote solidly against war.

Mr. Chairman, the issue before the world is peace or war. Recent legislative measures in all countries of the world call for increased armament with increased taxes, creating an enormous burden on every nation and provoking a spark that will kindle into a flame in the future on the scale that will endanger the economic structure of civilization and destroy one-half of the population of the entire world by the new science of warfare. For me, I choose not to participate or even be living to face the disasters that will be the after effects of the next war.

It is my plan by the resolution that I shall present to this Congress today for adoption which, if adopted by the world, we shall once and forever remove the hazards of war. The plan in its conception is audacious but workable, providing its execution is intrusted to a supreme tribunal of experts.

The rank and file not only in this country desire peace but the entire world, and in my opinion the propaganda for the financiers and war lords can be credited for having a large part in having brought about every war, and it is important that our people should not overlook problems and issues which, though they lie beyond our borders, have a vital influence on the United States; and I hope that envy, hatred, and malice among nations have reached their peak and will be succeeded by a new tide of peace and good will. Therefore I hold it is fitting at this time that this Congress will unanimously adopt this proposed resolution of peace. The American Republics to the south of us have already been ready to cooperate with the United States on a basis of equality and neutral respect, and may I say the 21 Republics are not only living together in peace now but are united in determining that peace shall continue.

Mr. Chairman, I hate war. Millions have marched behind the banner, never to return to see loved ones again; thousands returned from war wounded, to find homes and property destroyed, mothers and children passed on to the beyond while they were away in war, never to see them again, and in a dying hour children crying to see their dad once more.

Mr. Chairman, industrial and agricultural production for a war market give immense fortune to a few, but for a nation as a whole it produces disaster, indebtedness, loss of lives, and destroys common understanding of peace and happiness that we all so well cherish.

Too, I would have you to know that the cost of war is almost beyond figures, and at this time I will not undertake to show the total billions of dollars that war has cost, not only to this great Nation but the entire world, and will only cite to your knowledge the demand that is now being made by all governments for larger and greater appropriations to increase the army, navy, and air forces, as there seems to be an increased rivalry between nations to own the greatest military forces that shall in the near future entangle the entire world in the greatest war that will ever be known. Too, I would have you to know that war not only results in loss of property and lives but destroys the very foundation of democracy, which guarantees life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness to all men, and in return supplants dictatorial government, with vast amount of feudalism following, which results in many years of trial and error to rebuild the losses sustained in the pestilence that follow and cannot be denied.

War helps to create a greater gulf between the well-to-do and the poor, inasmuch as history has proven that the poor bare the burden of taxation and the ill-gained wealth of war accumulates in the hands of a few. As a result a drainage system is created whereby the poor are forced to work longer hours and at small wages, being undernourished, to help meet the financial burdens that are placed upon them directly and indirectly by governments, whereas at the same time the ill-gained wealth of the rich finances the government, whereby the rich benefit from the laborer and taxpayer indirectly inasmuch as the rich reap interest from money loaned to the government and the taxpayer pays the bills.

Too, war broods prejudice, envy, and hatred against the opposing nation which continues to exist after the war is ended; and when an indifference exists between nations, the honesty of that nation is distrusted and, with the same result, breaks down the common understanding of business, which, in turn, is crippled, bringing about unemployment, resulting in a financial depression, which has very well been proven in history—that after each war follows a depression.

Not only do economic conditions become impaired but social unrest usually breeds in the minds of the people, that cost the Government invariably billions of dollars, usually spent in ways that will not in return be collected but instead a loss to the Government. In fact, in an indirect manner, windstorms of the West are true and simple results of the recent World War, as during the war there was a great demand for raw products, such as grains, cotton, and fruits. Therefore, a demand and scarcity fixes prices. Since there was a great demand, there was a trend among the laboring class to put into cultivation greater numbers of acres of land; and, if you please, the great plains of the West were turned into productive fields of grain, with the result of the lowering of the water level, leaving the fields barren, with nothing but alluvial soil, to be easily gathered by the westerly winds, that has of recent years cost the taxpayers of this country untold millions of dollars; and if the demand in the recent war had not been so great for raw products, the grassy plains would not have been turned into fields of grain.

And, in conclusion, the billions of dollars that are now being appropriated for military purposes would instead be appropriated on education, making it possible for the unfortunate boys and girls of society to receive a vocational education—not based on their pocketbooks but their brains.

Mr. Chairman, I trust this House adopts this resolution calling upon the President to invite representatives of all governments to a conference in Washington to consider total disarmament and to create a permanent world-peace tribunal, inasmuch as the world today is an armed camp, and contrary to the law of Almighty God and fundamental principles of humanity and reason, which solemnly affirm that nations, as well as individuals, should live in peace one with the other. The world today presents a picture wherein each nation is striving its utmost to outdo its neighbor in preparing for war; therefore huge sums of money which could best be used in the relief of suffering, in the advancement of industrial progress and science, and which represents a staggering burden of taxation on all people, have been voted and are being spent to increase navies and air forces, equip armies with every conceivable weapon of destruction, and to construct fortifications, all of which constitute a menace to the peace of the world and to the lives of every man, woman, and child, threatening the very foundation of the social structure, and must inevitably result in the degeneration of the human race.

Mr. Chairman, previous efforts to assure permanent world peace have failed because the proponent governments lack the courage to face the issue squarely and refuse to consider the only effective measure, that of total disarmament; therefore it is my firm belief that the citizens of the United States of America detest war and are anxious to do everything humanly possible to prevent it; and with the conviction that this Nation possesses the moral courage to invite other nations to send their representatives to this country, with full instructions to discuss sincerely and free from all diplomatic restraint the only certain means whereby war can be forever abolished from the earth, we call upon the President to invite all governments to send their accredited representatives to Washington within 1 year for the purpose of considering total disarmament and to lay the foundations for world peace on a formula based upon the following articles:

First. The solemn affirmation by each government, as a fundamental principle of government, that war between nations is forever outlawed.

Second. The creation of a permanent world peace tribunal.

Third. The total scrapping of all existing naval and air forces and the disbanding of all military forces, with the exception of small naval, air, and military units, to be used by each country for police and patrol purposes exclusively and within its own borders.

Fourth. The prohibition by all governments of the manufacture and sale by private interests within their respective borders, of all war weapons, and the regulation by each government of the manufacture of explosives for industrial purposes.

Fifth. The complete severance of all trade relations and the application of a rigid boycott against any government which violates the above articles or resorts to warlike measures after such government has been cited and found guilty by the permanent world peace tribunal.

Sixth. The creation of a world peace army and navy—including air forces—to be of adequate strength, so as to insure right observance of world neutrality.

Seventh. The establishing of a neutral state to serve as barracks and munitions center for the world peace army and navy, including air forces.

Eighth. Enlisted men and financial appropriations to be allocated by each country based upon population and wealth.

Ninth. Before the peace tribunal shall come for trial and punishment all violations of the world peace pact.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I am reluctant to take the floor a second time upon this proposition, but feel impelled to do so. I applaud the gentleman from North Carolina for offering this amendment asking the President to call a disarmament conference. It is not an amendment that changes the context of the bill. It merely adds to it. It was not necessary for the gentleman from North Carolina to consult anyone in advance before offering the amendment. He did so upon his own responsibility as a Member of this House.

This bill is going to another body after it has been acted upon here. If we adopt the amendment and it should subsequently be found not desirable, it may be stricken out by the other body, whereas if we fail to take action this afternoon we are not certain we will have another opportunity to make a suggestion or offer an amendment of this kind.

AMERICA MUST LEAD

I feel it is incumbent upon America to take the lead in stopping this mad race of armaments. The amendment the gentleman offers proposes to call a conference to that end of all the great powers of the world. There never was a time when there existed a greater need for counsel among the nations of the earth than right now, and the sooner this conference is called and the sooner deliberations are begun, the more money will be saved to the various governments, provided an agreement is reached. I sincerely hope a vote may be had upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina, and I hope he will insist upon a record vote. The amendment should be adopted, and if it is later found contrary to the President's policy or otherwise, the other body may strike it out. If this amendment fails, I shall offer a concurrent resolution asking the President to ask the powers to send representatives to a disarmament conference in Washington. I shall vote against reducing the amount carried in this appropriation bill so that we will have plenty of trading stock if and when we meet representatives of the other powers in an arms-limitation conference, such as I shall propose before we adjourn this evening.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU and Mr. RICH) there were—ayes 66, noes 81.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

REPLACEMENT OF NAVAL VESSELS

Construction and machinery: On account of hulls and outfits of vessels and machinery of vessels heretofore authorized (and appropriated for in part), and for the commencement of the following vessels authorized by the act approved March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 503–505): Eight destroyers and four submarines, $90,000,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of the amount available for expenditure under the head of "Construction and machinery" for the fiscal year 1938 for employees in the field service assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the schedule of wages for civil employees in the field service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $4,570,000: Provided further, That not to exceed $390,000 of the amount available for expenditure under the head of "Construction and machinery" for the fiscal year 1938 shall be available for the purchase and installation of test boilers for navy yards engaged in new construction: Provided further, That, of the appropriations made available by this act under the head of "Replacement of naval vessels", there shall be available such sums as the Secretary of the Navy may from time to time determine to be necessary for the engagement of technical services, and the employment of personnel in the Navy Department and in the field, the purchase of plans, drafting and other supplies, and the expenses of printing and travel, in addition to those otherwise provided for, owing to the construction of vessels which have been, or may hereafter be authorized.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana: Page 50, line 4, under the heading "Replacement of naval vessels", strike out "$90,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$74,821,000."

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have just offered takes away the appropriation that is provided for the construction of battleships. A distinguished Member of this House a while ago stated that he represented an agricultural district. I likewise represent an agricultural district. Our cattlemen, sheepmen, and farmers are in dire need of feed for themselves and their stock. Our people are suffering.

May I read the words of the chairman of the subcommittee which he spoke yesterday? I asked him at that time how much of the $168,000,000 was going to be used for the construction of two battleships. Here is his reply:

Fifteen million one hundred and seventy-nine thousand dollars for this year.

I asked him what would be the cost of construction of one battleship, and here is the astounding figure he gave us:

Sixty million one hundred and seventy-three thousand dollars each.

In other words, in the next 4 years the American people, the American taxpayers, the American home owners, the American working people will pay into the coffers of the Steel Trust for the building of these two battleships the sum of $120,000,000 or thereabouts.

In addition to this, Mr. Chairman, as I understand, it will cost in the neighborhood of an equal amount to man and run these ships, and after you build them, what have you? You have something that a bomb dropped from the heavens out of an airplane can sink to the bottom of the ocean, as the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi told you here this afternoon.

Why should we at this time take any money out of the pockets of the taxpayers of this country and sink it into battleships that may be dropped into the ocean by a bomb dropped from an airplane? Any man, it seems to me, who has ever given the subject any thought whatever realizes that if we ever have another war it is going to be fought in the air and not upon the water.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I have only a few minutes and I cannot yield now. I will yield to the gentleman at the end of my remarks if I have the time.

I call your attention further to the fact that we were engaged in a great World War. We entered into it in 1917 and we did not get out of it until nearly 2 years later, and never a single shot was fired by the Navy of the United States in that war. What part did the Navy take in that war? Absolutely no part at all.

I am not in favor of voting taxpayers' money to put into ships to send across the sea and have our flag follow our merchant ships throughout the world or have our boys follow those merchant ships throughout the world.

I stand for adequate defense, Mr. Chairman. I would vote the last dollar we have, I would give the last drop of blood of American manhood and womanhood to drive from our shores, in the language of the immortal Robert Emmet, any foreign enemy that would injure a blade of grass upon our soil, but I will not vote for any money to send ships across the ocean, to England or any other country, to protect them or to protect our shipping interests.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that this amendment, which is a serious one, will be considered and agreed to.

I now yield to my friend. I do not want you to take my word for not a shot being fired and, perhaps, that is what the gentleman is driving at. You can go into the records of a committee where the late Senator Walsh, of Montana, developed this fact at a Senate hearing, in trying to cut down such an appropriation as I am trying to do here this afternoon, when there was a so-called Navy expert upon the stand who was asking the Senate of the United States to appropriate millions and millions of dollars for the construction of ships. He was asked, "Sir, how many shots were fired by the American Navy in the last war?" and he said, "Not a single one."

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. You heard the President of the United States last night when he said one-third of the population of this country is ill-clothed, ill-fed, and ill-housed. Do you want to appropriate in the next 4 years $160,000,000 for two ships that may be dropped to the bottom of the ocean in a minute? In addition to this, do you want to appropriate $160,000,000 more to man these ships for 4 years or 8 years or as long as they last? Do you want to take one-third of a billion dollars out of the taxpayers' pockets with the people of this country in the condition they are, as shown by the President of the United States, and put it into the Steel Trust? Answer that question by your vote upon this amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KOPPLEMANN: Page 50, line 5, after the word "expended", add the following: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the construction of any new battleship or battleships."

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, the provision is clearly a limitation on the appropriation bill, and the Chair, therefore, overrules the point.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, the chief complaint launched against this administration is the enormous expenditure and our unbalanced Budget. In the face of this complaint and our promise to balance the Budget, we plan to enter into a program for building up our Navy, a plan which this year will cost about $528,000,000, if this bill passes.

In the hearings on the naval appropriations bill, Captain Kinnell stated that the total treaty-navy cost this year would be $584,000,000. In addition he recommends an added $9,000,000, as it were, for "leave legislation", making a total of $594,000,000. This sum represents only the normal expense. Last year it was estimated that battleships would cost $51,000,000. This year it is estimated that they will cost $60,000,000. In addition, during the past 10 years we have spent an annual average of $36,000,000 for the upkeep, repair, and maintenance of our battleships.

Under my amendment I propose that we keep what battleships we have, and that we do not build new ones. It has been well stated in the course of the afternoon that battleships do not contribute to the national defense. I reiterate that statement. Something has been said about airplanes. The most expensive bombers cost about $100,000 each. For the cost of one battleship we could proceed with the construction of 600 bombers, any one of which could destroy either of the two battleships contemplated under this bill.

At the present time there are only two ways to balance the Budget: We can cut relief, or we can cut our defense program. While economic conditions have improved, there is still so much distress suffered by millions of people that we should not, we must not, withdraw our relief assistance. But there is no need for entering into so expensive a program for national defense. How dare we cut relief appropriations, ignoring the demand of the people, ignoring the need expressed at the recent conference of Governors of six important States, at which an outcry was made against the cutting of W. P. A., and at the same time think of entering into this expensive Navy program with its unnecessary items of new battleships?

We do not want to impair our national defense, but spending $60,000,000 apiece for battleships is not contributing to our national defense. Our defense program must be limited to defense needs. There is neither reason nor need for our entering into the construction of expensive battleships which, even if war breaks out, will prove inadequate for modern warfare, as they have proven futile in the past.

The President has said that one-third of our Nation is ill-clothed, ill-fed, and ill-housed. There is a crying need for the eradication of slums; for the building of sanitary and safe dwellings. One battleship could take care of the needs of 10,000 families. We have not made a dent in our important housing problem, yet we are considering this measure, which would appropriate $60,000,000 apiece for needless battleships.

The Nation is faced with the pressing problem of flood control. Surveys and investigations have been made of our principal rivers. Plans for flood-control projects have been submitted. Any one of these plans carried out would rid our Nation and its people of one of our most serious internal catastrophes. But these necessary and humane projects are being held up because of the question of dollars and cents.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. For New England, the War Department recommended as a flood-control project the construction of a reservoir system, the total cost of which, including land and damages, would amount to $13,000,000. The Federal Government has agreed to pay $10,000,000 of the cost but insists that the remaining $3,000,000 to cover cost of land and damages be met by the States concerned. Because of this $3,000,000 item, important flood-control projects in New England are being held up. Last year the flood did millions of dollars worth of damage, swept thousands of families from their homes, and wiped out business. Today we face the probable danger of another flood with the spring rains in the offing. But important flood-control projects are held up because of the question of who will pay the additional $3,000,000. These projects would prevent, to a great extent, the ruin which has been visited upon New England in the past. The control of floods presents a much more pressing problem than the construction of a battleship which may never be used for the purpose for which it is intended. Yet today this Congress is considering this enormous appropriation bill for our Navy, which includes the cost of battleships at $60,000,000 apiece.

During recent years the city of Washington has been beautified, prestige has been given to our National Government by the construction of new and beautiful buildings, exemplifying the finest in American architecture. Go along Pennsylvania and Constitution Avenues. You feast your eyes and point with pride to our Commerce, Post Office, Interior, Labor, Justice, Agriculture, and Archives Buildings. Across from the Capitol there is the new and beautiful Supreme Court Building. The total construction of these permanent monuments of our Nation's greatness cost but $79,228,663. With the exception of the Supreme Court and Post Office Buildings, they all could have been built for the cost of one battleship. The cost of these buildings represents the cost of progress and constructive development, but battleships at a cost of $60,000,000 may be beautiful to the sight but only destructive in purpose.

The city of Hartford, Conn., is one of the outstanding capitals in the Nation. Our famous capitol building cost $2,532,524; our municipal building, dignified in its simplicity but symbolic of a thriving and ever-growing financial and industrial center, cost $1,402,170; our Bushnell and Avery memorials, built to foster culture in Hartford, together cost $1,758,000; the Aetna Life Insurance Co., one of the largest concerns in the world, cost $8,282,766. These buildings house good government, culture, and important business. They represent constructive and advancing activities in our Nation's life. Their total cost was $13,975,460. Compare that with $60,000,000 for battleships representing only the destructive ambitions of this great Nation.

The estimated appropriation for the defense needs of our Nation, I maintain, are entirely too high. During the hearings on the bill Mr. UMSTEAD pointed out, during the cross-examination of Admiral Smith, that the Navy estimates have been 25 to 50 percent less than the actual cost. If that is the case, then it is reasonable to expect that other estimates which may be submitted by the Navy Department will be less than the total cost. It is reasonable to expect that the program planned by the Navy Department for this year will be less than the estimated cost mentioned in this bill.

Last year the Navy Department said that a treaty-strength Navy would require an appropriation of $555,000,000 each year. Now they say that they forgot to add a $29,000,000 item. This admission in itself backs up Chairman UMSTEAD's statement that the Navy Department is inclined to pare their estimates below the actual cost.

It is a serious matter when a department requests an appropriation for their program and either purposely misinforms us of the actual cost or is ignorant of the actual cost and at the same time expects us to accept their word as to our actual defense needs. I make that statement in view of the fact that the chairman said on the floor that the Navy Department recommendation was the basis of the committee's report. It seems to me that at least we can cut out of this bill something that is unnecessary, and, therefore, I ask for the adoption of my amendment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words, and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to know that there is one Democrat who has realized that the Budget is not balanced.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Armor, armament, and ammunition: Toward the armor, armament, and ammunition for vessels hereinbefore described under the head of "Construction and machinery", $40,000,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of the amount available for expenditure under this head for the fiscal year 1938 for employees in the field service assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for civil employees in the field service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $1,300,000.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU: Page 51, after line 13, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"No part of any money appropriated by this act shall be used for maintaining any activity or agency that is designed or primarily useful in preparation for or for warfare other than a war of actual defense."

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I believe this amendment presents to the Committee of the Whole an opportunity to express the views of this Congress on the policy that should be pursued by the War Department and the Navy Department, and, of course, in this instance it applies only to the Navy Department, in the matter of warfare and what we mean by adequate national defense. This amendment, if adopted, would prevent the use of any money that is appropriated in this bill to be used in any way to maintain any activity or agency that is designed and primarily useful for any other kind of a war than a war of actual defense. In other words, by the adoption of this amendment the Congress of the United States should be definitely establishing what our policy is to be hereafter in the matter of national defense. There are many people in this country who believe earnestly that the Navy at the present day is being so shaped as to be useful primarily for a foreign or aggressive war; whereas the great masses of the people of this country want preparation, but preparation for defense only.

Not so long ago Secretary of the Navy Swanson stated that the primary purpose of the Navy was to defend our foreign trade and our foreign policy. That may be his idea of what the Navy should be, but the great masses of the American people are opposed to using our Navy for the purpose of defending our foreign trade or our foreign policy.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. Not for the moment, please.

Our neutrality policy in the past couple of years has completely changed the situation in that respect. If we are to adhere to our policy of neutrality, we do not need a navy to enforce our foreign policy. I, for one, am not willing that the young manhood of this country should at any time or any place protect the property or trade of American citizens except right here at home. I submit to you that Admiral Bristol not so long ago, in testifying before the Naval Affairs Committee, said that a navy is not needed and not useful primarily for the purpose of defending our coasts or our harbors. He said for that purpose we use mines, land fortifications, the Air Corps, and submarines. I submit to you that from the standpoint of national defense and from the standpoint of defense only, if there was to be any great emergency in which our fleet might possibly come into contact with the fleet of some other nation, we would probably find the major part of our battleships, particularly, up in the Mississippi River, because the James River would be too close to where they might get hurt.

I submit to you that from the standpoint of national defense only we are wasting a large part of our appropriations, and that a large part of the money we are spending on the Navy is in preparation for a foreign or aggressive war. My amendment, if adopted by this Congress, would establish the policy that we here in this country are building up a navy for defense only, and would show to the world that we do not propose to build up a war machine.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] has expired.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOILEAU. I submit that we can, by taking affirmative action on this amendment, prove to the world that we meant what we said when we agreed with the other nations of the world in the Kellogg Peace Pact outlawing war as an instrumentality for the settlement of international disputes. We can show that we meant what we said, and by adopting this policy of preparedness for defense only, other nations will have a higher regard for our integrity and for our leadership in this peace movement.

I submit to you that if you really believe we should prepare for defense only, you should adopt this amendment. If, on the other hand, you are using this phrase "adequate national defense" merely for the purpose of trying to fool somebody, as many of those who are using that expression in this country today are doing, then you should vote down this amendment. But "adequate national defense" means actual defense. It does not mean preparation for foreign or aggressive wars. My amendment would permit the use of all this money, provided we are building our Navy on a defensive basis and not on the basis of trying to intimidate other nations, or on the basis of trying to build a navy large enough to make our fleet successful in a foreign war in which we have no business.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin may have 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. I should like to ask the gentleman to tell us some of the specific kinds of expenditures that would be excluded if his amendment were adopted.

Mr. BOILEAU. I will try to enumerate them. In the first place, the gentleman here suggests "floating hotels." I was going to say "battleships." I submit to you, if we are to take the testimony of Admiral Bristol, battleships are useless from the standpoint of national defense.

I assume further that we are justified in assuming from the statement of Secretary of the Navy Swanson that these battleships are useful and necessary only from the standpoint of protecting our foreign trade and our foreign commerce and our foreign policy. I submit to you further that if this amendment were adopted, it would no longer be the policy to carry on naval maneuvers that were designed to work out problems that might eventually be fought out in a foreign war. In other words, all of their maneuvers would necessarily be from the standpoint of trying to work out effective defensive machines to protect this country and its possessions.

I submit to you that the entire Navy would be forced to be reorganized, and we would have a better Navy from the standpoint of defensive purposes and it would not cost so much money.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman would exclude construction of battleships and maneuvers in distant waters. What else would he exclude? I think the gentleman ought to be as specific as possible.

Mr. BOILEAU. I will be. It will prevent setting up in the Navy Department all of the various agencies and activities of this Government, all these activities on the part of the planning boards, and so forth, spending so much time and money trying to figure out in advance what problems they might meet in case of a foreign war, and they would devote all of their time to working out problems that would be beneficial in the event we should be attacked.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this is the most inconsistent amendment that could be offered to this bill. It would be just as consistent to pass the bill and then say that we will take the fuel oil away from the ships so that they cannot operate after we build them. To adopt an amendment saying that you can only build ships, you can only train men, where it is necessary for defensive purposes is ambiguous. War is not solely a proposition of defense or training for defense. The gentleman from Wisconsin himself was in the Army. He knows that ever tactician believes that the best defense is an offense, if you can put it on; yet the gentleman by his amendment would say to these men who are out there on the high seas on a boat: "We will put you there, we will put defensive armor on your ships, but you cannot shoot, you cannot learn how to attack the other man; you may only stand there and take it." We have had too much of that up to this date in our Navy, and that is why our Navy is in the shape it is today.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. In all fairness, if the gentleman understood my amendment, I do not think he would say that we could put men on our battleships or cruisers around our coasts to prepare for the defense of our country and then say they could not shoot. That is not contemplated by my amendment at all. I know the gentleman wants to be fair. I submit that this amendment would permit all of the Navy to be used for defensive purposes, but would eliminate this activity of agencies that are designed and are primarily useful for foreign aggressive warfare.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I do understand the gentleman exactly, but I still insist that if his amendment is adopted it would be equivalent to saying they could not train for offense. If you do not train these men for offense as well as defense, then you are putting them out there with cannon loaded with blanks.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman must admit that the amendment does not say we should prepare only for actual defensive operations, but prepare for a war of defense.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Where would the gentleman draw the line of demarcation?

Mr. BOILEAU. On the line of invasion or attempted invasion of our country. I do not believe the gentleman wants to get mixed up in a foreign war, does he?

Mr. GRISWOLD. No, indeed.

Mr. BOILEAU. If the gentleman agrees with that principle, then he must necessarily agree with the principle that we should prepare primarily for defensive operations.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I agree with the gentleman to a certain extent. I do not believe in our entering into a war of offense, but I certainly insist that in any kind of warfare in which we might find ourselves engaged we would need training and facilities and every equipment for offense as well as defense. The gentleman's amendment would rule out all training and equipment for offense.

Mr. BOILEAU. No. The gentleman, I think, is in accord with me in principle. The gentleman agrees we must prepare for defensive war. It does not mean that in preparing for a war of defense we should not have offensive equipment. The gentleman, I think, would be entirely in accord with my amendment if he understood it.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I may say to the gentleman that, in my mind, there is no distinction between preparing for a war of offense and a war of defense. To properly train a defensive force is to properly train it for offense. The two are as inseparable as a man and his skin. If the skin is removed, the man dies. If training for offense is removed, adequate defense dies.

Mr. BOILEAU. I believe there is a distinction, but I hope the gentleman agrees that there is no harm in this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT

SALARIES

For compensation for personal services in the District of Columbia, as follows:

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, unless someone with a prior right offers a motion to recommit, I expect to offer a motion to recommit this bill to the committee with instructions to reduce the amount to $400,000,000. Never in any peacetime year before the World War did the United States Navy ever cost as much as $400,000,000. Beginning with the year 1923 and continuing up to and including the year 1934 we never appropriated as much as $400,000,000 for the Navy. So my motion provides really for a modest cutting of this appropriation.

At the outset of the debate, or not long thereafter, I offered an invitation to anybody supporting this bill to tell us against whom we are preparing, against whom we are making our plans in spending the $526,000,000 carried in this bill. Nobody has answered that question.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. Briefly, for a question.

Mr. MASON. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that when I am preparing to defend myself and getting in shape to do it I am not preparing against this gentleman, that gentleman, or any particular person; I am preparing against anyone who might want to take advantage of me. [Applause.]

Mr. BIERMANN. I agree that that is a very brave, fine remark; that is a real "he-man" remark.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman from Illinois evidently goes around armed all the time on the theory he will not be held up but he is not going to take any chances.

Mr. BIERMANN. He should do that if he carries his theory to a logical conclusion, but I am afraid the gentleman from Illinois is not any too logical.

Mr. Chairman, I asked the proponents of this bill to produce any officer at all, a second lieutenant or an ensign in the Navy, who would tell us how it is possible for any foreign government or any combination of foreign governments to successfully invade this country. No one, not even this distinguished gentleman [Mr. VINSON of Georgia], has offered to get up on this floor and tell us how that could be done. The reason they have not done so is because they cannot do it. No Army officer or Navy officer of this country will so stultify himself as to say this country can be invaded, even if we had no ships.

I am going to offer a motion to reconsider, if I have the opportunity, to cut off $126,000,000 from this appropriation. Those who are in favor of economy in this country will have an opportunity to vote for the motion to reconsider.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. May I say there has been one successful invasion of America, and that is by English lecturers. Other than that I cannot think of any invasion.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Did I understand the gentleman to say he believed no country could invade the United States of America at any time in the future?

Mr. BIERMANN. I mean to say no foreign country and no combination of foreign countries is capable of invading this country even if we did not have a single battleship. May I ask the gentleman to give me the name of a single Army officer or naval officer who will contradict that statement?

Mr. LUCAS. Then why did the gentleman offer an amendment to cut the appropriation down to $400,000,000? Why did he not offer an amendment to cut it all out?

Mr. BIERMANN. I thought I would have a better chance of getting that amendment through.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

PRINTING HISTORICAL AND NAVAL DOCUMENTS

For continuing the printing of historical and naval documents, including composition, clerical copying in the Navy Department, and other preparatory work, in accordance with the provisions of the appropriation made for the commencement of this work as contained in the Naval Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1935, $20,000, together with the unexpended balance for this purpose for the fiscal year 1937: Provided, That nothing in such act shall preclude the Public Printer from furnishing 150 copies of each volume published to the Library of Congress.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it is very evident from the appropriation bills covering the Army and Navy which are coming up before the House for consideration year after year that we have no national-defense policy. The Army and the Navy come here with separate bills. There is no coordination. There is no definite policy. We are working in the dark. That is not true with other nations. They have a specific, definite national-defense policy, based on a very careful study of the problems involved.

In order to find out where we are and where we are going, I have introduced in the House, Joint Resolution 254, a resolution which was introduced last year in the Senate by Senator Benson, of Minnesota, now Governor of that State, and by myself in the House.

This resolution provides as follows:

Whereas the Democratic Party, in party convention in Chicago, June 1932, submitted this platform: "National defense. A navy and an army adequate for national defense based on a survey of all facts affecting the existing establishments, that the people in time of peace may not be burdened by an expenditure fast approaching $1,000,000,000 annually."; and

Whereas the appropriations for the Army and the Navy during the 1937 fiscal year total more than $1,000,000,000; and

Whereas there is no established policy for national defense and therefore no guide as to what is needed by way of military or naval establishments to assure such defense; and

Whereas the Government of the United States under the Pact of Paris renounced war as an instrument of national policy; and

Whereas the Government of the United States has declared its neutrality in the event of war between or among foreign nations; and

Whereas a fundamental principle of our democratic government as embodied in the Constitution is control of the military branches of the Government by the civilian authorities; and

Whereas the absence of a policy of national defense leads to inefficiency, uncoordinated activities of our Army and Navy, growing demands on the National Treasury to support an Army and Navy for unknown purposes, and results in misunderstanding both at home and abroad of the purposes of our Army and Navy: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That a special committee of civilians be appointed by the President of the United States and that the committee is hereby authorized and directed to make a survey of all the facts affecting the existing establishments of the Army and the Navy, to hold public hearings, and to recommend to the Congress of the United States the best method of general organization and of coordination of the three armed services—Navy, Army, and Air—and a policy of national defense that shall be—

In harmony with our agreement to renounce war as an instrument of our national course in international affairs;

Designed only to defend the boundaries of the Nation against invasion, including for this purpose the control of the seas in the vicinity of our country, including Alaska, Hawaiian Islands, and the Panama Canal;

Actually as well as theoretically in keeping with our neutrality laws;

Instrumental in insuring our peaceful relations with other nations of the world;

Conducive to the elimination from the defense establishments of all agencies designed, or primarily useful, for aggressive purposes; and

Determinative of a basic policy to guide expenditures for national defense so that the people in time of peace may not be burdened in the future by war appropriations fast exceeding $1,000,000,000 annually.

SEC. 2. No member of the committee shall have any financial or economic interest in the production, distribution, or sale of materials used by the Army, Navy, or air forces of the United States; nor shall he hold any interest, directly or indirectly, in the sale, exchange, or transportation of articles, goods, or commodities to foreign nations; nor shall he have any financial or economic interest, directly or indirectly, in any foreign country.

SEC. 3. The committee shall be authorized to expend a sum of up to $10,000 and to employ needed clerical help.

SEC. 4. A report shall be prepared not later than March 1, 1938, and presented to the President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the Vice President of the United States.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. BIGELOW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

HOUSE ORATORY

Mr. Chairman, if any words of mine could be called oratory, it would still come under the definition of a former

Speaker of this House, Joe Cannon, who said that, "Oratory in the House is like water going over a dam. It makes a hell of a lot of noise but it turns no wheels." [Laughter.]

The speech I am going to make this afternoon will be short because I know it is utterly in vain. A number of amendments have been proposed that I would like to have seen adopted. I would like to see our soldiers withdrawn from China. I would like to see a time limit set for the withdrawal of our military forces from the Philippines. I wish there were some way of drawing a distinction between an offensive and defensive war.

I feel a good deal the same as many who have expressed themselves on this floor, that we should have a definite national policy and confine ourselves to a strictly defensive operation. [Applause.]

RECEPTION COMMITTEE

An educated American Indian, addressing a Boston audience, said that he could not claim that his ancestors came over on the Mayflower, as the Boston people did, but that he was quite sure that some of his ancestors were on the reception committee. [Laughter.] I am willing to organize the most effective reception committee possible for anybody who comes over here looking for trouble, but my people in Cincinnati understand I am committed to the principle that as long as I have breath in my body I will vote against an aggressive war and I will never vote to send an American soldier to fight on foreign soil. [Applause.]

WHY VOTE TO RECOMMIT?

If there were a public opinion to sustain this Congress and to sustain the committee that has done, as it seems to me, such faithful work on its job—if, I say, there were a public opinion to sustain us all in bringing in a program that would be strictly defensive, we would probably have a different bill before us this afternoon. It is not their fault and it is not the fault of the Congress. It is the fault of all of us that we have not the mind yet made up to support the kind of defensive policy that I would like to see.

Now, I cannot vote against this bill. I cannot take the responsibility for that; but, Mr. Chairman, I wish to go on record as saying I am going to vote to recommit the bill as my way of expressing and having recorded my conviction that we should prepare for defense only and should spend nothing on weapons that can serve no purpose but to fight wars that we should never be in. At present it seems to me we are just going along with all the rest of the nations. [Applause.]

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. O'CONNOR of New York] having assumed the chair, Mr. BLAND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5232) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR of New York). Is the gentleman from Iowa opposed to the bill?

Mr. BIERMANN. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BIERMANN moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to effect such reductions as will reduce the total appropriation provided in this bill to not more than $400,000,000.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to recommit the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BIERMANN) there were—ayes 42, noes 125.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present, and I object to the vote on that ground.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-one Members present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 84, nays 257, not voting 89, as follows:

Mr. HILL of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma demands the yeas and nays. As many as favor taking the vote by yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Ten Members have risen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. UMSTEAD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein an address delivered by the President of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein an address delivered by the President of the United States. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to inquire whether that speech was the one delivered at the victory dinner last night?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE TO PRINT

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who spoke on the bill have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DISARMAMENT

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a concurrent resolution asking the President to call a conference on disarmament.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not recognize the gentleman for that purpose.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech delivered by my colleague, Mr. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON, at Charlotte, N. C.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

ELECTION TO A COMMITTEE

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 148

Resolved, That EDWARD T. TAYLOR, of Colorado, be, and he is hereby, elected chairman of the standing Committee of the House of Representatives on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, on Monday next business from the Committee on the District of Columbia will be considered. On Tuesday the coal bill will be taken up. I understand there will be 4 hours' general debate. It will probably go over and be completed on Thursday. Of course, on Wednesday the Calendar of Committees will be called. On Friday, if the coal bill is completed on Thursday, we will probably take up general debate on the neutrality bill.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and, of course, I am not going to object—the gentleman from Texas said the neutrality measure might be taken up on Friday?

Mr. RAYBURN. For general debate.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Of course, it would not be the gentleman's intention to finish the bill that week?

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, no; because I understand the committee is asking for 8 hours' general debate.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There is great interest in that bill, and there will be many demands for time.

Mr. RAYBURN. It will be practically impossible to pass the bill next week.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LANHAM (at the request of Mr. SOUTH), for today, on account of important business.

To Mr. DUNN, for a few days, on account of important business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I received unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD to include a speech by our former colleague, Hon. Louis C. Cramton, delivered at the seventieth anniversary of the founding of Howard University, on Tuesday of this week. This morning I received a communication from the Government Printing Office saying that that address would require 2¾ pages, and that only 2 pages can be printed without getting an estimate from the Printer. He transmitted an estimate of the cost, saying the cost would be $124, and that the speech will occupy 2¾ pages of the RECORD.

I renew my request, Mr. Speaker, to extend my remarks to include the speech referred to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

SENATE

MONDAY, MARCH 8, 1937

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God and Father of mankind, by whom the meek are guided in judgment, whose paths are mercy and truth, breathe upon us the spirit of Thy calm as in Thy sacred presence we again invoke Thy blessing of wisdom, that we may know, and strength, that we may do Thy will.

Be with us, O Thou Ruler and Guide, in every place and at every time; in our work and in our rest; in our laughter and in our tears; in loneliness and in fellowship; in the eye of day and in the shadow of night; and may we have no fear save that of losing Thee, who alone canst help us ever to serve our country with the high and holy purpose born of the revelation of Thyself in the life of Him who loved us even to the uttermost, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, March 4, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that my colleague the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] is necessarily detained from the Senate, and that the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is absent because of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

PROPAGANDA AGAINST PROPOSED REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, while the Senate had under consideration on Monday last the order of business relating to the presentation of petitions and memorials, I took occasion to insert in the RECORD a circular letter and certain printed slips issued over the signature of Mr. Gerald B. Winrod, of Wichita, Kans. I also made comment on the fact that the documents were sent to me in an envelope bearing the return address of Mr. Theo. Mahn, of Alma, Nebr. During the course of my remarks the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] stated that, knowing Mr. Mahn intimately, it was his belief that the purpose in sending the matter to me was not to contribute to the method of propaganda referred to but to give me information concerning the subject.

I then stated that a different inference had been drawn, due to the fact that no letter from Mr. Mahn accompanied the letter of Mr. Winrod and the slips referred to. I find that statement was in error. There was received at my office at the time the matter referred to as propaganda came in a letter from Mr. Mahn, which, by the force in the office, was segregated and placed in the files. In that letter Mr. Mahn distinctly stated that he was in sympathy with the New Deal, in harmony with the President's view regarding the Supreme Court, and that he was enclosing the propaganda matter distributed by the Defender, the magazine published at Wichita, Kans., in order that I might be informed and have an opportunity to combat it. It should also be stated that my inference, already referred to, was incorrect, and that the opinion expressed by the Senator from Nebraska was found to be accurate. I ask that Mr. Mahn's letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THEODORE MAHN,
BONDED ABSTRACTER,
Alma, Nebr., February 25, 1937.

Senator JOSEPH T. ROBINSON,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: As a friend of the New Deal, and in harmony with the President's view regarding the Supreme Court, I am enclosing herein some propaganda matter that is being distributed by the Defender, a magazine published in Wichita, Kans., that might serve your purpose in combatting the critics of the President.

Trusting that some decided changes will be made in the personnel of the Court, and wishing you success in that direction, I am,

Yours very truly,

THEODORE MAHN.

P. S.—Remember me to my friend, Senator GEORGE W. NORRIS.

Mr. ROBINSON. While I have the floor, with the indulgence of the Senate, I should like to point out that the statement made a few days ago by myself that there is an organized and somewhat unfair effort being made to influence public opinion and that it is by no means limited to the agency represented by Mr. Winrod, is borne out by the fact that a large number of individuals and agencies are taking part in that effort. As further proof of the statement reference is now made to a letter addressed to Mr. R. C. Pollard, of 2610 Allendale Road, Baltimore, Md. The envelope containing the letter bears no return address. It is signed by a name that I am unable to read; the signature to me is not legible. In the letter which this writer is sending out through the States it is expressly requested that those who write to the President and to Members of the House and of the Senate use plain letterheads. That language is inserted by pen in the same handwriting as the signature.

I inquire, what is the purpose of asking a person corresponding with a Senator or Representative to use a plain letterhead? Manifestly the object is to withhold knowledge of the real identity of the writer.

That letter I designate also as unfair. I shall not read all of it, but will have it inserted in the RECORD in full. Among other things it states:

We are informed that Congress is holding up the proposal a week or two to get reactions of the people. Let's qualify. This is no time to "dilly-dally." It's not a party issue. It's time for "all good men to come to the aid of their country." What is the best course to follow? Radio talks and press comments are one thing, but nothing is comparable to an individual letter. Do you realize that if you phone 10 friends and pledge them to each phone 10 more, in 6 steps will be 1,000,000 letters on their way.

Time is an important factor. Act immediately.

The words "act immediately" are in capitals.

The letters can be very brief; chances are they will not be read, but simply classified as "pro" or "con." Write the President, and all your Senators and Representatives. For your convenience the names are all listed on the enclosed page. As Senator Blank so aptly put it, "If there must be a dictator in America I nominate the American people."

Pause in your present occupation. Write your letters, and phone 10 or more of your friends immediately. Tomorrow may be too late.

This is signed, as I have already said, with a signature that is not legible. Then there is a postscript:

Be sure to address your letters to Washington, D. C., the President at the White House, the Senators in care of the Senate Office Building, the Representatives in care of the House Office Building.

Accompanying the letter is a list of all Senators and Representatives. The gentleman who forwards the matter to me says, among other things:

I enclose some ammunition for use, showing how the opponents of the people are stooping to a low level to try and beat the President's court proposals.

Down to the chain letter scheme now, the enclosed indicates.

I never heard of the signer of the letter and evidently my name has been taken from a phone directory.

Note, while I am a resident of Baltimore, the letter in question comes from Cleveland, Ohio.

Keep up the good fight, Senator. We are with you.

I read that letter to show the reaction of one who has received the communication sent out under "plain letterheads." No doubt others would receive it in a different spirit.

It is not suggested that there is anything unlawful in the method being employed. It is suggested that the effort to influence Senators and Representatives is through the means of overwhelming them with communications which are prompted. I do not believe propaganda produced in that way has any very great value.

That is not all. The club women, particularly the women of Republican clubs, are active in the same way. They have a perfect right to entertain any view on the subject they please and to express it frankly and fairly; but all these letters which have reached me indicate an effort to mislead, indicate unfairness in the course that is being taken.

I have another letter headed "S O S" in capitals. "Save our Supreme Court" is the slogan on that letter, which reads:

Meeting and tea at Mrs. Blanks, 435 East Fifty-second, this Monday, February 15, at 5 o'clock.

Please come. It's to formulate plans for immediate action on its protesting President Roosevelt's latest "grab."

We have to act and act quickly to crystallize public opinion so it can be brought to bear on the uncertain Senators.

Then a name is given, followed by the statement:

——— is one of the instigators, so things will hum.

R. S. V. P. by return mail, please—one way or the other—and do come. We need you.

Another letter, addressed to a person whose name is omitted by me, is as follows:

I am so delighted that you are going to get the names and addresses of all the various clubs. I know that it will be well done and I have no more worries along that line. I do not believe that we better use clubs that we are not sure of.

That statement shows that the one responsible does not want a full and fair expression by all clubs, but desires to choose those clubs which will support the viewpoint which she entertains or occupies.

I do not believe that we had better use clubs that we are not sure of. For instance, in the classified telephone directory Minnewaska Club is probably a Democratic Club, and we wouldn't want to get in there. If you could get someone to call these various clubs and say, "I'm looking for a Democratic or a Tammany club in my neighborhood—is this a Democratic club?" etc., or something to that effect. I am sure you could make arrangements at the Republican National Committee headquarters, 41 East Forty-second, to do the telephoning there in order to save your own telephone bill. Or if you know someone who wants to contribute $10 or so to the Republican Party, ask her or him if you may use his phone for the day.

If you personally can't do the phoning, I am sure Blank—

Omitting in my reading the name used there—would do it for you.

They say there are 5,000 clubs in Greater New York. I do hope we can cover at least 1,000 of them. I do hope that our contacts with the foreign clubs will be lasting, as I think there is a real opportunity for service to them later on.

I am quite sure the consulate would have lists of all their respective clubs. I know there are more than 50 Norwegian clubs in Brooklyn alone. I believe Mr. Blank, the consul general, would give you the list. You may use my name with him if you wish.

Good luck.

I am going to be in the city Monday (at the club) in case you wish to reach me.

Thanks so much for taking over this big job.

Sincerely,

I omit the name signed to the letter.

That letter indicates that the first letter, which I withdrew, has some relationship to this subject, although there is a reference in it to a meeting on September 15 which I do not understand as consistent with that suggestion. It appears that these influences are being moved in almost every direction and from as many sources as can be commanded, not to enlighten the public. Not one of these messages gives the slightest information as to the basis of the conclusion of the propaganda. It is limited to a request that without information these propagandist messages be sent broadcast over the Nation, so that no one who receives one may know how such a message actually originated.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, Mr. BURKE, and Mr. COPELAND addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in order that I may make a request?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes; I yield for that purpose.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be placed before the Senate for consideration, in order to make it the unfinished business, Senate bill 5.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have no objection to proceeding to the consideration of the bill, with the understanding, however, that there shall be no effort to foreclose any contested provision of the bill during the present day. A number of Senators have stated to me that they could not be present today, and that they wish to be here when this measure is considered. For the first time in my memory at this advanced stage of the session there is no general legislation of importance on the calendar of the Senate other than the bill referred to by the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. The suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas is entirely satisfactory to me; and I think the most we could possibly do today would be to consider some of the uncontested committee amendments, but not with any thought of pressing the measure to final passage.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think that when the opportunity arises the Senator from New York should take the floor and explain in what particular this bill differs from the bill which was brought forward at the last session, and, of course, make any other explanation he may deem necessary.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it the purpose of the Senator from New York to have a vote on this measure within the next 2 or 3 days?

Mr. COPELAND. I hope so. I really feel that the controverted features of the bill have been eliminated, or so modified that we can proceed to final action not later than tomorrow, I hope.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall not object; but I shall have to communicate with some constituents of mine about the matter of amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that Senate bill no. 5 be laid before the Senate for present consideration and made the unfinished business. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suppose this is the pure food and drug amendment measure.

Mr. COPELAND. It is.

Mr. McNARY. We are proceeding wholly out of order. The routine morning business has not as yet been transacted. I do not like to commit myself on the question of unanimous consent. There is an orderly way of getting a bill before the Senate at the proper time. That way is by motion to make it the unfinished business or to proceed to its consideration.

I am going to object at this time. I shall aid the Senator from New York in due time, and in the proper fashion, to make the bill the unfinished business; but at this time I am going to insist on the transaction of the routine morning business; and I object to the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] now proceeding with his speech. It can be done only by unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order of business is the presentation of petitions and memorials. If any Senator should object to the Senator from Washington proceeding, the Chair would have to hold that it could be done only by unanimous consent, although the Chair has recognized the Senator from Washington.

Mr. McNARY. Very well; I shall insist on the disposition of the routine morning business. Then the Senator from Washington may proceed at the proper time and in due course.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I assume from what the Senator from Oregon has said that he has in mind the parliamentary situation.

Mr. McNARY. Exactly.

Mr. COPELAND. And that later in the day, when the proper time comes, the Senator will not object to my request.

Mr. McNARY. My statement has no reference whatever to the merits of the Senator's proposal.

Mr. COPELAND. That is satisfactory to me.

CONDOLENCES IN BELGIAN SENATE ON FLOODS IN AMERICA

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting (with translations thereof) copies of the text of an address from the Parliamentary Annals of the Senate of the Kingdom of Belgium, containing a speech delivered on January 28, 1937, by the President of the Senate, M. Moyersoen, on the occasion of devastating floods occurring in the United States, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

ATTORNEYS' FEES, OSAGE TRIBAL FUNDS

PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF TRADE-MARK ACT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Assistant Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend section 9 of the Trade Mark Act of February 20, 1905, as amended, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Patents.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION HOSPITAL SITE, DETROIT, MICH.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, transmitting draft of proposed legislation to authorize the Administrator to accept title for the United States to certain real property to be donated by Mr. Henry Ford and wife for Veterans' Administration Facility purposes, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

JANUARY REPORT OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of that Corporation for the month of January 1937, including statement of loan and other authorizations made during the month, and showing the names, amounts, and rate of interest or dividend in each case, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

SPECIAL FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS (S. DOC. 34)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chief Clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting, in response to certain resolutions of the Senate, certified copies of the special findings of fact and conclusion in the cases of Emma W. Bay and Harry C. Holloway, copartners, trading as John W. Bay & Co.; J. F. Towner, trading as J. F. Towner & Sons; John Archer; Emma W. Bay; Harry C. Holloway; and Laura Pancoast and Mary Pancoast, executrices of Laura T. Pancoast, which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed as a Senate document.

COURT ORDERS RESTRAINING ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission (S. Doc. No. 33), stating, in response to Senate Resolution 82 (agreed to on the 17th ultimo), calling for certain information concerning injunctions or judgments issued or rendered by Federal courts since March 4, 1933, in cases involving acts of Congress, that no such case has arisen in which the Commission is involved, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a letter from the Administrator of the Veterans' Administration (with accompanying papers) (S. Doc. No. 32), submitting the information requested by Senate Resolution 82 (agreed to on the 17th ultimo), calling for certain information concerning injunctions or judgments issued or rendered by Federal courts since March 4, 1933, in cases involving acts of Congress, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Washington, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

House Joint Memorial 9

To His Excellency the Honorable President of the United States and the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Washington in legislative session assembled, most respectfully represent and petition as follows:

Whereas certain species of fish, Sardinops Caerulea, popularly known as pilchard or sardine, is found in abundance along and off the entire Pacific coast of the United States and Vancouver Island; and

Whereas said fish is highly valuable and important in the production of fish meal and fish oil, and said production is indispensable to agriculturalists, to poultrymen, to stockmen, and to many phases of industry; and

Whereas said species of fish is apparently of migratory character, being found along and off said entire Pacific coast; and

Whereas it is desirable that adequate information and knowledge be had concerning the habitat, the abundance, and wise use of said fish; and

Whereas no one State or sovereignty should be considered as having any vested exclusive right to or interest in the resource, and an adequate survey cannot be carried on by one State alone; and

Whereas such scientific findings may form the basis for sound governmental control and conservation, which is desired:

Now, therefore, your memorialists petition the honorable President of the United States and Congress to take action and pass adequate legislation to provide—

1. For negotiation of a treaty with the Dominion of Canada looking toward joint and equitable supervision of said pilchard industry, and that industry alone;

2. For immediate scientific investigation and survey of said resource under the direction of the Federal Bureau of Fisheries in coordination with the fisheries departments of the States of Washington, Oregon, and California;

3. For the appropriation by Congress of sufficient funds to carry on such investigation and survey, a part of which shall be equitably allocated to said fisheries departments of said States of Washington, Oregon, and California for their part in such work.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

The chief clerk of the House of Representatives of the State of Washington is authorized and directed to forward without delay a copy of this memorial to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to each Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States from the States of Washington, Oregon, and California.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Joint resolution memorializing the United States Senate to ratify, at the instant session of Congress, the treaty between the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada for the building of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway

Whereas the St. Lawrence Seaway Treaty between the United States and the Dominion of Canada for the development of a sea lane into the Great Lakes remains unratified and, therefore, unfinished business before the country; and

Whereas it is well understood that it is the firm intention of the President of the United States to resubmit a treaty for the development of this great waterway; and

Whereas this project has been under scrutiny and analysis by boards composed of the members of the corps of United States Army Engineers, economic investigators of the Department of Commerce, the International Joint Commission, the United States St. Lawrence Commission, and many other groups over a long period of years and has had the approval of four Presidents of the United States; and

Whereas the International Joint Commission found that without considering the probability of new traffic created by the opening of the water route to the seaboard there existed between the region economically tributary to the Great Lakes and overseas points, as well as between the same region and the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards, a volume of outbound and inbound trade that might reasonably be expected to seek this route sufficient to justify the expense involved in its improvemcnt; and

Whereas the United States Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Commission found the construction of this shipway from the Great Lakes to the sea to be imperative both for the relief and for the development of a vast area in the interior of the continent; and

Whereas the building of this seaway, by affording easy and cheap communication to and from the interior of the continent, would be the greatest farm-relief measure ever passed: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives and the senate concurring, That the State of Minnesota memorialize the President of the United States to resubmit the treaty with Canada for the development of the St. Lawrence River, and the Senate of the United States, now in session, to promptly ratify said treaty when submitted; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor of this State is hereby requested to forthwith transmit to the Senate of the United States a properly authenticated copy of this joint resolution of the House of Representatives and the Senate of the State of Minnesota.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

House Joint Memorial 9

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States H. R. 4009, a bill by the Honorable D. WORTH CLARK, "to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal benefits and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provisions for the control and the eradication of noxious weeds; to conserve and protect the agricultural resources of the several States and of the United States; to empower the Secretary of Agriculture to make certain rules and regulations and prescribe conditions; to raise revenue; and for other purposes"; and

Whereas the enactment of such a measure would be extremely beneficial to the interests of the people of the State of Colorado: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the thirty-first general assembly (the senate concurring herein), That the Congress of the United States is hereby respectfully memorialized and urged to give every consideration to the said H. R. 4009; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives of the State of Colorado in the Congress of the United States be requested to give their support to, and vote for, the aforesaid H. R. 4009, and that copies of this memorial be forwarded forthwith to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to the Senators and Representatives from the State of Colorado in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

House Joint Memorial 10

Whereas the problem of unemployment throughout the United States of America is a permanent one, and the principal responsibility for the care and relief of employables has been undertaken by the Federal Government; and

Whereas the Public Works Administration is an agency of the Federal Government which has been providing employment to large numbers of employables through Federal and State cooperation in the construction of public works; and

Whereas said Public Works Administration should be continued and enlarged, and sufficient appropriation should be made therefor by the Seventy-fifth Congress of the United States now assembled: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the thirty-first general assembly (the senate concurring herein), That this general assembly memorialize the United States Congress to take immediate action to appropriate sufficient moneys for the continuation of the Public Works Administration and its extension, to provide greater cooperation between the several States and the Federal Government in the construction of public works; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives of the State of Colorado and the Congress of the United States be requested to give their support to any measure that will continue, enlarge, or make an appropriation for the continuance of a public-works program under the Public Works Administration, and that copies of this memorial be forwarded to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of Colorado in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

House Joint Memorial 8

Whereas there is now pending in the Seventy-fifth Congress of the United States S. 1375, which is a bill to provide for the punishment of persons stealing animals moving in interstate commerce, and for other purposes; and

Whereas stealing of animals is rapidly reaching alarming proportions and the apprehension and conviction of persons engaged in the stealing of animals is becoming increasingly more difficult because of modern means of transportation and the inability of State governments to afford protection to its citizens beyond the borders of the State; and

Whereas the passage of S. 1375 would enable the Federal Government to apprehend and convict persons stealing animals who are now able to evade punishment; and

Whereas the passage of said S. 1375 would be extremely beneficial to the State of Colorado and all of the States in the United States which are concerned with the establishment and protection of the livestock industry of the State: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the thirty-first general assembly (the senate concurring herein), That the Seventy-fifth Congress of the United States is hereby respectfully memorialized and urged to give every consideration to S. 1375 to the end that it may be speedily enacted into law; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives of the State of Colorado in the Congress of the United States are hereby requested to give their support to, and vote for, the aforesaid measure, and that copies of this memorial be forwarded forthwith to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States and to Senators and Representatives from the State of Colorado in said Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor of the State of Colorado be requested to forward copies of this memorial to the Governors of the Western States, urging them to cooperate in efforts to secure the passage of the said measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Joint Memorial 5

Joint memorial memorializing Congress to support legislation now before Congress providing for the establishment of a system of Federal financial benefits, enabling the several States of the Union to make more adequate provision for the control and the eradication of noxious weeds; to conserve and protect the agricultural resources of the several States and the United States

Whereas H. R. 4009, now before the United States Congress, providing for the establishment of a system of Federal benefit, enabling the several States to make more adequate provisions for the control and the eradication of noxious weeds; and

Whereas the noxious weed problem is too large for Wyoming, her counties and individuals to financially cope with; and

Whereas large areas of public domain, other federally owned lands, and other publicly owned lands are involved in the noxious weed infestations within the State: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Twenty-fourth Legislature of the State of Wyoming (the senate concurring), That we hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States to enact into law H. R. 4009, providing adequate Federal financial aid for the control and the eradication of noxious weeds in the several States of the Union; be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this memorial be sent to the President of the United States Senate and the Speaker of the National House of Representatives and to United States Senators JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY and HARRY H. SCHWARTZ and to Congressman PAUL R. GREEVER.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Texas, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

House Concurrent Resolution 10

Whereas the Forty-third Legislature of the State of Texas in regular session adopted Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 73, giving the consent of the State that the Federal Government purchase lands in Texas for reforestation and other purposes; and

Whereas pursuant to such consent on the part of the State the United States has purchased and is purchasing large tracts of land, particularly for watershed protection and forest preservation purposes; and

Whereas in the eastern part of the State the tracts have been purchased in such large contiguous areas that in several counties more than 50 percent of the area of said county is being purchased, thus removing said lands from taxation for State, county, district, and municipal purposes; and

Whereas in some of said counties more than 25 percent of the assessed valuation of property is being thus removed from the tax rolls; and

Whereas in many instances the entire area of school districts and the entire area of road districts is being removed from taxation; and

Whereas the State of Texas has already granted its consent to such program because of the beneficial results which will accrue to the section of the State involved, and which will accrue to the State generally; and

Whereas the State likewise is affected by the removal of such large areas from taxation in the following particulars:

(a) In the future the State will not receive from said lands the taxes it has been receiving in the past for State ad valorem, State pension, and State available school purposes;

(b) The State owns in its permanent school fund, and in other funds, bonds of counties, cities, road districts, and school districts situated within the affected area, which cannot be paid according to their tenor and effect because of the removal from taxation of a substantial part of the property originally securing said indebtedness;

(c) The State is interested in the condition of the citizens of said communities upon whom the burden of paying taxes will rest after said lands have been released from taxation, which burdens in the instance of bonds which are supported by unlimited taxing power must be materially increased; and in instances wherein said bonds are supported by limited taxing power must be increased to the maximum; and

Whereas at the time of the purchase by the United States Government a great amount of this land was delinquent for ad-valorem taxes, both to the State, counties, and districts affected; and

Whereas by reason of such purchase by the United States Government said land is exempted from taxation and will result in the financial insolvency of said counties and districts affected in a great many instances; and

Whereas it is the belief of this legislature that the United States Government by reason of said purchase of land in such large amount in these areas has, more or less, obligated itself to see that the least amount of injury is occasioned to its citizens thereby affected; and

Whereas the State of Texas appreciates the cooperation of the United States Government and the benefits which will accrue from the reforestation program, but desires the further cooperation of the Government in relieving the attendant hardships insofar as consistent and practical; and

Whereas this legislature is hopeful that after a reconsideration of this condition by the Congress of the United States and the executive department thereof that some legislation will be passed and approved which will accomplish the purpose of relieving these conditions: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and the same is hereby, requested to pass legislation in some form entitling the State of Texas and its political subdivisions to be reimbursed for the loss of taxes which resulted from the purchase of said land by the Federal Government until the taxable values of such political subdivisions have increased to the extent occasioned by such purchase upon the part of the Federal Government; and that the President of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to give careful consideration of these problems to the end that if he can consistently do so he may cooperate and approve such legislation; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Senate of the United States, the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States, to each United States Senator, and to each Congressman of the State of Texas.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

House Joint Memorial 16

To the Honorable Congress of the United States, and to the Honorable Anthony J. Dimond, Delegate to Congress from Alaska:

Your memorialists, the House and Senate of the Legislature of Alaska, respectfully represent: That they are in receipt of the following telegram from the mayor of Anchorage:

ANCHORAGE, ALASKA, January 22, 1937.

ED COFFEY AND DAN KENNEDY,
House of Representatives, Juneau, Alaska:

Members of Anchorage Common Council unanimously urge that Territorial legislature memorialize Congress with plea that Anchorage Federal building project be considered immediately and rushed to completion. Fourteen Government agencies located here, of which seven rent quarters, and other seven, including post office, railroad, Federal jail, courthouse, and road commission, occupy wood-constructed buildings which were constructed as temporary quarters 20 years ago; and all these buildings now depreciated to point where they are unsafe, unsanitary, and extreme fire hazards to life and official records contained therein. Courthouse in such deplorable state that district judge refuses to call grand jury here, stating that although greatest number of trial cases originate this section, he will not risk official records being in building and jeopardize health of jurors and court officials. Federal jail has been condemned by health officials as unsanitary and by fire chief as a firetrap. Railroad three-story headquarters building foundation rotted away, leaving same extremely dangerous to occupy. Road commission occupy an old warehouse building costly to maintain and heat. Post-office building is a shabby, disreputable, leaky-roof, unpainted, drafty, rickety old firetrap structure unfit for human habitation, with working space inadequate and too few boxes to accommodate patrons. Increased population in Matanuska Valley makes this district most densely settled in central Alaska. Anchorage is outfitting point for 10 producing mining districts, headquarters of Alaska Railroad, and Signal Corps system, leading aviation base, salmon industry, coal fields, farming and timberlands—a modern city, ranking third in population in the Territory. Assessed property valuation of 2½ millions and unlimited natural diversified resources establishes Anchorage as permanent and warrants construction of a badly needed Federal building.

Mayor H. E. BROWN.

Your memorialists further represent: That they are familiar with the matters and things referred to in the foregoing telegram, and that the matters and things stated in said telegram are true; that the need for a courthouse and Federal building at Anchorage is great and pressing.

Whereupon your memorialists ask that a suitable public building be constructed at Anchorage without delay.

In this connection, your memorialists further represent: That this is not an ordinary request for an extension of the Public Works program but is a request for the construction of a public building that is indispensably necessary in connection with the orderly and proper conduct of the public business.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

Senate Joint Memorial 5

To the Honorable Congress of the United States of America:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska in the thirteenth regular session assembled, respectfully submits that:

Whereas there are three road-building agencies in the Territory of Alaska, namely, the Alaska Road Commission under the Department of the Interior, the Bureau of Public Roads under the Department of Agriculture, and the Territorial Board of Road Commissioners, a Territorial agency; and

Whereas it is believed that a single road-planning agency would function more economically and that the existing Territorial road-building agency fully understands the road needs and the road problems in Alaska; and

Whereas the Territory of Alaska has contributed liberally in the past toward the construction of roads and will continue to contribute for such purposes to the limit of its financial ability; and

Whereas the Territory of Alaska is conscious of the generous aid that has been extended to the Territory in the matter of road construction by the Federal Government; and

Whereas it is believed that the extension of the Federal Highway Act to the Territory would not involve a greater expenditure of Federal funds than is now expended under the existing arrangement; and

Whereas it is the sense of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska that the people of Alaska should rightfully have a voice in the planning and building of all roads within the Territory and that the Territory is ready and willing to contribute on any fair and equitable basis toward highway construction within the Territory:

Now, therefore, your memorialist respectfully petitions and prays that H. R. 1554, now before Congress, extending the Federal Highway Act to the Territory of Alaska, be enacted.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

House Joint Memorial 10

Joint memorial to the Congress of the United States asking that the Indian Department improve roads in the Navajo Indian Reservation in New Mexico and Arizona

Whereas a number of citizens of San Juan County, N. Mex., have Navajo Indian trading posts in the northeast corner of Arizona and in the northwest corner of New Mexico on the west side of the Lukachukai Mountain; and

Whereas heavy snows or rainstorms make it impossible to traverse from Sheep Springs in New Mexico to Crystal, N. Mex., over the Lukachukai Mountain and are forced to go south through a corner of McKinley County, then north through Fort Defiance, then due north, greatly increasing the distance; and

Whereas there is no passable road over the Lukachukai Mountain during similar storms from Red Rock, N. Mex., to Lukachukai, Ariz., and one is forced to go northwest from Ship Rock, N. Mex., to Beclabito, thence in a northwesterly direction, thence south to Sweet Water, Ariz., thence south and west to Rock Point, Ariz., thence south and east to Round Rock, Ariz., thence south and thence east to Lukachukai, Ariz., thereby increasing the distance approximately four times by going around the north end of the mountain; and

Whereas the population of this territory in the corner of Arizona and the corner of New Mexico is largely Indians and citizens, most of the citizens are heavy taxpayers, and an extensive trading is carried on over these mountain passes, and due to the condition of the roads makes a great handicap to traders of this territory; and

Whereas during the heavy snows of the present winter traders have been marooned near Lukachukai for 7 weeks at a time, unable to get out for medical purposes or to get goods into their trading posts to carry on their business with the Indians; and

Whereas the traders are asking that the roads over these two mentioned passes of the Lukachukai Mountain be improved and graveled and kept open the year round to the general public for the good of all concerned: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, That the Legislature of the State of New Mexico memorialize the Congress of the United States to have the Indian Department improve these roads heretofore discussed and thereby benefit the inhabitants of this territory, as such road improvements are greatly needed; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Honorable CARL A. HATCH, the Honorable DENNIS CHAVEZ, and the Honorable JOHN J. DEMPSEY, and to the Honorable CARL HAYDEN, of Arizona, and to the Honorable John Collier, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and to the Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the President of the Senate of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

House Joint Memorial 2

Joint memorial petitioning Congress to enact a law relative to length of railway trains

Whereas for many years the several Legislatures of the State of New Mexico have been importuned to enact a State law to define the length of railway trains operating within the State of New Mexico; and

Whereas this legislature is advised that such a State law has by a Federal court been held to be unconstitutional; and

Whereas such legislation appears to this body to be a matter peculiarly within the province of Congress, under the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, That the Congress of the United States be, and it hereby is, memorialized to enact legislation that will occupy the legislative field in respect to the limit of the length of railway trains; be it further

Resolved, That copy of this memorial be sent to the Honorable CARL A. HATCH, United States Senator from the State of New Mexico; the Honorable DENNIS CHAVEZ, United States Senator from the State of New Mexico; and the Honorable J. J. DEMPSEY, Member of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress; and to the Vice President and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

House Joint Resolution 22

Joint resolution memorializing and requesting the Congress of the United States to enact a law granting 4,000,000 acres from the public lands of the United States of America, situated in the State of New Mexico, in trust to the State of New Mexico, and other lands heretofore granted to the State of New Mexico under the Carey Land Act, for the benefit of the Carrie Tingley Crippled Children's Hospital

Whereas there is now established in the State of New Mexico, in the city of Hot Springs, the Carrie Tingley Crippled Children's Hospital, the purpose of which is to provide care and treatment for crippled children, and particularly for children who have been afflicted with infantile paralysis, and the cause and purpose of said hospital being per se, a worthy and needful one; and

Whereas there still remain within the boundaries of the State of New Mexico vast reserves of the public lands of the United States; and

Whereas, under patent no. 854989, Clear List No. 1, there was granted to the State of New Mexico under the provisions of the Carey Land Act, act of Congress August 18, 1894, and acts amendatory thereof, 4,743.33 acres of land to be administered under said acts; and

Whereas said grant has been fully and faithfully administered by the State of New Mexico and there now remains of said land heretofore so granted 2,980.63 acres: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives and the Senate of the State of New Mexico:

SECTION 1. That the Seventy-fifth Congress of the United States, now in regular session, assembled in Washington, D. C., be, and the same hereby is, memorialized and requested to enact a law during the present session of Congress, as soon as may be done, granting 4,000,000 acres of public lands of the United States, situated in New Mexico, notwithstanding said lands are or may be embraced within any Executive order of withdrawal or grazing district authorized under the act of June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269), to the State of New Mexico in trust for the use and benefit of the Carrie Tingley Crippled Children's Hospital.

SEC. 2. That the Seventy-fifth Congress of the United States, now in session, be, and the same hereby is, memorialized and requested to enact a law during the present session to grant to the State of New Mexico in trust for the use and benefit of said Carrie Tingley Crippled Children's Hospital 2,980.63 acres of land remaining after the completion of the administration of a grant from the United States of America under the Carey Land Act of August 18, 1894, and acts amendatory thereof.

SEC. 3. That the lands requested to be granted shall be under the same restrictions and limitations as that of the Enabling Act, act of June 20, 1910, provided the selections of same shall in no way be hindered by the reservations and established grazing districts authorized under provisions of said act of Congress of June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269).

SEC. 4. That engrossed copies of this resolution be placed upon the permanent records in the office of the secretary of state of New Mexico.

SEC. 5. Be it further—

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the Senators and Representatives of New Mexico in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, favoring the enactment of legislation to reduce the payments for interest and principal on farm and home loans, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. DUFFY.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing Congress to provide a moratorium on foreclosure of mortgages held by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

(See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. DUFFY.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, favoring the enactment of legislation to authorize the construction of the Kickapoo Valley flood-control project and to make an appropriation therefor, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

(See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. DUFFY.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing Congress to so modify the administration of the Works Progress Administration as to provide needy taxpayers preferred employment on works projects, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

(See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. DUFFY.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, memorializing Congress (and the Secretary of the Interior) not to acquire additional lands in New Mexico for the use and benefit of the Indians, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

(See memorial printed in full when presented today by Mr. CHAVEZ.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, favoring the enactment of legislation authorizing that State to enact laws levying taxes on lands acquired by the Federal Government from private owners, and removed from the tax rolls, or which may be acquired in the future, in the same manner and at the same rates as taxes are levied and assessed against privately owned lands, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

(See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. CHAVEZ.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Pomeroy Council and Civic Club, of Pomeroy, and the Gallipolis Chamber of Commerce, of Gallipolis, in the State of Ohio, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for immediate construction of flood-control projects in the Ohio River Valley and the adoption of a national policy for reforestation, soil erosion, and related programs, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted at Washington, D. C., by the Third General Assembly of the Council of State Governments, urging that Congress relinquish to the States the matter of the taxation of gasoline at the termination of the current fiscal year or as soon thereafter as possible, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted at Washington, D. C., by the Third General Assembly of the Council of State Governments, urging the Federal Government to accept full financial responsibility for providing old-age assistance and other forms of relief for Indians and persons of Indian blood, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted at Washington, D. C., by the Third General Assembly of the Council of State Governments, urging the establishment of the National Resources Committee as a permanent agency of the Government, and the enactment of legislation to care for transient, needy, and stranded migratory laborers and other unsettled persons through grants in aid to the States, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by Locals Nos. 980 and 1616, United Textile Workers of America, and Jacquard and Novelty Workers' Union, Local No. 989, of the Paterson district, New Jersey, favoring the enactment of the so-called National Textile Act, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Council of the City of Parma, Ohio, protesting against the removal from Works Progress Administration rolls of persons 65 years of age or over without regard to their physical condition or eligibility for old-age pensions under the Social Security Act, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Council of the City of Cleveland, Ohio, favoring the enactment of legislation providing low-cost housing, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by District State Council, Junior Order of United American Mechanics for the West Coast, and Central Florida, and Tampa Council, No. 7, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of Tampa, Fla., favoring the enactment of legislation restricting immigration, and providing for the registration of aliens, and the deportation of aliens inimical to the public interest, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of Asbestos Workers' Local, No. 12, of New York City, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Roumanian-American Citizens Club, of Dearborn, Mich.; the Bridgeport Federation of Democratic Women, of Bridgeport, Conn.; Locals Nos. 980 and 1616, United Textile Workers of America, of the Paterson, N. J., district; and Jacquard and Novelty Workers' Local Union, No. 989, affiliated with the United Textile Workers of America, favoring the enactment of legislation to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the New York Branch, Eastern & Gulf Sailors' Association, Inc., of New York City, protesting against the passage of the so-called McReynolds neutrality bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by Hatband and Ribbon Workers' Local Union, No. 980; Plain Silk and Rayon Workers' Local, No. 1616; and Jacquard and Novelty Workers' Union, Local No. 989; United Textile Workers of America, of Paterson, N. J., favoring continuance of the investigation by a special Senate committee of violations of the right of free speech and assembly and interference with the right of labor to organize and bargain collectively, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LONERGAN presented a resolution adopted by a meeting of citizens of the town of Lyme, Conn., protesting against the enactment of legislation enlarging the membership of the Supreme Court, and favoring the submission of proposed constitutional amendments to the States if it is desirable to change the Constitution, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I present for printing in the RECORD and appropriate reference a memorial in the form of a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Utah.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee on the Library and is as follows:

Joint resolution relating to world's fairs and to a Utah centennial exposition in 1947

Whereas the State of Utah is rich in tradition and pioneer lore, is uncommonly beautiful, is possessed of truly different facilities for entertaining guests, and is nature's wonderland—the great scenic center of America where nature's artists, sculptors, architects, and builders have generously given to Utah and have placed on display within the State's boundaries and in neighboring States and the world's greatest natural wonders, and

Whereas within the State of Utah is one of the most beautiful cities of the world, the unique Mormon Temple, the world-famed organ and tabernacle, the great Salt Lake in which one can float like a cork, the greatest race course in the world, the gorgeous Zion and Bryce Canyons, Cedar Breaks, and Wayne Wonderland, the ancient cliff dwellings, natural bridges of San Juan, the Wasatch and Uintah Mountains, the spectacular Zion-Mount Carmel Highway, Timpanogos Cave, Alpine Loop Road, Flaming Gorge, and many more unequaled world wonders, sights, and interests which must be seen to be appreciated, and within the near boundaries of the adjoining States are the Yellowstone Park, the Boulder Dam, and the Grand Canyon of the Colorado; and

Whereas the scenic wonders of Utah are coming more and more to be our greatest natural resource, the value of which is enhanced by exploitation, and within the State of Utah are many ideal natural and industrial resources, such as mountains of copper, iron, coal, salt beds, chemicals, and minerals of value untold; and

Whereas recognizing the fitness of a suitable celebration by the State of Utah, with the participation of other States and nations, of the completion of the first century of Utah's history, and recognizing that the greatest development in the world's history has been coincident with the first 100 years of Utah's history; and

Whereas the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States have at sundry times, by joint resolution or otherwise, with the approval of the President of the United States, recognized the benefit of world's fairs to the commercial interests of the United States and of other nations participating and to the educational welfare to the people of the United States and of the world; and the United States Government has, at various times, invited the participation of other nations and has provided for the admission of the exhibits of such other nations free of duty; and

Whereas it is recognized by the legislature of the State of Utah that the holding of a world's fair serves desirable and useful public purposes and should have the support and cooperation of all of the people of the State of Utah and that necessary and desirable legislation should be enacted in the near future by the Legislature of Utah to designate the year 1947, the one-hundredth anniversary of the foundation of the State, as a world's fair year, and invite all nations that they might have the opportunity and joy of joining with Utah in such a celebration and in visiting and viewing the great wonders of the West: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Utah respectfully recommends to the Governor the appointment of a committee to investigate the feasibility of holding a world's fair in the State of Utah during the year 1947, and to report its findings to the Twenty-third Legislature of Utah, and we call upon members of commercial, patriotic, and civic clubs, industrial labor, farm, and religious groups and organizations, and upon all other citizens of our great State, wherever they may be, to join and lend their attention to the advisability of forming plans for a great Utah Trail Centennial Exposition. We request our representatives in Congress to inquire concerning what assistance and cooperation can be obtained from the Federal Government and to seek the counsel and cooperation of all the Western States relative to this important matter; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be authorized and instructed to forward a certified copy of this resolution to the Governor of the State of Utah, to the Governor of each of the Western States, to each of our delegation in Congress, and to the President of the United States.

Mr. McNARY presented a resolution adopted at Washington, D. C., by the directors of the American Forestry Association, relative to certain functions of the Departments of the Interior and Agriculture in relation to the proposed reorganization of the several departments and agencies of the Federal Government, which was referred to the Select Committee on Government Organization.

He also presented memorials, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of the State of Oregon (forwarded by Mrs. George T. Gerlinger, president of the Oregon Chapter of Pro America, Portland, Oreg.), remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to enlarge the membership of the Supreme Court, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ASHURST presented the following memorial of the Senate of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Senate Memorial 3

A memorial of the prehistoric pueblo of Tuzigoot

To the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

Your memorialist respectfully represents:

On the north bank of the Verde River, overlooking Pecks Lake, 1½ miles from the smelter city of Clarkdale, in Yavapai County, Ariz., stands the pueblo of Tuzigoot.

Tuzigoot (crooked water) is a city of the dead of the period from the eleventh to the fourteenth centuries, which has been dug out of the dust and debris of ages under the direction and superintendence of capable archeologists during the past 4 years.

This pueblo of more than 100 rooms constitutes one of the most remarkable archeological discoveries in this or any other State, and the thousands of artifacts found in the ruins and carefully preserved comprise a collection the value of which can scarcely be estimated.

The ground—a tract of a little more than 10 acres—on which Tuzigoot stands has been deeded by the mining company which owned it to the school district, and through the medium of a Federal project a commodious and attractive museum building has been erected at the site of the pueblo, in which are displayed the artifacts taken from these ruins and from others nearby.

This prehistoric wonder is of easy access and is attracting scientists and other visitors from all over the world. It is rapidly becoming famous as a point of extraordinary interest.

The ruins of Tuzigoot are considered to be of such importance that they should be placed under the care and jurisdiction of the Federal Government, and to this end the school district holding title to the property will convey the same in such manner as Federal authorities may suggest.

Wherefore your memorialist, the Senate of the State of Arizona, requests:

1. That the Federal Government accept title to the property on which the pueblo of Tuzigoot stands.

2. That the President of the United States declare the same a national monument and place the ruins, together with the museum which has been erected thereon, under the care of the National Park Service.

Mr. DUFFY presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress to reduce the payments for interest and principal on farm and home loans

Whereas, under loans made by the Farm Credit Administration and Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the required payments of interest and principal are too large for many farmers and home owners to meet; and

Whereas farmers and home owners who have been granted these loans must also pay taxes, insurance, and other overhead charges, besides maintaining their property in good repair and supporting their families; and

Whereas the income of a large number of these farmers and home owners is insufficient to meet this financial burden; and

Whereas the reduction of the required payments on farm and home loans to an amount not exceeding 3 percent annually, consisting of a maximum rate of 1½-percent interest and 1½ percent on principal, would greatly lighten the financial burden of these borrowers: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That this legislature respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to pass necessary legislation reducing the required payments on farm and home loans to an amount not exceeding 3 percent annually, consisting of a maximum of 1½-percent interest rate and 1½ percent on principal, such loans to be financed under the provisions of the Frazier-Lemke refinancing bill; and be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, each House of the Congress, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

Mr. DUFFY also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Joint resolution memorializing Congress to provide a moratorium on foreclosure of mortgages held by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation

Whereas numerous home owners having Home Owners' Loan Corporation mortgages are unable to meet the requirements of their mortgages due to their inability to secure employment and secure income sufficient to make payments upon their loans; and

Whereas the mortgagors have been in good faith trying to seek employment and to make payments, but are unable to make such payments for the reason that their earning capacity is insufficient and are unable to supply food, shelter, and clothing for their families and make the additional payments upon the Home Owners' Loan Corporation mortgages; and

Whereas the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, being a Government organization, and the Government, being able to secure money at a lesser rate of interest than that charged and authorized in said mortgages, requires interest at a rate more than the home owners can pay and still support and make provision for themselves and families; and

Whereas there have been numerous mortgage foreclosures due to inability of mortgagors to find employment or due to their limited earning capacity, although a large number have in good faith tried to comply with the terms and conditions of said mortgage: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That this legislature memorialize Congress to enact necessary legislation to provide a moratorium on mortgage foreclosures, lengthen the period of said mortgages, and reduce the interest thereof; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, both Houses of the Congress of the United States, and to each Representative and Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. DUFFY also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to authorize the construction of the Kickapoo Valley Project and to make an appropriation therefor

Whereas Wisconsin is in dire need of the development, conservation, and control of the water resources of the Kickapoo River in the Kickapoo Valley to prevent the destruction of valuable properties by flood waters, the abandonment of large areas of land, and the waste of potential power sources; and

Whereas the Kickapoo Valley comprises an area approximately 100 miles long and 10 miles wide, including over 52 miles of railway, portions of the counties of Crawford, Monroe, Richland, and Vernon; and

Whereas the people of such area have formed an association known as the Kickapoo River Flood Control Association to investigate the control of floods in such valley and the area draining into it; and

Whereas such association has completed extensive surveys thereof and has otherwise secured the cooperation of the county boards therein; and

Whereas the engineers of such association, together with other independent engineers, have reported that such project was feasible from agricultural, financial, and engineering standpoints, and that such plan was adaptable to the conversion of water resources for the generation of electrical power; and

Whereas such association has requested the Federal Government to authorize the Kickapoo Valley flood control project; and

Whereas a greater degree of flood control in the Kickapoo Valley is desirable to prevent further destruction of highways, bridges, and other property losses, conserve highly fertilized farm lands, promote the generation of electrical power, and grant employment to hundreds of people now unemployed: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That this legislature memorialize the Congress of the United States to authorize the construction of such contemplated Kickapoo Valley project, and that adequate funds be appropriated so that construction may commence, thereby securing permanent benefits for the people of such region and offering ample unemployment relief; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, both Houses of Congress, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

Mr. DUFFY also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Joint resolution relating to memorializing Congress to modify the Works Progress Administration so as to provide needy taxpayers preferred employment on works projects

Whereas for want of steady employment great numbers of owners of property subject to tax are unable in whole or in part to pay their taxes; and

Whereas the problem of tax delinquency and wholesale delinquent-tax sales have become a grim menace to the morale and welfare of a substantial percentage of the small home and other property owners throughout the Nation and a financial embarrassment to numerous local units of government; and

Whereas receipt of taxes sufficient to meet fixed charges and current expenditures of government is a paramount factor in maintaining good government; and

Whereas giving these needy taxpayers preferred employment on Works Progress Administration projects will in a majority of cases furnish them with sufficient employment or supplemental employment to enable them to pay their taxes, thereby relieving them of the withering anxiety of tax payments and local governmental units of the grave problem of excess delinquent-tax rolls: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to modify the Works Progress Administration so as to provide that needy taxpayers be given preference of employment on all works projects; and be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to both Houses of Congress and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

Mr. CHAVEZ presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

House Joint Memorial 3

Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States and the Secretary of the Interior not to acquire additional lands in New Mexico for the use and benefit of the Indians

Whereas large tracts of land in this State have long been set aside for the Indians, and said lands are exempt from taxes and the State derives no revenue therefrom; and

Whereas this legislature is informed that the Federal Government contemplates the acquisition of additional large tracts of land for the use of said Indians, which acquisition will be detrimental for the citizens and taxpayers of this State: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, That the Legislature of the State of New Mexico memorialize the Congress of the United States and the honorable Secretary of the Interior not to purchase or acquire any additional lands in New Mexico for the use and benefit of the Indian tribes of this State; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this joint resolution be sent to the Honorable CARL A. HATCH, the Honorable DENNIS CHAVEZ, Senators from New Mexico; the Honorable J. J. DEMPSEY, Member of the House of Representatives; the Honorable Secretary of the Interior of the United States; and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate of the United States Congress.

Mr. CHAVEZ also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

House Joint Resolution 18

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact legislation enabling New Mexico to tax land acquired by the Federal Government from private owners in this State

Whereas the Federal Government has in the past acquired large tracts of land in New Mexico from private owners, and has thereby caused said lands to be removed from the tax rolls of this State, to the detriment of our communities and taxpayers; and

Whereas this legislature is informed that the Federal Government contemplates the acquisition of other lands from private owners in this State: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, That the Legislature of the State of New Mexico memorialize the Congress of the United States to enact legislation authorizing the State of New Mexico to levy taxes on lands so acquired in the past, or lands which may be acquired in the future, in the same manner and at the same rates as are levied and assessed against privately owned lands; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this joint resolution be sent to the Honorable CARL A. HATCH and Honorable DENNIS CHAVEZ, Senators from New Mexico, the Honorable J. J. DEMPSEY, Member of the House of Representatives, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to the President of the Senate of the United States Congress.

Mr. NYE presented the following resolution of the Senate of the State of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Whereas it seems to have been impossible to secure legislation necessary to stabilize the market price of farm crops in these United States; and

Whereas the difference in the price of grains when bought for seed and feed and when sold in the market has been so great that the farmers who have been compelled to borrow money from the various Federal agencies for the purpose of buying such feed or seed are frequently required to sell 2 or more bushels in order to discharge the cost of each bushel purchased; and

Whereas under such conditions it will be utterly impossible for many of our farmers to discharge their obligations to the Federal agencies: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota, That through this resolution we earnestly appeal to the Congress of the United States to enact such legislation as will permit any person now indebted, or who may hereafter become obligated for a Federal seed or feed loan, to discharge such debt by payment in kind, bushel for bushel; be it further

Resolved, That one copy of this resolution be sent to the Secretary of Agriculture and one copy to the President of the United States, one copy to each of our Congressmen, one copy to each of our United States Senators, and one copy to M. W. Thatcher, 423 East Leland Street, Chevy Chase, Md., these copies to be forwarded to them by our secretary of state immediately upon the passage of this resolution.

Mr. NYE also presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota, favoring the enactment of legislation to repeal section 4, the long-and-short-haul clause, of the Interstate Commerce Act, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

(See concurrent resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 1st instant, p. 1664, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. POPE presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Senate Joint Memorial 7

We, your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent that—

Whereas the maximum amount that can be paid to any person under the provisions of the Social Security Act is the sum of $30 per month, which said sum is not sufficient for the needs of any person receiving the same; and

Whereas under the law persons receiving Social Security funds are not permitted employment under any public works and by reason thereof must seek and eke out other financial assistance in such private employment as they are able to obtain and in doing so in many cases deprive able-bodied persons from obtaining employment and thereby tend to stagnate employment and national recovery; and

Whereas if the Social Security payments to the aged, infirm, blind, and needy were increased to an amount whereby the recipient thereof could live upon the same, the positions they are now holding could be filled by able-bodied persons and thereby tend to more employment: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Idaho (the house of representatives concurring), That we most respectfully urge upon the Congress of the United States and upon the congressional delegation from Idaho, Senators BORAH and POPE and Congressmen CLARK and WHITE, that an effort be immediately made to increase the Social Security payments to a sum of not less than $50 per month, so that the conditions as hereinabove set forth can be speedily corrected; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the State of Idaho be authorized, and he is hereby directed, to immediately forward certified copies of this memorial to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—ADDITIONAL PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I present a concurrent resolution which was adopted by the Legislature of West Virginia on the 3d day of March and ask that it be read from the desk for the information of the Senate.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I understand that I have the floor, and that if I yield the floor it will be with the understanding that I shall be recognized immediately after the conclusion of the morning business, and that no other business will be transacted after that time until I shall have made my address.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). The Chair will recognize the Senator from Washington upon the conclusion of the morning business.

The Senator from West Virginia asks that the resolution he has sent to the desk be read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution concerning the program of President Franklin D. Roosevelt for the organization of the Federal judiciary

Whereas the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, has submitted to the National Congress a proposal for the reorganization of the Federal judiciary; and

Whereas said proposal is to provide assistance to the Federal courts and prevent delay in the administration of justice: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of delegates concurring therein), That the Legislature of West Virginia hereby endorses and approves the efforts of the President of the United States to improve and strengthen the Federal judiciary; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States and to each of the Representatives in Congress from the State of West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have in my hand a letter embodying a resolution of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen. I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, have we reached that head in the routine morning business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The presentation of petitions and memorials is now in order.

Mr. McNARY. May I ask whether this resolution refers to the proposed reorganization of the judiciary?

Mr. McKELLAR. It does; and it follows the one which has just been read.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if we are to enter upon the reading of all the resolutions on this subject, particularly in protest, we shall be here until the middle of the summer. I have on my desk, and shall ask to have noted in the RECORD, memorials containing more than 4,000 names gathered by an organization of women in Oregon against the President's plan. I am going to do that in order to save time, Government expense, and space in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

We may as well have an understanding on this subject now as at any time. If we are going to have read every resolution which comes here, I state to the Senate that I can take all day in presenting resolutions and letters and memorials in opposition to the President's proposal.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this is a letter embodying a resolution heartily favoring the Supreme Court proposal of the President, signed by the president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen. If the Senator from Oregon objects to its being read, as I have asked, I shall ask to have the resolution published in the RECORD, and call the attention of Senators to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter embodying the resolution will be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The resolution is as follows:

BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE FIREMEN AND ENGINEMEN,
Cleveland, Ohio, March 5, 1937.

The Honorable KENNETH MCKELLAR,
United States Senator, Tennessee,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, having a membership of more than 75,000 in the United States, has, through its associations of general grievance committees, expressed its hearty endorsement of President Roosevelt's proposal for reorganizing the judiciary. The following resolution expresses our attitude:

"Whereas the courts of the United States in the exercise of their jurisdiction have invalidated many acts of Congress that were enacted at the suggestion of the President, in the interest of the Nation's social and economic welfare; and

"Whereas since these acts of Congress have been invalidated by the courts, the citizens of our country have had an opportunity to express their approval or disapproval of these acts and did on November 3 last, by an overwhelming majority, repudiate the opinion of the courts; and

"Whereas the same reactionary interests that so vigorously opposed the President on November 3 last are now attempting to defeat the will of the people by their opposition to the progressive proposal of the President to Congress that the courts be reorganized so as to make effective the will of the people as expressed: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we, the general chairmen's association of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, in session in Chicago, Ill., representing enginemen and hostlers on the railroads of the United States, endorse the President's proposal for a reorganization of the judiciary; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President and each Member of Congress and that a copy be furnished each lodge of our brotherhood, and be published in the next issue of our magazine."

We appeal to you to support the President in this much needed reform to the end that our judiciary may regain and hold the confidence of the people, which is so essential to the preservation of our institutions and the social and economic life of the Nation.

Respectfully yours,

D. B. ROBERTSON.

Mr. KING. I present a memorial signed by several hundred citizens of the State of Pennsylvania, which was sent to me by a citizen of that State. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; but, pursuant to the rule, I shall not ask that the names be printed.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, without the names attached, as follows:

DEFEND THE HERITAGE OF JUDICIAL INDEPENDENCE

A distinguished British jurist, Herbert Arthur Smith, professor of international law at London University, warns in a special dispatch cabled under copyright by the United Press under date of February 14 that the President's proposals relating to the Supreme Court threaten "a common heritage of English-speaking people since the end of the seventeenth century."

These proposals, says Prof. Herbert Arthur Smith, "raise issues which are the common interest of all civilized countries, particularly Britain, which shares a common legal tradition with the United States and certain common conceptions in the nature of judicial independence which has been a common heritage of the English-speaking people since the end of the seventeenth century.

"This tradition has two aspects. From the judges it demands complete abstention from all political activities, whatever may have been their private opinions before being raised to the bench. For the rest of their lives they are indifferent to all, and only servants and spokesmen impersonal of the law * * * so long as the judges refrain from all political activity, it is an obligation of honor that neither their persons nor their office shall ever form a target for political bombardment.

"It is not overmuch to say that the whole structure of law and justice according to our ideas depends on the honorable observance by both sides of this unwritten convention.

"Should it be broken down, our courts would quickly become, as the courts of Russia and Germany already have become, the mere agents of a political party controlling the Government. * * * If a law is declared by a judge to be unacceptable to the people, as represented by a government, it is our business to change the law and leave the judge alone.

"By this we mean that we consider the principle of judicial independence one of the fundamentals of free institution and believe the maintenance of this principle is of greater importance than the decision in any particular case, however great its immediate political interest. * * *

"In Canada and Australia we have Federal constitutions which are much in common with the Constitution of the United States, and it so happens that within recent weeks Canada furnished an example which may be interesting to American observers.

"During Prime Minister's Bennett's recent administration the Canadian Parliament enacted a number of statutes which may be roughly described as the Canadian counterpart of the New Deal. They dealt with industrial and social problems, and they were challenged in the courts on the ground that they purported to deal with matters which under Canadian Constitution are reserved to the Provinces. Three weeks ago the judicial committee of the Privy Council, which is the final court of appeals in such questions, decided the statutes were invalid.

"But that does not mean that those Canadians who were disappointed by the decisions will start agitation to get rid of the judges or swamp the supreme court with new appointments. They fully realized that in the long run they would lose much more than they could gain by any such tactics, well knowing the principle of judicial independence is of far greater importance than the enactment of any particular statute.

"A judge's business is to declare the law as he finds it laid down for him by the constitution and the legislature. Whether that law is capitalistic or socialistic, whether the principle is conservative or radical, it is equally the judge's duty to apply it as he finds it.

"If a change in the law is desirable, those changes must come from the people, acting through the appropriate legislative agencies."

ONLY THEY DESERVE LIBERTY WHO ARE WILLING TO FIGHT FOR IT

To the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

We, the undersigned, citizens of the United States, exercising our right of petition, protest against the President's bill, or any substitutes, permitting the executive branch of the Government to control or subordinate the judicial or the legislative powers established under the Constitution.

This bill would give to the President the power to remake the Supreme Court and to pack it with men to interpret the Constitution as he wishes. Such concentration of power is dangerous even in the hands of the best-intentioned men.

The framers of the Constitution divided the Government into independent legislative, executive, and judicial departments, because history shows that concentration of those powers in one department or one man inevitably leads to dictatorship.

This bill would establish such concentration of power as no one at any time in any place has been able to use for the public good. The independent branches of the Government would become the instruments of the White House. Public respect for the courts and the Congress, so essential in a democracy, would be seriously impaired.

If one President is allowed in this fashion to create a Supreme Court to interpret the Constitution so as to validate the laws he desires, neither he nor his successors will have to consult the will of the people concerning future amendments.

We therefore protest and demand that the constitutional safeguards of an independent judiciary be retained.

The power to amend our Constitution is not the Executive's, to exercise by indirection. It is not yours to surrender. It is ours; and we look to you, trustees of the people's liberties, to protect it. How you vote on this issue is all-important, now and in the future.

Mr. KING. I also present a communication in the form of resolutions addressed to me by several hundred residents of the State of Utah, which is in the nature of a protest against the President's proposal to reorganize the Federal judiciary. I ask that the communication be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, but, in pursuance of the rule, that the names be not printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the communication in the form of resolutions was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States of America, has proposed to the Congress of the United States that it grant to the President of the United States power to increase the number of Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States to the permanent number of 15, and has proposed that the Federal judiciary and its make-up shall be materially added to or changed; and

Whereas the undersigned believe that the granting of such proposals of the President by the Congress is likely to have the direct effect of so changing terms of office, dependency upon and acquiescence to the Executive's will and desires, by appointees to judicial office, and so, for the immediate future, render the judiciary a dependency of the Chief Executive and subservient to his will, and so destroy, at least for the present and immediate future, the independence of the judiciary, and so remove the check that an independent and coequal judiciary exercises upon the executive and legislative branches of the Government as to, in effect, destroy the American form of government; and

Whereas the President in his second inaugural address declared: "We are beginning to wipe out the line that divides the practical from the ideal; and in so doing we are fashioning an instrument of unimagined power for the establishment of a morally better world"; and

Whereas we agree with the former declaration of the President, made while Governor of New York State, to the effect that no man, be his qualifications what they may be, should be entrusted, or may safely be entrusted, with unimagined power; and

Whereas we believe that the effect of such change as is proposed by the Chief Executive to be made in the judiciary will have the direct effect of changing our present constitutional form of government with its checks and balances and divisions of powers, so as to center in the Chief Executive, to all intents and purposes, the power of a dictator, or that of an absolute monarch, while preserving the empty form of constitutional government, and so will destroy America as we have known it and the American system of government and substitute therefor a virtual dictatorship established by law: Now, therefore, be it hereby

Resolved by the undersigned in citizens' protest meeting assembled as follows, That we, the undersigned citizens of the United States and of the State of Utah, do hereby condemn and oppose the said proposals of the President of the United States made as aforesaid to the Congress; and it is by us hereby further

Resolved, That we commend and compliment the position and action in the matter of the President's proposals taken and had by the Honorable WILLIAM H. KING, United States Senator from Utah, as the position and action of a great American, and we urge Senator KING to continue his commendable struggle against the sought encroachments upon the powers of the judiciary by the Executive.

In witness whereof we have hereunto affixed our signatures at Salt Lake City, Utah, this the 24th day of February 1937.

Mr. KING. I also present a resolution or memorial signed by 88 residents of the State of Utah, among them persons from all walks of life, condemning the proposal for the reorganization of the Supreme Court. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD without the names attached, as follows:

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, February 25, 1937.

Hon. WILLIAM H. KING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned citizens of the United States, in meeting assembled to protest against the President's bill to remake the Supreme Court and pack it with men to interpret the Constitution as he wishes—

Heartily commend and congratulate you in the high-minded and patriotic position which you have taken in opposition to this proposed legislation. You are entitled to the thanks and gratitude of the thinking people of the State of Utah.

We ask you to do everything within your power to kill this legislation, which is aimed at the very heart of the Constitution, and which, if passed, will destroy constitutional government and inevitably lead to dictatorship.

Mr. KING. I also present another petition or memorial, signed by 87 citizens of the State of Utah, in opposition to the plan of reorganization of the Federal judiciary, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD, without the names, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, without the names attached, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

UTAH CHAPTER PRO AMERICA—PETITION TO CONGRESS

We, the undersigned, respectfully urge that you make every effort to defeat the proposal of President Roosevelt to increase the number of Judges on the Supreme Court of the United States. We regard this as an attempt to enlarge the Court to produce certain immediate decisions by executive, rather than by judicial, authority and inevitably to create a permanent subservience of the courts to the Executive. In our opinion, this would undermine the foundations upon which American institutions rest.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I present and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a resolution, or petition, addressed to me from the East End Democratic Club, of Harrisburg, Pa., relating to the proposed reorganization of the Federal judiciary.

There being no objection, the resolution, or petition, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, without the names attached, as follows:

RESOLUTION AS ADOPTED AS OF FEBRUARY 19, 1937

That it is our desire to go on record that we are in complete support of President Roosevelt's recommendations as to the reorganization of the United States Supreme Court and Federal judiciary.

That we consider his proposals as being fully in accord with such progressive policies as are deemed necessary for the furthering of those economic and social changes that may bring about the solution for our national welfare.

In witness thereof we, the undersigned, as officers of the East End Democratic Club, of Harrisburg, subscribe our signatures.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska will propound the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to inquire from the Chair if, after publication of all these matters, any space will be left in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD itself, or in the Appendix.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Inasmuch as the matter requested to be inserted in the RECORD today has not as yet been printed, the Chair is unable to answer that inquiry.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have noted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the receipt of a petition or memorial, containing an imposing list of names of citizens of Oregon, in opposition to the President's plan for the reorganization of the Federal judiciary. The list contains the name of Mrs. George T. Gerlinger, of Portland, who is president of the Oregon Chapter Pro America. I ask that this memorial, containing a list of about 4,000 names, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for its consideration in connection with the proposed court legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The memorial presented by Mr. MCNARY is noted under the heading Petitions and Memorials appearing in today's RECORD.)

Mr. MCNARY. The Chair will note that my request is a simple one. It does not require much space. It is done in accord with my own request. The Senator from Utah has offered a number of petitions, which, I understand, are to be printed in the RECORD. Was that the request?

Mr. KING. I am willing to follow the rule which is prescribed, and which will be followed by other Senators. It seems to me that if we should have all petitions or memorials printed in the RECORD it would perhaps meet the challenge suggested by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, as stated a few minutes ago when a request was made by another Senator, we must adopt a plan here—although the rule is not wholly distinct in its application—as to how far we shall go in printing in the RECORD these speeches and resolutions and petitions. I hope we may come to an understanding that they will be noted in the RECORD if it is desired that attention be called to them. I do not wish to be in the attitude of objecting to the printing of one petition or to one request and permitting another to go through without objection.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. MCNARY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the Senator from Oregon is right. The rule requires that resolutions of legislative assemblies be printed in the RECORD. Manifestly, that should be carried out. But ordinary petitions accomplish their purpose when they are noted in the RECORD; and I shall hereafter, when present, object to the printing of petitions that are not provided for in the rule—that is, other than legislative petitions—no matter whether they support or condemn the proposed legislation relating to the reorganization of the courts.

WHEAT CROP INSURANCE AND EVER NORMAL GRANARY DAY

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference, and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD, a proclamation by the Governor of the State of Montana, relative to wheat crop insurance and an ever normal granary day.

There being no objection, the proclamation was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BY THE GOVERNOR OF THE STATE OF MONTANA—A PROCLAMATION

Whereas by reason of successive droughts and insect pest invasions the wheat growers of the State of Montana are in a distressed condition; and

Whereas the economic losses of the wheat-growing industry of the State are reflected in loss of business and progress in other industries of the State; and

Whereas the national administration has recognized the emergency facing the wheat-producing industry, not only in Montana, but throughout all of the States in which hard wheat is grown; and

Whereas the national administration is giving its earnest attention to the passage of national legislation to effect a wheat crop insurance and an ever-normal granary act; and

Whereas the plan under consideration by the national administration provides insurance on the basis of computations of average yield over a given period of years; and

Whereas the wheat producers of the State of Montana and the national farm organizations of the State favor a 10-year period as a basis for insurable yield, and it appearing that it is necessary for the welfare of Montana to have this period inserted in the present national plan, and that it be made effective for the 1937 crop; and

Whereas all of the people of the State of Montana, regardless of their vocations or pursuits, will benefit from the enactment of this legislation: Now, therefore,

I, Roy E. Ayers, Governor of the State of Montana, do hereby proclaim and designate Saturday, the 20th day of February, A. D. 1937, as wheat crop insurance and ever normal granary day, and urge the people of the State of Montana to observe this day by efforts to secure united action for furthering the progress of this national legislation at the earliest possible date in order that the emergency confronting the agricultural industry of the State and the people generally may be relieved.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the State to be affixed.

Done at the city of Helena, the capital, this 10th day of February, A. D. 1937.

ROY E. AYERS.

By the Governor—attest:

SAM W. MITCHELL,
Secretary of State.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BURKE, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

S. 556. A bill for the relief of W. B. Greeley (Rept. No. 153); and

S. 1068. A bill for the relief of Earl W. Thomas (Rept. No. 154).

Mr. ELLENDER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 635) for the relief of Mary Daley, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 155) thereon.

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 1096. A bill for the relief of Michael E. Sullivan (Rept. No. 156);

H. R. 1097. A bill for the relief of Brook House, Ltd., of Sydney, Australia (Rept. No. 157); and

H. R. 1098. A bill for the relief of William L. Jenkins (Rept. No. 158).

Mr. TOWNSEND also, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1245) for the relief of Malinda J. Mast and William Lee Mast, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 159) thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 315. A bill for the relief of George W. Hanna and Bertha M. Hanna (Rept. No. 160); and

H. R. 601. A bill for the relief of Edna M. Callahan and Anna Scott (Rept. No. 161).

Mr. LOGAN also, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 1057. A bill for the relief of Joseph A. Ganong (Rept. No. 162); and

H. R. 2773. A bill to authorize the settlement of individual claims for personal property lost or damaged arising out of the activities of the Civilian Conservation Corps which have been approved by the Secretary of War (Rept. No. 163).

Mr. SCHWARTZ, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 118) for the relief of Harry D. McIntosh, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 165) thereon.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 843) for the relief of Guy F. Allen, chief disbursing officer, Division of Disbursement, Treasury Department, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 166) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 792) for the relief of Sam Larson, guardian of Margaret Larson, a minor, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 167) thereon.

Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 1170) to provide for the extension and completion of the United States Capitol, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 164) thereon.

TECHNICAL TRIPARTITE TEXTILE CONFERENCE—REPORT, COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, from the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably, without amendment, House Joint Resolution 252, to aid in defraying the expenses of the International Labor Office incident to holding its Technical Tripartite Textile Conference here in Washington, and I submit a report (no. 168) thereon.

As the report shows, Mr. President, the enactment of this measure is recommended by the President. Some haste is asked for because of the imminence of the conference itself. The measure appropriates only $15,000 for the purpose.

I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be taken up for consideration at this time and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the joint resolution by title.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 252) to aid in defraying the expenses of the International Labor Office incident to holding its Technical Tripartite Textile Conference was read by its title.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The inquiry will be stated.

Mr. McNARY. Have we concluded the routine morning business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The routine morning business has not as yet been concluded.

Mr. McNARY. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee is favorably reporting the joint resolution. The question whether or not it should be taken up for consideration now is one for unanimous consent. The report will be filed, and the joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN FOOD, DRUGS, AND COSMETICS—AMENDED REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE

Mr. COPELAND, from the Committee on Commerce, submitted, in lieu of Senate Report No. 91, heretofore withdrawn, an amended report (No. 152) to accompany the bill (S. 5) to prevent the adulteration, misbranding, and false advertisement of food, drugs, devices, and cosmetics in interstate, foreign, and other commerce subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, for the purposes of safeguarding the public health, preventing deceit upon the purchasing public, and for other purposes, heretofore reported from that committee with amendments.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GILLETTE:

A bill (S. 1783) to correct the enlistment record of Robert O. Anderson; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GUFFEY:

A bill (S. 1784) granting an increase of pension to Leah Jones; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ELLENDER:

A bill (S. 1785) to provide for cooperation between agencies of the Government in the purchase and sale of agricultural lands, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(Mr. ELLENDER introduced Senate bill 1786, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 1787) to place warrant officers of the Coast Guard in the same status with warrant officers of the Navy as to being commissioned chief warrant officers upon length of service; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. DUFFY:

A bill (S. 1788) for the relief of William J. Schwarze; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NYE:

A bill (S. 1789) for the relief of Roland L. Mackin; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. OVERTON:

A bill (S. 1790) authorizing the erection of a monument commemorating Zachary Taylor; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. McADOO:

AMENDMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT—OLD-AGE ASSISTANCE

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill to amend the Social Security Act to provide a Federal plan for old-age assistance. I ask that a memorandum I have relative to the bill may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill of the Senator from Louisiana will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the memorandum will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1786) to amend the Social Security Act to provide a Federal plan for old-age assistance, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The memorandum presented by Mr. ELLENDER is as follows:

MEMORANDUM IN EXPLANATION OF THE BILL TO AMEND THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT TO PROVIDE A FEDERAL PLAN FOR OLD-AGE ASSISTANCE, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES

The bill amends the Social Security Act to provide a Federal plan for furnishing financial assistance to aged needy individuals, the entire cost of the plan to be borne by the Federal Government, and to withdraw the Federal grants-in-aid to States under the other titles of the act. In order to encourage the States to continue to operate adequate plans for the purposes with respect to which the grants-in-aid are withdrawn, the bill provides that assistance to aged individuals will be furnished only to residents of States which have in operation approved State plans for aid to dependent children, maternal and child-health services, services for crippled children, and aid to the blind. The bill is effective as of July 1, 1937.

The old-age assistance plan is to be administered by the Social Security Board, which is authorized to utilize the services of State agencies. The plan provides that the Board will furnish to needy individuals over 65 years of age sufficient financial assistance to provide a reasonable subsistence compatible with decency and health, but not in excess of $30 a month. The Board is authorized to make reasonable investigations to determine the amount of assistance needed by any individual, and to change the amount of assistance from time to time if the circumstances warrant.

The provisions of the present act making appropriations and authorizing payments to the States for aid to dependent children, maternal and child-health services, services for crippled children, child-welfare services, vocational rehabilitation, and aid to the blind are repealed. However, those provisions of the present act which provide for the approval of State plans for aid to dependent children, maternal and child-health services, services for crippled children, and aid to the blind are retained. The purpose of requiring approval of such plans under this bill is to determine which States are adequately providing such services in order that the needy aged of such States may be eligible for Federal old-age assistance. In addition to the requirements of the present act for approved State plans for such purposes, the bill provides that the State plans must furnish services or assistance which is deemed by the Federal agency approving such plan to be adequate for the purposes the plans are designed to accomplish.

REGULATION OF COMMERCE BY AIRCRAFT—AMENDMENT

Mr. ANDREWS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by providing for the regulation of the transportation of passengers and property by aircraft in interstate commerce, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed.

SUGAR QUOTAS AND EXCISE TAXES—AMENDMENTS

Mr. PEPPER submitted sundry amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1757) to regulate commerce among the several States, with the Territories and possessions of the United States, and with foreign countries; to protect the welfare of consumers of sugars and of those engaged in the domestic sugar-producing industry; to promote the export trade of the United States; to raise revenue; and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—ADDRESS BY SENATOR M'ADOO

[Mr. ASHURST asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the subject of the proposed reorganization of the Federal judiciary, delivered by Senator McADOO on Mar. 5, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

REORGANIZATION OF THE FEDERAL JUDICIARY—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BURKE

[Mr. CLARK asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the proposed reorganization of the Federal judiciary delivered by Senator BURKE on Saturday, Mar. 6, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

VICTORY DAY ADDRESS BY SENATOR CHAVEZ

[Mr. HATCH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Senator CHAVEZ at the victory day dinner, Staunton, Va., Mar. 4, 1937, which appears in the appendix.]

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—LETTERS FROM CHASE S. OSBORN

[Mr. BROWN of Michigan asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD several communications relating to the proposed reorganization of the Federal judiciary, which appear in the appendix.]

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—ARTICLE BY CHARLES S. COLLIER

[Mr. LOGAN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by Charles S. Collier, published in the Washington Sunday Star of Mar. 7, 1937, relative to the proposed reorganization of the Federal judiciary, which appears in the Appendix.]

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—ARTICLE BY FRANKLYN WALTMAN

[Mr. HOLT asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Court Warfare", relating to the proposal to reorganize the Federal judiciary, written by Franklyn Waltman, and published in the Washington Post of the issue of Mar. 3, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—GERALD B. WINROD

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, in further connection with the reference to the Reverend Gerald B. Winrod, of Wichita, Kans., I ask unanimous consent, in order that the RECORD may be more complete, that I may read a short telegram which I have received from him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator may read the telegram.

Mr. BURKE. This telegram is addressed to me from Brownsville, Tex., under date of March 2, and reads as follows:

The statement that the half million petitions received by Senators and Representatives during last few days opposing demoralization of Supreme Court reflects Ku Klux Klan activity absolutely false. I am not member of Klan or any other secret society and never have been. No petitions mailed from Alma or any other point in Nebraska. I am just a very ordinary minister of the Gospel who has positive convictions and many friends. Two hundred thousand more petitions started yesterday and can easily increase number to few million if necessary. Here in Rio Grande Valley poll votes running 7 to 1 against proposed Court change. Feel free to make any use of this telegram you like without assuming responsibility of defending my plan of suggesting that Christians petition their Representatives because this was solely my own idea and has no connection with the efforts of any other man or organization which may also be fighting to save country from dictatorship.

GERALD B. WINROD.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—PROPAGANDA

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I think I have some of the propaganda which one of the "Christians" mentioned in the Senator's telegram has sent out, and I should like to read it. This was mailed to me from Station H, New York, and reads as follows:

SIR: You and the President are angry like a lot of wet-nursed schoolboys because your outfit has "not been able to appoint judges." What the people of this country now demands is that you and the President get into your respective and designated official capacities and stay there and keep your hands off the courts of this Nation. Your krazy New Deal and most of those scheming to apply its silly utopian rackets are as kracy. And you will be governed by Federal courts or your will be impeached and driven out of offices you never should have held. Get out, you traitors. The Supreme Court is in the Court! And it is in the saddel.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, since the subject of propaganda in connection with the President's proposal for changing the structure of the judiciary of this country has been brought to the fore, in very pertinent connection therewith I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to read, under the present order of business, because it has to do with the subject which has been referred to, section 201 of the Criminal Code of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARK. Section 201 of the Criminal Code of the United States provides as follows:

Use of appropriations to pay for personal service to influence Member of Congress to favor or oppose legislation. No part of the money appropriated by any act shall, in the absence of express authorization by Congress, be used directly or indirectly to pay for any personal service, advertisement, telegram, telephone, letter, printed or written matter, or other device, intended or designed to influence in any manner a Member of Congress, to favor or oppose, by vote or otherwise, any legislation or appropriation by Congress, whether before or after the introduction of any bill or resolution proposing such legislation or appropriation; but this shall not prevent officers and employees of the United States from communicating to Members of Congress on the request of any Member or to Congress, through the proper official channels, requests for legislation or appropriations which they deem necessary for the efficient conduct of the public business.

Any officer or employee of the United States who, after notice and hearing by the superior officer vested with the power of removing him, is found to have violated or attempted to violate this section, shall be removed by such superior officer from office or employment. Any officer or employee of the United States who violates or attempts to violate this section shall also be guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

This section has been more honored in the breach than in the observance, but in view of some of the propaganda which has already taken place from high officials of the executive department drawing salaries from the United States Government, and in view of some of the propaganda which is promised in the near future, it seems to me this section should again be brought to the attention of Congress.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. Does the section which the Senator has just read apply only to appropriation bills?

Mr. CLARK. No. It says, "No part of the money appropriated by any act."

Mr. LOGAN. I beg the Senator's pardon, but I understood the Senator to read further on in the section that the propaganda to which it refers must be in reference to bills appropriating money out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. CLARK. No; it says, "Intended or designed to influence in any manner a Member of Congress to favor or oppose, by vote or otherwise, any legislation or appropriation by Congress."

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. CLARK. I yield, if I have the right. I was reading the section by unanimous consent.

Mr. KING. Then I shall not interfere.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, while we are discussing the widespread excitement it is due to the country that I now say that I have received I do not know how many letters—thousands of them, which are stacked up in great bales in my committee room and in my office. I have employed a young man to open them, and he is just today beginning to open the letters received last Monday.

I do not intend to volunteer to the Senate any advice. That would be resented. But in this period of great popular interest in this subject it would become all of us to meet our respective duties with a high head, brave heart, and take these Olympic hurdles under heavy pressure. [Laughter.] That is what I, at least, propose to do.

Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD an article concerning myself from the New York American. It is not altogether laudatory, but it is fair and seems to deserve a place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York American of Feb. 25, 1937]

HENRY FOUNTAIN ASHURST, of Arizona, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, is a great orator, but some of his colleagues insist his championship of the President's judiciary program is inconsistent with his past views.

Senator BAILEY, in debate, fetched up a newspaper article pointing out the same and bearing the happy caption: "Henry, Thou Art a Jewel."

CONFESSES ALL

To fellow Senators and galleries the Arizona statesman made humble confession:

"My faults are obvious. There can be no doubt I have my full share. I suffer from cacoethes loquendi, a mania or itch for talking, from vanity, and morbidity, and, as is obvious to everyone who knows me, an inborn, an inveterate flair for histrionics."

Having confessed, the one-time Arizona cowpuncher rallied to his own defense and said:

"But there never has been superadded to these vices of mine the withering, embalming vice of consistency. Whoever in his public service is handcuffed and shackled by the vice of consistency will be a man not free to act as various questions come before him from time to time; he will be a statesman locked in a prison house the keys to which are in the keeping of days and events that are dead. Let me quote Emerson: 'A foolish consistency is the hobgoblin of little minds, adored by little statesmen.' "

BLASTS "CARPENDI"

"I spoke of my vice, cacoethes loquendi. There is another vice called cacoethes carpendi, the mania to find fault, to carp against everything that somebody else proposes, but never suggesting a remedy yourself. Such is cacoethes carpendi, a vice not wholly unknown in this Senate Chamber!"

From his hecklers Henry drew cheers.

CHILD-LABOR AMENDMENT

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if I may be pardoned another moment, I had intended to speak briefly today on the so-called child-labor amendment, because two questions are discussed throughout the country as to that amendment. The able Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] is ready to proceed, and I do not believe it would be courteous for me to ask him to yield. However, I hope to speak later in the week for 10 or 15 minutes in reply to two questions concerning procedure—not the merits of the so-called child-labor amendment, but procedure as to ratification. As I have stated, I do not feel that I should now trespass upon the time of the Senator from Washington.

FOREIGN INVASION OF AMERICAN FISHERIES

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the morning business is now closed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to say at the outset that I dislike very much not to be able to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], because I know the Senate would have been delighted to hear from him. However, it is a fact that because of the existence of the court issue we cannot declare a moratorium on the consideration of all other problems of interest to the Nation. Therefore, I felt, despite the discourtesy that might be involved, that I should not yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I will say to the Senator that the situation was quite the reverse. It was discourteous to the Senator from Washington for me to attempt to inject myself into his speech; and the Senator's observation that other legislation pending before the Congress is to be considered is quite a just one.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I desire to intrude upon the time of the Senate for the presentation of a discussion of the subject of the threatened invasion of American fisheries by certain foreign powers. This is a subject which at first blush might appear to be limited in its importance to the States upon the Pacific coast. However, I hope I can demonstrate during the course of my discussion that the problem is one which should excite the interest of the entire Nation.

During the past few weeks we have been discussing legislation involving international relationships particularly in the so-called neutrality legislation. It has been our objective to prevent, if possible, American involvement in foreign controversies. To avoid such involvement, the Senate has mandated the voluntary relinquishment of many rights the protection of which in the past has been viewed as properly essential. I believe, and I may say it is the unanimous opinion of all who are fully familiar with the problem of the threatened invasion of American fisheries, that this problem contains potentialities which may more seriously threaten the peace of the United States than any other on the immediate horizon.

I make this rather broad statement with no purpose of being an alarmist. Our present extremely friendly relationship with the nations involved should assure us that we can and should avoid controversy. That possibility, however, depends upon full understanding of the problem by the Government of this country, and willingness upon the part of the Government to attack the problem courageously, and with the determination that it will be brought out into the open, faced, and solved in such a way as to do justice to our citizens at the same time that we attempt to avoid controversy with other nations. The problem is dangerous to our international relationships only if it is permitted to continue to be submerged, and if the feelings that are now being engendered over it are permitted to smoulder through lack of general understanding.

I have said that the problem is one of importance. It involves the future of the fishing industry in the States of California, Oregon, Washington, the Province of British Columbia, and the Territory of Alaska. It involves an outstanding wholesome food supply besides the employment of thousands of our people. We might first judge its importance by the standard of the amount of money that our Federal Government, the governments of the three States, and the Province of British Columbia and the Territory of Alaska spend for the conservation of these fishery resources.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in my remarks a table showing the amount of these expenditures during the last 10 years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the table will be printed in the RECORD.

The table is as follows:

United States Bureau of Fisheries in Alaska, 10 years, 1927–36, inclusive, for propagation, patrol, research, etc	$3,576,000
United States Bureau of Fisheries in California, Oregon, and Washington, salmon hatcheries, 10 years, 1927–36	827,000
Territory of Alaska for propagating salmon, cleaning salmon streams, destroying salmon enemies, etc., 10 years, 1925–35, inclusive	362,000
Territory of Alaska, rebates on taxes account salmon fry released, 10 years, 1927–36, inclusive	90,000
State of Washington, expenditures for salmon hatcheries, protection of salmon, etc., 10 years, 1926–35 (number of salmon eggs handled in that period, 1,420,085,000)	1,966,000
State of Oregon, expenditures for salmon hatcheries, protection of salmon, etc., 10 years, 1927–36, inclusive	$1,297,000
State of California, expenditures for hatcheries, patrol, research, etc., on salmon, 10 years, 1927–36, inclusive	635,000
Province of British Columbia on hatcheries, conservation, patrol, and research, 10 years, 1927–36, inclusive	177,000
Bristol Bay (Alaska) packers' contribution for destruction of salmon enemies in that area, 10 years, 1927–36, inclusive	135,000
Alaska, trout tail bounties, fish ladder, and salmon stream improvements, W. P. A. funds, 1935–36	45,000
Dominion of Canada, funds spent in British Columbia waters mostly for conservation, protection, and regulation of salmon fisheries, 10 years, 1927–36, inclusive	4,575,000
Dominion of Canada, in British Columbia, for propagating salmon, 10 years, 1927–36, inclusive	871,000
Expenditures International Fisheries Commission for conservation, regulation, and research on halibut, 10 years, 1927–36, inclusive	554,270
Biological Board of Canada (Dominion funds), British Columbia division, fisheries and biological research stations at Prince Rupert and Nanaimo, 10 years, 1927–36, inclusive	991,000
Total for 10 years	16,101,270
Average per year	1,610,127

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I will not take the time of the Senate to read all these figures but will simply state that these governments have expended during this period of time $16,101,270, or an annual average expenditure of $1,610,000.

The importance of the subject might be judged by the standard of the value of the products involved. In a typical year the value of the manufactured canned fishery products in the territory under discussion was $97,159,000. The value to the fishermen of fish caught was $37,160,000. In these operations were used 20,914 vessels and boats, and direct employment was thereby given 77,026 persons. It is impossible to estimate the indirect employment resulting from these operations.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point of my remarks a break-down of these figures, as between the three Pacific Coast States, the Territory of Alaska, and the Province of British Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

FISHERIES OF THE THREE PACIFIC STATES, ALASKA, AND BRITISH COLUMBIA

Table showing number of people engaged in the fishery industries, number of vessels and boats so engaged, and value of the products

	Pacific States in 1934	Alaska in 1934	British Columbia in 1934	Total for eastern Pacific in 1934
Number of fishermen	19,232	9,433	11,322	39,987
Number of transporters	203	1,753	378	2,399
Number of persons in wholesaling, canning, etc	13,415	14,999	6,226	34,640
Total persons employed	32,910	26,190	17,926	77,026
Number of vessels and boats, fishing and transporting	7,123	4,911	8,880	20,914
Value to the fisherman of fish caught	$18,289,000	$11,541,000	$7,330,000	$37,160,000
Value of manufactures canned fishery products, etc	$41,243,000	$40,682,000	$15,234,000	$97,159,000

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It must be remembered that so far as canned salmon is concerned the United States' output comes entirely from the Pacific coast and around 80 percent of it comes from Alaska.

I have said that the problem contains potentialities of international complications. I have no desire to detain the Senate too long in the discussion of points not directly relevant to the problem confronting us. Having made this assertion, however, I feel that it is pertinent to my case to review some of the international disputes which have arisen throughout the world in the past over the question of fishery rights. The first recorded instance of serious international complications over fishery rights occurred in 1410, when the Earl of Holland complained of attacks by the Scots against Netherlands fishermen. This controversy raged intermittently and was the constant cause of conflicts and reprisals between the two nations until it was settled by a treaty in 1550.

England was in conflict with Norway and Denmark on the question of the right of English subjects to fish off the coasts of Iceland and Norway from the fifteenth century through to the last decade of the sixteenth century, and even then the interruption by the Danes of the English in their fishing off the coast of Iceland and the seizure of their vessels called forth strong protests from Queen Elizabeth.

On May 6, 1609, James I issued a proclamation directed toward the Netherlands fishermen, barring their herring fisheries along the British coast. Fulton in his book The Sovereignty of the Seas, declares that the Dutch in the reign of James and again in the reign of Charles were prepared to go to war with England rather than surrender their liberty of fishing. The proclamation of James was followed on May 10, 1635, by that of Charles I, but he had not an adequate fleet to enforce its provisions. The question of the fisheries played an important part in the discussions preceding the outbreak of the first Dutch war and during the ensuing peace negotiations. It cannot be questioned that the fisheries disputes were of profound importance in the underlying causes of both the Second Dutch War and the Third Dutch War, and the wars were only terminated with the abandonment by England of the claim of the right to levy an assize herring for the right to fish along British coasts.

In 1613, James chartered the Muscovy Co. He sent a fleet of seven armed vessels to catch whales at Spitzenbergen. This fleet destroyed the Netherland vessels, so the next year when the fleet of Dutch whalers sailed for the arctic it was convoyed by three men of war who took reprisals against the English fishing vessels.

During the entire seventeenth and eighteenth centuries sporadic controversies raged between the Netherlands and Denmark over the rights concerning fishing and whaling off the coasts of Greenland, Iceland, Norway, and Spitzenbergen. Denmark, by decrees issued in 1616, 1636, and 1639, prohibited foreigners from fishing in these territories. There were constant disputes, reprisals, and diplomatic controversies. It was not until a Danish squadron was dispatched to the north to defend the Danish claims and the Netherlands provided an armed convoy for its whalers and cod smacks that the Swedish, British, and French Governments intervened at Copenhagen and the controversy was ended.

All of these disputes arose over the right of one nation to prevent the fishing by the nationals of other nations off the coasts of its own territory or off the coast of territory which is controlled. The Scots claimed as waters reserved for themselves those extending up to a "land kenning" from the coasts. That amounted to a distance of from 14 to 28 miles. Denmark claimed general sovereignty over the Sound Belts, the Baltic, and the seas between Norway, Iceland, and Greenland. In 1636 the Norwegian Government attempted to reserve a zone of from 16 to 24 geographical miles for its nationals. Denmark in 1692 issued an edict prohibiting whaling within 40 geographical miles of its coasts.

In 1616 the British Government claimed that it had a right to levy assize herrings in a zone extending up to 100 miles of its coasts.

Protracted disputes occurred between Great Britain and France over the question of the rights of the representative nations in the North Atlantic fisheries. These disputes were the subjects of attempted settlement in the treaties of Utrecht in 1713; Paris, 1763; Versailles, 1783; Paris, 1914; and Paris, 1815. The question was not settled until the agreement of April 8, 1904.

In his book, The Law of Territorial Waters and Maritime Jurisdiction, page 364, Jessup says:

> The question of the right of American fishermen to fish off the shores of British possessions in North America troubled the diplomacy of the United States and Great Britain for over a century.

It commenced with the treaty of Versailles in 1783. On October 20, 1818, an agreement was reached concerning the fishing rights of American and British subjects on the Atlantic coast of North America. So difficult was the controversy and so numerous were the disputes under it that it finally became the issue in the North Atlantic fisheries award of 1910 by The Hague arbitral tribunal. These difficulties are described by Monroe in his work on international arbitrations. They resulted in numerous seizures of American fishing vessels during the period of the controversy. The Hovering Act of Nova Scotia was passed in 1836; a reciprocity treaty was signed in 1854. The question was included in the Treaty of Washington in 1871, and when in 1877 the United States was compelled to pay $5,500,000 it led to the termination of the Treaty of Washington.

Our Government became involved in a bitter dispute in Buenos Aires in 1831. We dispatched a war vessel to the Falkland Islands and suspended diplomatic relationships over the incident. Russia has had numerous difficulties involving her fishing rights. In 1821 the Czar attempted to prevent the fishermen of the United States and Great Britain from fishing in the Bering Sea, but on February 28, 1825, the controversy was ended by a convention. In 1891 and 1892 Russian cruisers captured American whaling vessels in the Bering Sea and the controversy was submitted to arbitration and damages awarded to the owners of the vessels. The Soviet Government on May 7, 1923, through the use of a Russian gunboat, captured the British trawler, the Lord Astor, and Great Britain dispatched His Majesty's steamship Harabell for the protection of the fishing vessels. In 1886, 1887, 1889 our Government seized British vessels for the violation of legislation enacted by Congress for the protection of fur seals in the Bering Sea. The controversy was not settled until the convention of July 7, 1911, between the United States, Great Britain, Russia, and Japan for the preservation and protection of fur seals.

The possibilities of conflicts over fishing rights have been many times increased by the modern-day use of efficient new facilities in the operations of catching fish. Many mechanical improvements have been made. Fishing boats can travel greater distances, complete their catch in a shorter time and return without prohibitive expense. This story is a vivid illustration of the application of power as our scientific age has developed it and made it available. Of outstanding importance were the adoption of gas engines in 1906 and of Diesel engines in 1921, of electric lights which permitted the 24-hour day, of steel anchor cables and the hauling of fishing lines by power machinery. The use of pound nets commonly called traps, makes possible a large increase in the number of fish that can be caught in prime condition during the period of their run. Where before, during all of the period of time which I have described, fishing controversies arose largely because of interference of one group of nationals with another, we now have a situation whereby the unrestricted fishing of certain species, at least, results in inevitable depletion of the supply. The story is told by the decline of the production in the North Atlantic halibut grounds since 1920. In the North Sea in that year there were produced 5,239,000 pounds. There has been a constant yearly reduction in the production until in 1933 the production was only 1,123,000 pounds. Realizing that these fertile grounds were being depleted, fishermen moved over to Iceland and their high year of production there was 14,815,000 in 1923. We see there the same gradual reduction until in 1933 the production was 6,868,000 pounds. As this production fell off, the fishermen moved to Greenland where they had a high year of 15,002,000 pounds in 1929, but the unrestricted, unregulated operation in those halibut grounds has brought the production down until in 1933 it was only 7,848,000 pounds. At this point I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a table showing the reductions in the North Atlantic grounds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The table is as follows:

Table showing the decline in succession of production from North Atlantic halibut grounds since 1920

Year	North Sea (pounds)	Iceland (pounds)	Greenland (pounds)
1920	5,239,000	6,006,000
1921	5,206,000	6,369,000
1922	8,545,000	11,720,000
1923	4,226,000	14,815,000
1924	5,247,000	13,562,000
1925	3,940,000	13,627,000	83,000
1926	2,640,000	11,205,000	2,865,200
1927	2,853,000	12,760,000	6,612,000
1928	2,324,000	8,412,000	10,980,000

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, we have had a similar experience in our salmon industry. In years past one of the most prolific sources of salmon was the Fraser River, which flows entirely through Canadian territory. Because of the fact, however, that the fish in coming back to the Fraser River to spawn must pass through the waters of Puget Sound, which is in the State of Washington, a treaty was necessary to bring about international regulation of this branch of the industry. Negotiations for that treaty have been going on since 1907. It was only last year, however, that this body ratified the treaty with reservations. In 1913 the pack of these fish was 2,357,000 cases, whereas 1929 the pack had fallen to 172,291 cases. This enormous reduction may have been partly due to a famous rockslide in the Fraser River as well as to overfishing, but all experts in the field unite in the belief that with proper conservation methods there is no reason why the supply cannot be rebuilt to its former magnitude.

I think, Mr. President, that I have established the importance of these fisheries to the Nation and that no one can deny the dangers involved if they are not protected from foreign interferences. I now want to discuss the threats with which we are confronted from other nations.

The first comes from Japan. At this point I want to say that I do not want anything I may say to be construed as a criticism of Japan or as an accusation that Japan may not find frequently asserted statements of international law in support of her position. Whether these statements are or are not sound I shall not argue at this time. To a greater extent than any other nation in the world, Japan is a fishing nation. In 1934 Japan's fishing and manufacturing of fish products gave employment to more than one and one-half million persons, which was one and one-half times as many as the Japanese textile industry employed. Japan is responsible for about one-quarter of the world's catch of fish.

At the conclusion of the Russo-Japanese War one of the rewards to Japan for her victory was the granting to Japan by the Treaty of Portsmouth of the right to fish in Russian waters. While the Russians have always maintained coastal fisheries off the coast of Siberia, they were not particularly aggressive. Under the czars, Siberian canneries were conducted largely by foreigners. The Russians were, therefore, willing to grant substantial fishing rights in lieu of the surrender of other property. Under the Soviet, however, the attitude of the Russian Government has entirely changed. It has sought to build up its Siberian fisheries. It has purchased American cannery machinery and has taken to Siberia American fishing experts and mechanics to teach its people how to conduct the canning operations. While it is true that by the treaty of 1925, under which the Japanese Government granted recognition to the Soviet Government and in return therefor Japan's fishing rights in Siberia were again recognized, there have been frequent disputes and controversies, and Japan now is operating merely on a year-to-year basis.

In their operations off the Siberian coast there is no apparent indication that the Japanese have attempted to apply conservation methods. The result has been, and I now quote from a petition submitted to the Japanese Diet in May 1936:

> There is little room for further expansion of the salmon fisheries that have been developed by our people on and off the far eastern coast of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, where the output is gradually dwindling.

One of the ironies of the present Japanese fishing situation on the Siberian coast is that the depletion has resulted very largely from the Japanese method of offshore fishing. Salmon are referred to as anadromous fish. Salmon spawn only in fresh-water streams or lakes. The young normally go to sea in their first or second year. They spend a period of from 2 to 4 years traveling through the distant miles of the oceans and then return for spawning purposes to the stream or lake of their birth. This constitutes the invariable life cycle of the salmon. They become most desirable from the standpoint of size and quality as they conclude their deep-sea feeding period and prepare to ascend the streams. They have not yet reached this stage while they are in the deep sea. When they get into the fresh-water stream immediate deterioration commences. The ideal time at which to catch salmon for food is just before they enter the fresh-water stream. It is a fact that when streams have excessive runs, overstocking results. For some unexplained reason this causes less reproduction than understocking. After spawning in the stream of birth, the spawned fish is undesirable as food and soon dies. The principles of true conservation require that sufficient escapement of salmon into the streams be permitted that the streams may be adequately stocked. It is also required that that portion of the salmon headed for the streams, which would result in overstocking, if permitted to escape, should be caught and utilized for food.

The Japanese method of offshore fishing consists of the sending out of large floating canneries operating on the mother-ship principles. These ships are equipped as canneries. They carry with them the fishing boats and the fishing gear. They use enormous nets, aggregating as much as 3 miles in length. While the equipment is expensive, they are not required to pay any rental for fishing grounds, and wages are very low. Concerning their operations, the Trans Pacific said:

> Today Japan has her efficiently developed open-sea fishery and by this method has acquired a sort of suzerainty over fish.

A practical monopoly of the open-sea fisheries off the coast of Siberia was granted by the Japanese Government to the Taiheiya Fishery Co. This method of operation, in which literally hundreds of miles of nets have been spread by fishing vessels, resulted in largely "corking" of streams and shore traps. These nets prevent the salmon from ever reaching their home streams in Siberia. This operation out in the open ocean is not and cannot be the subject of regulation by the Soviet Government without some new application of new legal principles. In addition to that, reports of Japanese scientists reveal that through such operations many immature fish are taken, which require the destruction of a larger number of fish for a pack of equal size. The logical consequences of the mother-ship operation of the Japanese have been such exploitation as might, if continued, bring about the practical destruction of the fishing industry off the coast of Siberia.

This has resulted in Japanese fishermen looking to other areas in which to fish. Since 1930 the Japanese have established their mother-ship operations off the coast of Alaska, but have limited them to the catching of crabs and to smaller fish that can be used in the manufacture of fish meal. Therefore, the petition which I heretofore mentioned was filed with the Japanese Diet, asking for the issuance of licenses for fishing salmon outside the 3-mile limit off the coast of Alaska. I quote from the petition:

> The Government should, in accordance with the requirements and hopes of the civilian population, engage in the fishing industry immediately, so a policy of development of the open-sea salmon industry in the northeast waters of the Pacific Ocean, and to endeavor to effectuate the plan. * * * At this time the best salmon fisheries of the world are to the east of the north Pacific Ocean. We now observe the production of canned salmon on the coast of Alaska to an amount several times as great as ours yearly. Thus our fishery people are keenly hoping for the opportunity of salmon fishing in those waters. The Government should make an epoch in Japan's fishing industry and meet the present need by immediately granting permission for the salmon fishery on the mother-ship system to operation on the north Pacific Ocean.

I may state that the foregoing quotation from the petition was printed in the Pacific Fisherman, a recognized trade journal on the Pacific coast, several months ago and has not been officially or unofficially denied.

In the November 18, 1936, edition of Far Eastern Survey, we find the following:

At the end of 1935 an application was made to the Japanese Government for permission to fish for salmon off Alaska, but in the spring of this year 89,000 yen were approved by the Japanese Diet for the purpose of investigating such fishing. The report states that "the Department of Agriculture and Forestry is to conduct extensive investigation of fishing resources in the Alaska waters, where it is stated there is an opening for salmon and trout fishing." It was said that the investigation would last about 3 years.

I sincerely hope that nothing will be done to precipitate unfriendly feelings, but that some solution may be evolved before any overt act should arouse the violent opposition of our own fishermen or retaliation from American commercial interests.

It must be remembered that Alaska furnishes 80 percent of the national salmon supply, which is a valuable export product. Our Government spends directly, or through the Territory, an average of approximately $400,000 a year in protecting this supply. We have elaborate regulations. We clear the streams in order that the fish may find passage to the spawning grounds. Salmon eggs are collected and redistributed. We regulate the kind of gear that may be used. We close the streams for fishing except during specific periods. We designate the positions that the traps must occupy.

If the Japanese are able to cork up our Alaska fisheries as they have the Siberian fisheries, the supply will soon be depleted and we shall face the same situation as is faced by the shore fisheries on the coast of Kamchatka. Succeeding in this, it is understandable that they will proceed south by the coast of British Columbia and the States of Washington, Oregon, and California.

The Canadains are not unaware of the dangers with which we are mutually confronted. On September 19, 1936, the Honorable G. S. Pearson, commissioner of fisheries for British Columbia, issued the following statement:

The Dominion should decide what rights we have in these fisheries; and if it finds that we have not sufficient rights to protect our interests, then negotiations should be started immediately for an international agreement to enable us to protect those rights.

These are our fish. In the case of salmon, of course, they are spawned and bred in British Columbia or United States streams. We could destroy all the salmon fisheries by preventing the fish from spawning, so that they cannot be considered as other fish the property of Canada and the United States. The halibut, of course, do not spawn in the fresh water, but Canada and the United States have spent large sums in saving the halibut fisheries from depletion and have sacrificed immediate profits to regulate the catch of these fish. Thus we feel that the halibut, too, are properly the property of Canada and the United States.

So far as Japan is concerned, the first of the 3 years of investigation has passed. A boat manned with a crew of fishery students, accompanied by scientists, and outfitted with scientific equipment, including cannery machinery for experimental use, cruised off the coasts of Alaska and British Columbia and last summer came into the port of Seattle. No definite conclusion has been announced, but it is generally believed that the investigations would prove the economic possibility of operations off our coast, and that at the end of another 2 years we shall be threatened with the depletion of this important resource and a catastrophe to this important industry.

However, it is not by Japanese alone that we are threatened. I have told you of the record of depletion of the halibut banks in the North Atlantic. Also, Japan is not alone in the perfection of the mother-ship method of operation. England and Norway and other European nations have had it perfected for years. Halibut is not canned but is sold as either fresh or frozen fish. The giant halibut mother ships of the North Atlantic are fully equipped, not merely to carry the small boats with which the catches are made but also for refrigeration. England faces a situation similar to Japan's. Let me read to you from the letter of transmittal to the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries, by Henry G. Maurice, secretary, accompanying the English report on sea fisheries for the year 1935:

No student of this report and of the reports of recent years can doubt that the fishing industry has reached a highly critical stage of its history. It must be remembered that nearly all our fish supply is taken in international waters. What affects our fishing industry, therefore, affects, in a greater or lesser degree, the fishing industries of all the coast of western Europe. The necessity for the regulation of fishing by international agreement is therefore apparent.

The British Government has made no move to encourage her nationals to seek out our North Pacific halibut banks as a substitute for the depleted banks of the North Atlantic. Indeed, when it is remembered that Canada has joined with the United States in an effort to save the fisheries, it would seem surprising if England should attempt to nullify the accomplishments of Canada. Nevertheless, powerful financial interests of England have had such a project under consideration. A combination of English and Norwegian financial groups own the steamer Thorland in Norway. It was planned to send the Thorland from Oslo on January 15. According to the Pacific Fisherman, the announced plan of this operation was to take aboard and freeze about 4,000,000 pounds of halibut and salmon and deliver it to the British market. The vessel carries a complete outfit of dories and gear and a large crew of Norwegian fishermen, and its operators were expected to catch some 2,000,000 pounds of fish off the coast of British Columbia and Alaska, and to buy an approximately equal amount. The reason the catch was to be limited to 2,000,000 pounds was that the representatives of the interests owning the Thorland made a proposition to local interests to limit the Thorland's catch to 10 percent of the total amount permitted by the International Fisheries Commission during any 1 year. This offer was made during the past year to individuals with whom I have personally talked in Vancouver, British Columbia, and Seattle. When the local businessmen notified the Thorland representative that they would not consider such a proposition, the threat was then made to go anyway, and conduct the fishing outside the 3-mile limit, and fish as they pleased. As I said a few minutes ago, the Thorland was supposed to leave on the 15th of January. Strong objections were made to her sailing, and so far she has not yet left; but there has been no satisfactory assurance given that she will abandon the project.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. WHITE. I am very much interested in what the Senator has been saying. I wonder if he has a definite opinion as to the procedure which should be followed to prevent the depletion of the fish supplies through the fish being caught in the open sea, outside the territorial waters of the United States or Canada.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I will say to the Senator that at the conclusion of my remarks I shall take up that point; and, if the Senator does not mind, I would rather wait until that time to deal with the subject.

Mr. WHITE. I apologize for interrupting the Senator.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. To appreciate the significance of this threat to the halibut industry, I must briefly outline the history of the industry before and since the adoption of the halibut treaty in 1924 between the United States and Canada. It is well worth heeding as a practical and outstanding example of what can be accomplished where two friendly nations with similar ideas and standards of living join together on a sound basis of cooperation.

Halibut spawn on the outer, deep edge of the banks. The eggs and larvae drift slowly into deeper water for a period of 3 or 4 months. They then arise to the upper layers of water to be deposited in shore and along the coast, where they undergo their change to small halibut. They then settle on the bottom. They reach maturity at the average age of 12 years. Until that time they migrate but little. They then undertake wider migrations; but even this is only to a limited extent, and their habitat remains the continental shelf. It is there that they are caught. In the North Pacific halibut are normally caught by independent crews of from 2 to 12, operating power vessels, which make trips of from a few days to several weeks. Halibut fishing is peculiar in that there are no large companies involved. The master of the fishing boat is usually the sole or a part owner. The men all work on a share basis, known as working on a lay. Each boat is independently operated. The men employed in the fishery are of a splendid, hardy type. I believe there are no hardier fishermen or better sailors to be found anywhere in the world. The halibut are caught by means of gear, a unit of which is known as a skate, which is really nothing but a number of hooks attached by short lines to a heavy groundline. Halibut off British Columbia were so plentiful as late as 1912 that the catch averaged about 300 pounds per skate. By 1930 unregulated fishing for halibut resulted in the reduction of this amount to about 35 pounds per skate. The percentage of second-grade small fish rose to 45 percent of the catch. Despite the fact that in 1930 the number of fishermen greatly exceeded that of 1912, and despite the fact that increased efficiency by the use of power in the boats made possible many more trips per year, and much wider fields for fishing operations were resorted to, the catch in southeastern Alaska and British Columbia, which in 1912 was 60,000,000 pounds, had been reduced by 1930 to 22,000,000 pounds.

Realizing the seriousness of the situation in 1924, a treaty was entered into between our Government and that of Canada for the establishment of the International Fisheries Commission, more popularly known as the Halibut Commission. In its beginning this Commission had only the power of investigation. The story of this investigation reads like a scientific romance.

Biologists, chemists, and other scientists using methods of research from many different branches of science, including even anthropology, were employed. The waters of the American side of the north Pacific were studied as to their depths, their temperatures, their currents, and their salinity. Every phase in the development of the halibut was subjected to scientific scrutiny. The existence of international control gave the investigation unparalleled completeness and efficiency, despite its small expenditures. Thousands of halibut in their various stages were examined and studied. Finally, by 1930 the Commission had sufficiently ascertained the facts so that the Governments of the United States and Canada were asked to enter into a treaty giving the Commission the power of regulation.

These regulations were put into effect in 1931. There was no effort made to reduce the total amount of the catch below the amount caught in the previous year. However, strict regulations were instituted and enforced limiting the periods during which this amount might be caught, and limiting the methods of catching, and by other means.

On the more depleted grounds, during the first 5 years under regulation, the catch per skate rose from 35 pounds to 62 pounds; the percentage of second-grade small fish was decreased from 45 to 28 percent of the total catch. The percent of spawning has increased the young, which, when of marketable size, will provide for an increase of the total catch. The income per vessel has increased. All of these results have been obtained without reduction in the total catch, and primarily by the simple procedure of limiting the intensity of the fishery, but also by the protection of spawners by winter closure, and of young fish by closed nursery areas.

It needs no proof to bring the conviction that if the mother-ship halibut operators of the north Atlantic are permitted to invade this field they will completely destroy the effectiveness of our halibut regulation, not only by the actual increase of intensity, but also by rendering it impossible to restrict our own fishermen when their competitors reap the profit. The International Fisheries Commission could have and would have no direct jurisdiction over them outside of territorial waters. They could and would come into closed nursery areas, and they could and would disregard the regulations closing spawning areas during the winter. The United States and Canada have spent $554,000 in this investigatory and regulatory work. It will have been largely wasted and our resources destroyed if, after depleting the North Sea, the Iceland, and the Greenland halibut banks, the fishermen of Europe commence their invasion in the North Pacific.

The solution of this problem is not a legislative one. It lies within the field described by the senior Senator from Idaho a few days ago in discussing the reciprocity trade agreements as being under exclusive executive control. It shall not be my purpose to attempt to point out a definite solution. It is my purpose today merely to present these facts to the Senate and, I hope, to the people of the country in order that there may be a better understanding and appreciation of the significance of the problem. I said in the beginning that I do not desire to assume the role of alarmist. With thoughtful, considerate, courageous, and decisive action the problem should not be difficult of solution. It is, however, one that cannot and must not be neglected. Its neglect would, in my opinion, result in serious consequences.

Three lines of approach to the sclution have been suggested. The first is the strong feeling that any nation invading our fisheries in the manner I have described has taken the aggressive and has invited retaliation by any means in our power. American and Canadian fishermen feel that they have a proprietary interest, not only because the fishery has been theirs from the beginning, but because it has been maintained by their own sacrifices. It is almost inevitable that the demand arise for the boycott of the products of the invading nation. The mere statement of the proposal suggests the many different implications of trade difficulties that may arise from such a situation.

Second, the suggestion has been made by our people that the United States and Canada should join in the declaration that the North Pacific continental shelf shall be construed the exclusive fishing area of the United States and Canada, and that the regulatory power of the two nations shall extend over the entire area. In this it must be admitted that we would be immediately confronted with international usage on the Atlantic Ocean limiting the power of a nation to a control over the area within 3 miles of its shore. To succeed in the enforcement of this doctrine we would necessarily be required to write some new rules of international law. I believe that this suggestion should not be thrust aside without a searching consideration.

It is a fact that the physical and historical situation on the Pacific is entirely different from that on the Atlantic. International law, like all law, should be plastic and adaptable and not absolute and dogmatic. At this point may I quote from the late Walther Schucking, who was a member of the Permanent Court of International Justice, as follows:

> When new circumstances arise the world employs new norms. It is the task of scholarship in this case to bear in advance the torch for the development of law. But whence does the scholar receive the light wherewith to enkindle this torch, if he occupies himself only with the material of positive law, which perhaps long since has ceased to be the just law which the nations need? In such circumstances particularly the other tendency of the science of international law, that of the natural law, regains increased meaning. It seeks to develop the law philosophically out of the idea of justice and the necessities of the nations. For centuries, in regard to the legal principles developed by it, it has laid claim to immediate validity.

The third suggested solution is the development of an international agreement between all the nations involved, a joint resolution. This suggestion was made by Dr. Seiji Konda, a representative of the Japanese Department of Agriculture, at a meeting of the International Research Committee of the Institute of Pacific Relations at Yosemite National Park, Calif., August 16, 1936. Dr. Konda's proposal, as shown by the minutes of the meeting, was that our Government and the Canadian Government join with Japan in a scientific investigation of our fisheries.

If the matter is put in that way, I, personally, could not agree to its consideration. Such a proposal would merely result in an agreement for Japanese participation in fishing resources which we and the Canadians have not only conserved but actually built up. I think our Government should understand that our people demand that any treaty into which we may enter must be bilateral. We must not be asked to simply permit others to participate in that which we and our Canadian neighbors have established and maintained. However, I do see in the present situation a remarkable opportunity for this administration to perform a valuable service in taking leadership in the settlement of the problems of the conservation of the fishing resources by all of the nations which might be interested. In such a movement, however, our Government must recognize its responsibility to our people for the protection of those rights and interests for the establishment of which they have made sacrifices in the past.

Mr. President, I have presented this rather lengthy discussion of this situation. I thank the Members of the Senate for their patience. I believe the problem is of vital interest to the entire Nation. I am positive that it is of supreme interest to the people of the State which I have the honor in part to represent.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, before I make a motion which I hope to present in a moment I wish to commend the Senator from Washington who has just spoken for his very scholarly and convincing presentation of a pressing problem. In his remarks he has spoken largely of the economic effect of the abuse of the fisheries. It must be recalled, however, that dealing with this problem with some nations goes far beyond the question of making money out of the fisheries. It comes really to a matter of life and death as regards the most important food with which the human family must be supplied. I refer to protein food.

Protein food is the most important and the most extensively used food consumed by human beings. In our country we depend largely upon cattle and poultry for the supply of protein food, the meat of the poultry, and also the eggs. In other countries, however, perhaps notably in Japan, where the cattle industry is very small, the question of an adequate supply of protein food must be a very pressing problem, and doubtless with the years will become more so. Therefore, in attempting any solution of this very important problem, we must face the probability that ultimately there will be an appeal to our humanity in respect to the control of the fisheries because of the necessities of other nations whose people do not have access to protein food of another nature.

My feeling as an American is that we must look forward to the time when the supply of protein food will be a pressing one in our country. There must not be an abuse of the fisheries and a waste of the fish; there must be not only conservation but, as the Senator has said, actually the building up of this great industry.

I do not profess to be a prophet, though I happen to be the son of a seventh son, but in my judgment the time will come in the United States when we will be raking and scraping and hunting and fishing to find this essential food. This is the time to deal with the problem. Doubtless it has not become on the human side quite so pressing yet in some countries as it will become in the future; but I think the Senator is to be commended for bringing the matter to our attention.

In the Committee on Commerce we have had the subject raised from time to time, particularly the use of the mother boats, spoken of by the Senator from Washington, and the taking of large catches of fish by the Japanese in the eastern portions of the Pacific. It is a matter which demands our foresight and farsight. It must be dealt with, and I hope that the Senator will proceed in furthering the thought he has in his mind, because this will become a more and more important subject to the American people.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I desire also to express my approval of what has been said by the Senator from Washington. I think no one who is familiar with the problem of the fisheries of the New England States can fail to sense the gravity of the situation confronting us as a people. We have seen our fish resources disappearing throughout the entire United States, along the Atlantic coast, in the area of the Gulf, and up the Pacific coast as well. Within my own time we have seen disappear from the waters of New England salmon, shad, and sturgeon. It was not many years ago that one could find the Atlantic sea salmon running into some thirty-odd rivers between New York and the Canadian border, and today there is just one river along that entire north Atlantic seaboard in which the Atlantic sea salmon is found in any numbers. The same thing has happened with respect to the shad and with respect to the sturgeon. We have seen a constantly decreasing supply of fish in the Chesapeake Bay area and to the south, shellfish particularly.

The salmon-packing industry, as the Senator from Washington knows, had its beginnings in California, I think, on the Sacramento River.

Gradually these operations have pushed farther and farther north as the streams to the south have become depleted. Only a few years ago we faced what seemed to be the extinction of salmon in some of the most important salmon rivers of Alaska, and Congress legislated in an endeavor to save this fish food for the people of the country. The halibut fisheries referred to have been pushed farther and farther away from our coast, until today I believe the great source of halibut supply is perhaps in Kadiak Island and away off the Aleutian Peninsula. We must do something or we shall see these food resources disappear.

Much the same situation existed a few years ago with respect to the seals of Pribilof Islands. When the United States bought those islands in 1867, as I recall the year, it was estimated that there were something like 3,000,000 to 5,000,000 fur seals in those herds, and that was the greatest fur-seal herd of the entire world. The United States started in letting concessions for killing the seals and making a per-capita charge per seal for the skins. The result of those concessions and of that killing, particularly the result of the pelagic sealing—that is, the killing of the seals while they were in the water, which usually took place while the female seals were swimming north toward their bearing grounds—was that toward 1910 or 1911 only about 100,000 seals remained of those tremendous herds that had been at the Pribilofs. In that situation, as the Senator from Washington knows, for I am sure he is familiar with the entire situation, there was a treaty negotiated between Russia, Japan, Canada, and the United States under which pelagic sealing was prohibited to the nationals of the several countries and under which the United States was given practically complete control of the seal herds. As the result of those conservation measures the seal herds have been brought back, so that probably in excess of a million seals are now annually found on the Pribilof Islands.

I myself believe that we must grapple with the fisheries problem in very much the same way. I see nothing effective we can really do except through international agreement. In the 1924 law dealing with salmon we provided that salmon caught outside the territorial waters of the United States could not be brought into our ports for freezing or for sale, but we only partially reached the situation itself. There is no check on returning the salmon to the Siberian and the Japanese ports for canning there.

I think the problem should be of the greatest concern to us all, and I feel that the Senator from Washington has rendered a public service in calling the matter to the attention of the Senate.

I hope good will result from the Senator's discussion of the subject.

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN FOOD, DRUGS, AND COSMETICS

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 5.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the motion is a proper one, and this is the proper time that it be made. I think the understanding, however, should accompany the motion that there will be no action today upon the bill or any amendment to it.

Mr. COPELAND. That is satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. 5) to prevent the adulteration, misbranding, and false advertisement of food, drugs, devices, and cosmetics in interstate, foreign, and other commerce subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, for the purposes of safeguarding the public health, preventing deceit upon the purchasing public, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to invite the attention of the Senator from Oregon and of the Senate to the fact that in the print now before us there are certain typographical errors, the omission of the repeal of certain laws not intended to be touched by the bill. A better wording of certain amendments has been found. So, if it is agreeable, I ask unanimous consent that the copy of the bill marked "Confidential Committee Print" be considered when the Senate undertakes the consideration of the measure. The print referred to will be distributed and be on Senator's desks tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I will say very briefly that the bill which is now the unfinished business differs very slightly from the bill which was considered last year and in the last day of the session was presented to the Senate as a proposed compromise with the House. We did not succeed in the conference committee in reaching an agreement, and the bill died. The provisions of this bill are well set forth in the report and I ask permisison that pages 5 and 6 of the report, beginning with the second paragraph on page 5, be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A summary of the principal respects in which this bill increases the scope of the old law and affords the public greater protection follows:

ADVERTISING

1. Prohibits false advertising of food, drugs, therapeutic devices, and cosmetics.

FOODS

2. Provides for the promulgation of standards of identity and a reasonable standard of quality for food. (A standard of quality is authorized by the present law for canned food only.)

3. Requires the labeling of unstandardized food to disclose the ingredients by name.

4. Prohibits traffic in food which is dangerous to health. (The present law permits regulation of dangerous food only in the event that the poison is added.)

5. Prohibits addition of poison. If it cannot be avoided in production or manufacture, when it reaches the consumer the product must be safe for human use.

6. Eliminates the "distinctive name" proviso of the existing law under which the sale of products, the labels of which are misleading, are now permitted sale.

7. Requires fully informative labeling of infant and invalid food.

8. Requires label declaration of artificial colors and artificial flavors in food.

9. Forbids traffic in confectionery containing metallic trinkets and other inedible substances which have been found to be a menace to the welfare of children.

10. Authorizes emergency license control of food that might be dangerous by reason of contamination with micro-organisms. Such licensing is limited to operations in which the public health cannot be protected otherwise.

COSMETICS

11. For the first time places cosmetics under Federal supervision. Requiring cosmetics to be truthfully sold and outlaws those injurious to health.

DRUGS

12. Prohibits traffic in drugs and devices which are dangerous to health under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling or advertising.

13. Requires habit-forming drugs to bear warning labels.

14. Requires adequate directions for use of drugs and devices and appropriate warnings against their probable misuse through overdosage, or by children, or in disease conditions where they may be dangerous.

15. Sets up special protection to consumers against drugs liable to deterioration.

16. Requires that claims of effect of drugs and devices must not be false or misleading in any material particular. (The present law makes fraud, that is, willful intent to deceive, an element of the offense; unwarranted therapeutic claims resulting from sheer ignorance of the manufacturer are not actionable.)

17. Defines "nonofficial" drugs as illegal if the standard of strength varies from the standard claimed. (The present law describes only those which fall below the standard claimed. Drugs which are too strong may be quite dangerous.)

18. Requires that antiseptics possess germicidal power.

19. Requires declaration on the label of the names of active ingredients of nonofficial drugs.

GENERAL

20. Prohibits the use of poisonous containers for food, drugs, and cosmetics.

21. Requires that food, drugs, and cosmetics be prepared and handled under conditions of reasonable cleanliness.

22. Forbids the use of uncertified and impure coal-tar colors in food, drugs, and cosmetics.

23. Prohibits slack-filling and the use of deceptive containers for food and drugs.

24. Provides for factory inspection and the procurement of records needed to prove Federal jurisdiction.

25. Provides increased penalties for violations.

26. Authorizes the Federal courts to enjoin violations.

Mr. COPELAND. The extract from the report outlines the principal respects in which this bill will afford the public greater protection than does the present law.

Mr. President, to enlarge briefly on the benefits conferred by this bill, let me say that in the first place it provides for the control of false advertising of food, drugs, therapeutic devices, and cosmetics. Under the present law there is no provision made for the control of advertising of products and devices supposed to be regulated by the existing food and drug acts.

Furthermore, the existing law has no reference to cosmetics. The cosmetic industry has grown to enormous proportions in the 30 years past, since the passage of the last act; and fair woman has become adorned and even fairer, if such a thing is possible, by reason of the use of various cosmetics. Our respect for her is such that we desire that whatever she uses may be safe to use, and that no harm may result from the application of cosmetics.

We come then to the matter of food. The new bill provides for the promulgation of standards of identity and a reasonable standard of quality for food. Under the present law, the McNary-Mapes Act—the only far-reaching and useful enactment on this subject which has done much to promote the welfare of the human family—the standard of quality is authorized for canned food only. The pending bill proposes that there shall be a standard of identity for all foods and a standard of quality.

I may say to the Senator from Oregon that, so far as I am concerned, I have no desire to press the measure further today.

TECHNICAL TRIPARTITE TEXTILE CONFERENCE

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, earlier in the day I asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution favorably reported from the Committee on Appropriations. I renew the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, when request was made that the measure be considered this morning, I objected because the request did not come at the proper time. It came during the consideration of routine morning business. I wish to ask the Senator from Tennessee whether the Committee on Appropriations favorably reported the measure.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes. In view of the stress of time the committee was polled, and, so far as I know, all members of the committee that were approached concerning the matter, or a large majority, signed in favor of reporting the measure. It was done while I was away. I have just returned. The measure provides for an appropriation of only $15,000. Delegates are coming here on our invitation, and it is necessary that the appropriation be made immediately. I hope the Senator will let the measure be acted upon without objection.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I should like to have the RECORD show that for the first time in my life I was acting chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. In the absence of the chairman, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and the ranking member, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], I acted as chairman. The committee was polled, and there was full acquiescence on the part of the committee.

Mr. MCNARY. That is a very satisfactory statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] for the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Joint resolution to aid in defraying the expenses of the International Labor Office incident to holding its Technical Tripartite Textile Conference

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $15,000 to aid in defraying the extraordinary expenses of the International Labor Office incident to holding its Technical Tripartite Textile Conference in Washington, D. C., in April 1937: Provided, That $10,000 of this appropriation shall be available for contribution for such purposes to the International Labor Organization, and not to exceed $5,000 shall be available for expenditure by the Secretary of Labor for expenses incident to holding such conference in Washington, including personal services in the District of Columbia, communication services, stenographic and other services by contract if deemed necessary without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5), local transportation, stationery, supplies, repairs and alterations, and such other expenses as the Secretary of Labor may deem necessary.

PARTICIPATION BY AMERICAN CITIZENS IN FRENCH DEFENSE LOAN

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I will avail myself of the opportunity to comment on a matter which I regard as of importance.

According to a press dispatch from Paris, of which I was informed, France is to float what she calls a "defense loan" of a billion dollars on Wednesday next, and the problem is to avoid the Johnson Act. It is proposed, according to the press dispatch, that the French Government will accept from American citizens purchases payable in United States currency with the agreement to repay in the same currency, and it is thought, it seems, by certain bankers in the United States and in France that the Johnson Act can be avoided by having the transaction take place in the country where the bonds are floated. I desire to say that they are taking some risk in engaging in that kind of a conspiracy.

The Johnson Act itself reads:

[Public, No. 151, 73d Cong.]

An act to prohibit financial transactions with any foreign government in default on its obligations to the United States

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter it shall be unlawful within the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States for any person to purchase or sell the bonds, securities, or other obligations of, any foreign government or political subdivision thereof or any organization or association acting for or on behalf of a foreign government or political subdivision thereof, issued after the passage of this act, or to make any loan to such foreign government, political subdivision, organization, or association, except a renewal or adjustment of existing indebtedness while such government, political subdivision, organization, or association, is in default in the payment of its obligations, or any part thereof, to the Government of the United States. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

SEC. 2. As used in this act the term "person" includes individual, partnership, corporation, or association other than a public corporation created by or pursuant to special authorization of Congress, or a corporation in which the Government of the United States has or exercises a controlling interest through stock ownership or otherwise.

Approved, April 13, 1934.

Of course, France comes within the purview of this statute, for she is in default not only as to the principal but as to the interest upon her obligations to the United States.

The plan seems to be, so far as can be gathered with the meager facts which we have, to evade the statute by having purchases take place and the transactions consummated in France; but I call attention to the fact, Mr. President, that, in addition to the statute which I have read, we have also a statute making punishable the offense of conspiring to violate the law of the United States, and also a statute punishing accessories before the fact and accessories after the fact in a violation of the law of the United States; so I think it is a rather dangerous road these bankers are pointing out to the investors of the United States in trying to purchase this so-called defense loan, which is a war loan and nothing less.

I am particularly interested in this matter, Mr. President, because of the fact that if such a transaction can be accomplished and achieved in that manner, the vast armaments that are now being built up in Europe will be built up largely out of investments sold to people of the United States, and the United States will supply the necessary funds to construct and build those vast armaments. Armament building in Europe is now going forward at the rate of about twice what it was last year, and, above all things, the United States should not contribute, directly or indirectly, to the building up of these armaments, to say nothing of the fact that we are contributing to the aid of those governments that have repudiated the debts which they now owe us.

I wanted to call attention to this matter for the reason that it is intimated—an intimation which I do not accept—that the Secretary of the Treasury is willing that such a transaction shall be carried on if it is carried on in the way suggested. Of course, I have not talked to the Secretary of the Treasury, but I do not assume that he would connive at the violation even of the spirit of the statute, certainly not of its letter. As a Government and as the agents and representatives of the Government, we should protest against a transaction which would be consummated in absolute violation of the spirit of the law if not of its actual letter.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. MCKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Medical Director Perceval S. Rossiter to be Surgeon General and Chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery in the Department of the Navy, with the rank of rear admiral.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, reported favorably the nomination of Allyn C. Breed, of Illinois, to be assistant chief inspector of locomotive boilers, vice John A. Shirley, retired.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Brig. Gen. Don Everett Scott, North Carolina National Guard, to be brigadier general in the National Guard of the United States.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of several officers for appointment, by transfer, in the Regular Army.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the consideration of the Executive Calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, March 9, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MARCH 8, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thy mercy, O Lord, is in the heavens; and Thy faithfulness reacheth unto the clouds. Thy righteousness is like the great mountains; Thy judgments are a great deep.

Blessed Lord, we seek the fellowship of Him who trod the wine press alone that we may not be less than ourselves. Vouchsafe Thy guidance unto us and banish fear and unbelief from our breasts. We pray Thee to make our lives lofty in spirit and in aim, and enable us to bravely resist temptation and with manly silence sustain the heaviest burdens. Pour upon us, our Heavenly Father, the riches of Thy grace and the abundance of Thy mercy. In all our land may that which is mischievous be turned into blessings and the perverted things redeemed from lust and selfishness. Graciously be with our Speaker and this selected body of the people throughout this week. In our Savior's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, March 5, 1937, was read and approved.

APPOINTMENTS TO COMMITTEES

Pursuant to the provisions of House Resolution 60, Seventy-fifth Congress, the Chair appoints as chairman of the Select Committee on Government Organization the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. COCHRAN, and to fill the vacancy thereon the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. BEAM.

Pursuant to the provisions of Public Resolution No. 4, Seventy-fifth Congress, the Chair appoints to fill the existing vacancy on the Joint Committee on Government Organization the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. BEAM.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a radio address made by me in Washington on March 6.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a radio address delivered by me on last Saturday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BIGELOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a radio address made by the gentleman from California [Mr. IZAC].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD a radio address delivered by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

TERM OF FEDERAL JUDGES

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would remind the gentleman from Mississippi that this is District day.

Mr. RANKIN. I have talked with the chairman of the District Committee.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Several speeches are to be made after the conclusion of District day business.

Mr. RANKIN. I understand, but I shall not take more than 3 or 4 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION TO LIMIT TENURE OF FEDERAL JUDGES TO TERM OF YEARS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I am this morning introducing a resolution to amend the Constitution of the United States so as to limit the tenure of office of all Federal judges in the future to such terms of years as Congress may prescribe.

Section 1 of article III of the Constitution of the United States reads as follows:

> The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation which shall not diminish during their continuance in office.

The term "during good behavior", of course, means for life, unless removed from office for misbehavior.

The resolution which I have introduced would amend this section 1 of article III to make it read as follows:

> The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office; and shall hold their offices during good behavior, but if appointed after the ratification of this amendment, for not longer than such terms of years as the Congress may by law prescribe.

I have discussed this proposition with large numbers of Members of both Houses, and I have yet to find any substantial number of Members in either party in either House of Congress who oppose it.

If it were put to a vote today, I am confident that it would be passed overwhelmingly, and that it would be ratified by three-fourths of the States at soon as their legislatures could pass upon it.

If this amendment is adopted and becomes a part of the Constitution, Congress can then fix the term of a Supreme Court judge at, say, 12 or 15 years, and could fix the term of a circuit court judge or a district judge at 5, 7, or 9 years, or at any other length of time that Congress might agree upon.

In my opinion such an amendment should have been adopted a hundred years ago. I hope we can get a vote on it at an early date, pass it through the House and Senate, and send it on its way to the various States for ratification.

INCOME-TAX RETURNS

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the fact that at this particular time the people of this country who have made $1,500 or more are making out their income-tax returns. I question very much whether they are able to understand the questions asked, for the returns are so complicated. It seems to me that the Congress is responsible for the returns the taxpayers have been requested to fill out. If there is one thing this Congress ought to do, it is to simplify the tax returns they have requested of the people of this country. I further question whether the Members of Congress themselves are able to understand the law and make out the returns. I understand they must get aid from the Government collectors. Imagine what trouble people have who are unable to secure the services of the help the Members of Congress have access to.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. As I understand it, it is largely an administrative matter. If the gentleman has any suggestions to make, he should transmit them to the Treasury Department, for I am sure they would like to simplify the returns that are required.

Mr. RICH. It is my belief that in order to simplify these returns the law must be changed. Congress must assume responsibility for these returns being so complicated. We must simplify this law so you and I and others can understand the English language.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. I agree with the gentleman that the income-tax returns are complicated and difficult to execute. It was my privilege to serve a few years ago as a member of a special subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee to make a comprehensive study of all the revenue laws of the country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I entered upon the discharge of those duties with the fixed determination to do everything possible to try to simplify the income-tax system and the returns that are required. It soon developed that a very obvious situation was present—that is, that the business activities of this country are complicated. We have to tax business as we find it. We cannot reorganize all of the business of the country for the convenience of levying taxes, and therefore have to have complicated returns.

Mr. RICH. I am not finding fault with the taxes. I am finding fault with the returns. And I admire the gentleman from Tennessee and his ability, but to simplify the returns we must simplify the law. This I know can be accomplished if Congress will act to that end.

MEMBERS OF BOARD OF VISITORS TO THE UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Committee on Military Affairs, which was read:

WASHINGTON, D. C. February 18, 1937.

Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to the act of May 17, 1928 (U. S. C., title 10, sec. 1052a), I have appointed during the remainder of the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress the following members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House as members of the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy: LISTER HILL, Alabama; A. J. MAY, Kentucky; R. EWING THOMASON, Texas; DOW W. HARTER, Ohio; CHARLES I. FADDIS, Pennsylvania; WALTER G. ANDREWS, New York; and DEWEY SHORT, Missouri.

Sincerely yours,

LISTER HILL, Chairman.

DISTRICT DAY

The SPEAKER. This is District of Columbia day.

DESIGNATION OF CERTAIN STREETS OR AVENUES IN THE MALL AS OHIO, MISSOURI, OKLAHOMA, AND MAINE AVENUES

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Joint Resolution 171, for the designation of certain streets or avenues in the Mall as Ohio, Missouri, Oklahoma, and Maine Avenues and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the four avenues extending east and west in the Mall between Third Street and Fourteenth Street and south of the National Museum and north of the Smithsonian Institution in the National Capital, the city of Washington, D. C., shall be named as follows: In honor of the State of Missouri the most southerly of such avenues shall be known as Missouri Avenue; in honor of the State of Maine the most northerly of such avenues shall be known as Maine Avenue; in honor of the State of Oklahoma the more northerly of the two center avenues shall be known as Oklahoma Avenue; and in honor of the State of Ohio the more southerly of the two center avenues shall be known as Ohio Avenue.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SALARIES OF OFFICERS AND MEMBERS OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE FORCE (D. C.)

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 2898) to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to fix the salaries of officers and members of the Metropolitan Police force, the United States Park Police force, and the Fire Department of the District fo Columbia", approved May 27, 1924, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to fix the salaries of the officers and members of the Metropolitan Police force, the United States Park Police force, and the Fire Department of the District of Columbia", approved May 27, 1924, be amended by striking out all of said section following the second period, which appears after the words "driver-privates shall have the same rank and pay of privates of the above classes", and place in lieu thereof the following:

"Members detailed to motorcycle service shall each receive an extra compensation of $120 per annum, and members of the force assigned to special service in the prevention and detection of crime shall be in two classes and receive extra compensation as follows: Class 1 shall receive extra compensation of $600 per annum; class 2 shall receive extra compensation of $240 per annum, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and empowered, in their discretion, to designate the members of the force assigned to such special service who shall be in class 1 and the remaining members of the force assigned to special service shall be in class 2: Provided, however, That members of the force designated by the Commissioners to class 1 shall, whenever possible, be members of the force in class 2, and have had at least 2 years' experience in class 2, but all vacancies in class 1 shall be filled from members of the force designated to class 2."

SEC. 2. Nothing in this act shall be construed as repealing or amending section 3 of the act entitled "An act relating to the Metropolitan Police of the District of Columbia", approved February 28, 1901, as amended.

SEC. 3. No member of the force designated to class 1, or class 2, according to the provisions of this act shall be demoted without a trial before the trial board.

SEC. 4. A member of the Metropolitan Police force assigned to duty in plain clothes must have previously performed duty for 3 years in uniform.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ESTABLISHMENT OF STANDARD OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4804) to amend section 11 of an act entitled "An act to establish standard weights and measures for the District of Columbia; to define the duties of the Superintendent of Weights, Measures, and Markets of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", approved March 3, 1921.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 11 of an act entitled "An act to establish standard weights and measures for the District of Columbia; to define the duties of the Superintendent of Weights, Measures, and Markets of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", approved March 3, 1921, as amended, is hereby amended by striking out the second proviso and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Provided further, That no person, firm, or corporation shall sell, offer for sale, or keep for sale any coal or coke in any package which does not contain 50 pounds, 25 pounds, or 15 pounds, avoirdupois weight, of coal or coke, as the case may be, and which does not have plainly and conspicuously printed on the outside thereof the true net weight of the contents of said package, and the name and address of the maker of said package."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 907 OF THE CODE OF LAW, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4188) to amend section 907 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901, as amended, up to and including June 7, 1924, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 907 of the act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901, as amended, up to and including June 7, 1924, is amended by striking out said section and substituting the following in lieu thereof:

"SEC. 907. Second and third convictions: That whenever any person having been convicted of any felony shall thereafter be convicted of any felony committed after such first conviction, the punishment shall be by imprisonment in the penitentiary for the full term provided by law for such crime at the time of such last conviction therefor; that whenever any such person, having been so convicted the second time as above provided, shall be again convicted of any felony committed after said second conviction, the punishment shall be imprisonment in the penitentiary for a period of not less than 15 years: Provided, That such former conviction or convictions and judgment or judgments shall be set forth in apt words in the indictment. On any trial for any of said felonies, a duly authenticated copy of the record of the former conviction and judgment of any court of record, for any felony against the party indicted, shall be prima-facie evidence of such former conviction, and may be used in evidence against such party."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RECORDER OF DEEDS BUILDING

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4217) to provide for the erection of a building to be used exclusively for the recorder of deeds.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be erected a Recorder of Deeds Building as provided for in an act entitled "An act to amend an act approved June 25, 1934, authorizing loans from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works for the construction of certain municipal buildings in the District of Columbia and for other purposes", approved May 6, 1935, and said building shall be used solely and exclusively for the performing of the duties and functions of the office of the recorder of deeds and shall be separate and distinct from any other building or buildings to be erected out of the funds authorized to be loaned to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for the purpose of erecting certain buildings, and for other purposes, as provided for in the above-mentioned act: Provided, however, That the amount to be expended for the Recorder of Deeds Building shall not exceed the sum of $500,000: And provided further, That if the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall fail or neglect to effect such loan for the purpose of erecting said Recorder of Deeds Building, said sum of $500,000 shall be made available out of the current revenues for the District of Columbia to be used for the purpose of erecting said building.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION OF DISABLED RESIDENTS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 157) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation of disabled residents of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes" (Public, No. 801, 70th Cong.).

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentlewoman from New Jersey explain this bill to us? I would like to know just what the bill does and how it will affect present conditions.

Mrs. NORTON. The bill simply raises the amount from $15,000 to $25,000, which is an increase of $10,000. It has been demonstrated before the committee that the measure is very urgently needed for the rehabilitation of disabled residents of the District. It has the endorsement of the Commissioners, and they are very anxious to have the bill passed.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The bill simply increases the amount available for this purpose from $15,000 to $25,000?

Mrs. NORTON. That is all.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And who pays it?

Mrs. NORTON. The District of Columbia.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the vocational rehabilitation of disabled residents of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", approved February 23, 1929 (Public, No. 801, 70th Cong.), be, and it is hereby, amended by striking out "$15,000" wherever it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "$25,000, to be immediately available": Provided, That no such additional appropriation shall be available for expenditure except when matched by equal appropriations of District of Columbia funds, which are hereby authorized.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WELTON B. HUTTON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4536, to provide for the holding of an examination by the Board of Optometry of the District of Columbia for a license to practice optometry in the District of Columbia for Welton B. Hutton.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask why any one individual should have special legislation of this sort enacted for his benefit.

Mrs. NORTON. I am going to ask the author of the bill, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH], to explain the measure to the gentleman.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that Welton B. Hutton has been a practicing optometrist for more than 12 years, with a splendid reputation in his business, in the District of Columbia. It is with the permission, and, in fact, with the endorsement, of the other optometrists here, through their board of optometry, that they hope it will be possible to give Mr. Hutton this examination.

At the time the act was passed, calling for the practice of optometry to be regulated in the District of Columbia, approved May 28, 1924, he was not living in Washington, and was not a licensed optometrist, having come from my district in West Virginia, I may say, to practice his profession here, and at that time he was not able to take the limited examination.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Why was he not able to take the examination then?

Mr. RANDOLPH. He had not been here long enough. The provisions called for 1 year of practice immediately prior to passage of the act.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It was a question of residence?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes; and I may say he has practiced here and is an excellent optometrist, and I may add also that his associates here in the District of Columbia would like to give him an opportunity to take the examination.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Why can he not pass the regular examination now?

Mr. RANDOLPH. There has been no such opportunity given him.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is there not an opportunity afforded any person who wishes to do so to pass this examination?

Mr. RANDOLPH. He never had an opportunity to take the limited examination due to residence requirements, and all we are authorizing in this bill is an opportunity for him to take the examination that he may qualify as a licensed optometrist.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstand any limitations relating to the time required to be engaged in the practice of optometry as set forth in the act entitled "An act to regulate the practice of optometry", District of Columbia, 1924, the Board of Optometry in and for the District of Columbia is authorized and directed to hold an examination for a license to practice optometry in the District of Columbia for Welton B. Hutton, Washington, D. C., in accordance with the other provisions of the aforesaid act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REGULATION OF SALES OF GOODS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 936) to regulate the sales of goods in the District of Columbia and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from New Jersey calls up the bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I do not know anything about the bill; I have never read it; but it is a bill that contains 50 pages. The committee report is simply a lot of words to the effect that it would be a good thing if this becomes a law. The report is indefinite—gives no information whatever. There are three or four organizations that evidently favor the bill, and the report says that it changes the whole contract law of the District of Columbia. Surely, if this committee is to be trusted with anything, it should not bring in a bill like this and ask that it be passed by unanimous consent without explaining it. I hope the chairman will take time to go into the matter and have the bill explained, and have it read for amendment, because it is things like this that weaken any committee in the estimation of the House. I object.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 936) to regulate the sales of goods in the District of Columbia; and, pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that debate be limited to 30 minutes, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from New Jersey moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill S. 936; and, pending that motion, asks unanimous consent that general debate upon the bill be limited to 30 minutes, one-half to be controlled by herself and one-half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]. Is there objection?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we take an hour, and that would give 30 minutes on a side.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Will someone explain what the bill means? I have not objected to the report, although it does not comply with the Ramseyer rule. This bill undertakes to repeal a lot of laws and changes a lot of laws, and those laws are not cited in the report, according to the Ramseyer rule. I hope someone will take the floor and tell us wherein the law is changed and explain the whole situation.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I modify my request and ask unanimous consent that debate be limited to 1 hour, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and one-half by myself. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] that he will be fully convinced, I think, that the bill does not do what he thinks it is going to do.

Mr. MICHENER. But I have not suggested what I think it is going to do. I do not know.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from New Jersey modifies her request that general debate be limited to 1 hour, one-half to be controlled by herself and one-half by the gentleman from Illinois. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentlewoman from New Jersey that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 936.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 936, with Mr. MCMILLAN in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, this bill codifies the law of the District of Columbia pertaining to sales so that it corresponds with the law now enacted in 34 States, and I would like to say to the gentleman from Michigan that the Uniform Sales Act is also the law in his State of Michigan.

The provisions of the Uniform Sales Act have been tested by innumerable judicial decisions in the many States of the Union in which it is now law. The States in which the act is now in force number 34, and this would bring the laws of the District of Columbia in line with the laws of those 34 States.

Mr. MICHENER. The report says that the law is practically the same as in these other States. The word "practically" is a big word. Will the lady explain wherein it differs from the laws of those other States?

Mrs. NORTON. My understanding is that the only difference between this act and the uniform act that has been enacted in 34 States was to make it applicable to the District of Columbia.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. This law was proposed by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia. It is substantially the same law that is in existence in 34 other States, including the gentleman's own State of Michigan. The purport of this law is to carry out the same purposes for which similar laws in these various States have been passed, and that is to enact a uniform sales act for the District of Columbia the same as exists in these various other States, as well as in the gentleman's State of Michigan. It has the approval of the Commissioners of the District and was drawn at the instance of the Corporation Counsel of the District of Columbia. It also has the approval of the National Commission on Uniform Laws, the American Bar Association, as well as other civic organizations interested in the passage of good legislation.

Mr. MICHENER. That is the same plausible answer that one could give who brought in any piece of legislation, merely saying that it has the approval of somebody's counsel and that it is a good bill, and that it explains in its "terminology" what it is, that it is supposed to be for the benefit of the people. That kind of an explanation of a bill is not worthy of this floor when we are discussing so important a bill as a bill that changes the contractual relations generally between people doing business in a State or in the District of Columbia.

The whole thing is shrouded in a lot of generalities. Here is a bill that somebody wants. It is alleged that it is practically the same as some other jurisdictions have enacted. The report should have stated what is changed. The chairman of the committee tells us this bill codifies all the laws in the District of Columbia on the subject of contracts. This House should not pass a law codifying, changing, and affecting all the contractual relations of all the people in the District of Columbia without reading it carefully and having a detailed explanation. The Committee at least should understand the bill thoroughly.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman is not a member of the District Committee, but is a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, and we all have great respect for him. He does not bring bills in in this way from his committee, and I hope he will discuss this bill as he would were it from the Committee on the Judiciary, and explain what every section does to the old law and what we have when we get through.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will be glad to do my best for the gentleman from Michigan.

This bill seeks to bring into uniformity with the laws of 34 of the States and Territories the commercial law relating to the sales of goods and personal property. It is the result of a number of years of effort on the part of the National Commission on Uniform State Laws. That is an organization created by the Governors of the several States for the purpose of simplifying and bringing into harmony the common-law decisions relating to transactions in the daily course of mercantile business.

It is a very important thing for commercial law to be simple, plain, and easily understood, because commercial transactions take place so rapidly that a misunderstanding of the law governing them very often results in serious loss to those engaged in them.

This law is not prepared by a group of people for selfish interests. The commissioners receive no compensation for their services. They are fine lawyers, interested in the development of the science and the spirit of the law, as contrasted with those who are so busy making money that they cannot contribute any of their time to the upbuilding of the profession to which they belong; judges of the courts, law teachers, and others. The original bill on this subject was written by Samuel Williston, who is professor of law at Harvard University and a great author and authority on the subject of contracts and sales throughout the United States.

Almost without change the law has been passed in the following States and Territories: Alabama, 1931; Alaska, 1913; Arizona, 1913; California, 1931; Connecticut, 1907; Delaware, 1933; Hawaii, 1929; Idaho, 1919; Illinois, 1915; Indiana, 1929; Iowa, 1919; Kentucky, 1928; Maine, 1923; Maryland, 1910; Massachusetts, 1908; Michigan, 1913; Minnesota, 1917; Nebraska, 1921; Nevada, 1915; New Hampshire, 1923; New Jersey, 1907; New York, 1911; North Dakota, 1917; Ohio, 1908; Oregon, 1919; Pennsylvania, 1915; Rhode Island, 1908; South Dakota, 1921; Tennessee, 1919; Utah, 1917; Vermont, 1921; Washington, 1926; Wisconsin, 1911; Wyoming, 1917.

This bill does not change existing statutes in the District of Columbia. It merely codifies and simplifies the law of sales and brings within the covers of a single pamphlet volumes that a lawyer would have to look into and a businessman would never be able to understand.

With reference to the changes I think the only changes between this bill and the laws as adopted in the various States relate to the Bills of Lading Act and the Warehouse Act, which Congress has already passed for the entire country, and in the amount fixed in section 4 for contracts in writing. They are only incidental changes which do not affect the substance of this statute.

The bill starts out with definitions which are the same in all the State laws. Then follow the formalities of a contract of sale and the subject matter of that contract. It describes what would be the situation as to the sale and delivery of merchandise under conditions which daily arise. For example, the loss or destruction of sold goods by fire, or otherwise; the question of defining and ascertaining the price of merchandise; how that is determined when a misunderstanding arises; sales that have warranties connected with them and conditions attached to them. It simplifies the law relating to those things. It defines what an express warranty of title in personal property is. It describes implied warranties in sales of property by description or by sample. It takes up the transfer of property, as between buyer and seller. It defines when title passes between one and the other; the sale of a piano, for example, or the sale of a radio, or the sale of a fur coat. Almost every daily transaction is involved in this law, which is written, after a study of 15 or 20 years, and also after the experience which it has had in 34 States of the Union.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I note in the committee's report that among the States that have adopted similar legislation is the gentleman's own State of Tennessee. How long has Tennessee had such a law?

Mr. CHANDLER. Since 1919, and it has worked admirably in that State.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The gentleman is a practicing attorney and would know the effect of that law. Has it been satisfactory?

Mr. CHANDLER. Very satisfactory. A very interesting point is that the statute has tended to reduce the volume of litigation on the subject of sales of personal property, and in that way relieves congestion in the courts. It has a progressive side in that respect also.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The legislation is not designed to give advantage to either the purchaser or the seller. It is in the interest of public welfare and is not promulgated by any merchant's association of any character.

Mr. CHANDLER. Entirely so. It is not promulgated by any particular group. It is a recognition, as I said at the beginning, of the great importance that commercial law shall be simple and easily understood, and that it shall not be necessary to go to the law books every time a difference arises between a seller and a buyer of merchandise in daily business pursuits.

I shall be glad to go on, if it is desired, and state what is meant by reservation of right of possession of property that may be sold under condition; sale by auction—there are lots of auctions in the District of Columbia. This bill defines clearly the law with reference to sales by auction. It relates to the transfer of the title of property by a person not the owner but who has some right of sale. The layman can read this bill and understand it just as the lawyer can. It is in the interest of the private citizen in the District of Columbia as well as in the interest of the lawyers.

Section 25 deals with sale by the seller in possession of goods already sold and states what his duties are.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. This is a law which is in effect in 34 States and has worked satisfactorily in these States, has it not?

Mr. CHANDLER. It has. The gentleman's State, Nebraska, has this law.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Nebraska has this law, and it has worked satisfactorily there. It has been construed by the courts so that the terms are understood. There is no uncertainty of the rights of the litigants where this law is involved.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is entirely correct, and I thank the gentleman for his contribution. As a matter of fact, all of the States surrounding the District of Columbia have this law, as I recall; and I think I am safe in saying that it would be the law in every State in the Union if somebody took enough interest in those States where it is not now the law to present it to the legislatures. Virginia and Maryland, for example, which the District overlaps, have this law on their statute books. This makes the law in the three jurisdictions uniform on sales of personalty.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CHANDLER. With pleasure.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Is this bill in conformity with the uniform law that has been adopted in these other 34 States?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. It is similar, as I understand it, to what we adopted some years ago in the law of merchants, the Uniform Negotiable Instruments Act, which applies to all negotiable securities and negotiable instruments. In the same way, this bill relates to the sale of personal property.

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes. It is very similar to the Negotiable Instruments Act, which is the same in every State and Territory in the country, and without which we would not be able to function in the handling of negotiable instruments. In just the same way the District of Columbia has passed already the Bills of Lading Act, the Child Labor Act of 1930, the Declaratory Judgments Act, the Fiduciaries Act, the Firearms Act, the Negotiable Instruments Act, and the Warehouse Receipts Act.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. I notice conditional sales are not covered in this bill. Is the gentleman going to come in later with a bill dealing with conditional sales?

Mr. CHANDLER. This is not my bill, I may say to the gentleman from Texas. It does not deal with conditional sales at all. They are covered by entirely different legislation, and they generally are different in each State.

I would be very glad to go further, if I have not already satisfied the gentleman from Michigan.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MICHENER. I wish the gentleman would go further and explain the bill. I am not so much interested in the fact that somebody says it is a good bill and that it is a uniform bill. Going further, let us take up the statute of frauds, mentioned on page 3, section 4. What is the present statute of frauds in the District? What is the amount?

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no statute of frauds in the District of Columbia now, so far as I know. This bill simply writes into the law the seventeenth section of the statute of frauds with reference to the sale of merchandise of the value of $500 or over, which contracts must be in writing, designed originally by the English statute of frauds, and intended to make definite and certain transactions of $500 and upward.

Mr. MICHENER. The statute of frauds is not uniform in the various States. In some States there is a limitation of $50 and in others greater amounts. In my State the amount is $100. It varies in the different States.

Mr. CHANDLER. Not very much, if I may interrupt the gentleman. They do not vary a great deal; $500 is the medium which has proven most satisfactory over the experience of a great number of years.

Mr. MICHENER. That is a pretty good explanation. Now, on page 4, section 6, paragraph 2, the bill deals with "fungible" goods. There are many Members here who do not know what "fungible" goods means. Will not the gentleman explain this for the benefit of those who are not lawyers?

Mr. CHANDLER. Fungible goods are goods in the mass in which each unit of the mass is similar to the whole. For instance, grain belongs in the class of fungible goods and money is fungible goods. That may explain it.

I think the gentleman is putting me through a bar examination.

Mr. MICHENER. I know the gentleman appreciates there are mighty few Members here who do know about this. The point I am trying to impress is that we are passing legislation here we do not know anything about. There are a few lawyers who do know about it. The gentleman is one of them. Other Members do not know anything about it. I am protesting against bringing important legislation in here and railroading it through by unanimous consent without Members having any idea what they are doing, and that is what is happening here.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I say to the gentleman, this bill came up in the Seventy-fourth Congress. It was reported favorably during that Congress. I looked at the bill at that time and hoped it would pass. Every Member of this body cannot study all bills of a legal character. It might as well be said that we ought to study an appropriation bill line by line. However, there are some of us in the House who have made a study of this subject for a number of years and probably you will have to take our word for it when we say it is a good measure and ought to be passed and will do a good service for the public in this community, especially when judges, lawyers, and law teachers have studied it for years.

Mr. MICHENER. I am usually willing to go along with the gentleman on a legal proposition, but he does not happen to be a member of that committee. I was unable to get any information from the committee. I talked with three or four members and they admitted that they did not know anything about it. It was reported here by the committee and the report accompanying the bill means absolutely nothing. It does not comply with the rule. Therefore it seems to me we ought to stop considering this type of legislation in this way.

Mr. CHANDLER. Recognizing, as I do, the situation which the gentleman has just stated, I took it upon myself to read this bill over very carefully during the week end so that if any question should arise I might be able to explain something that needed explanation.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman is to be commended.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Is the Uniform Sales Act, of which this is a copy, one of the codifications encouraged by the American Law Institute?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is. And I might add that the American Law Institute is doing a wonderful work in restating the body of the law. I thank the gentleman from Maryland.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CHANDLER] for his very able explanation of this bill. Not being a lawyer myself, as a rule it has been necessary to depend on the lawyer members of the committee, but unfortunately there does not seem to be a lawyer member of the committee present at this time.

This bill was considered by the Judiciary Subcommittee of the District Committee in the Seventy-fourth Congress, and there was no objection to the bill from any source. May I also say, Mr. Chairman, that before bills are considered by our committee they must be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia as well as the corporation counsel's office of the District of Columbia. Those of us who are not lawyers must depend upon the corporation counsel's office of the District for an explanation of and the necessity for these bills. When the corporation counsel and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia have passed upon the bills, they are sent to the Bureau of the Budget. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, before a bill comes to this House for consideration, as a rule, it is pretty well gone into by all responsible people in the District government. Then, too, we have a Judiciary Subcommittee of the District of Columbia which considers all of these legal questions. That committee is made up of lawyers, and I am sure the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] will bear me out in the statement that we carefully and fully consider these bills. The gentleman from Illinois being a lawyer, and a very able lawyer, perhaps can answer some of the questions that have come up.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, in order to clear up apprehensions or misapprehensions about my legal status, may I say that I am a member of the bar and incidentally a member of the bar of the District of Columbia as well as the State of Illinois.

Mr. Chairman, may I say a word with reference to this bill and with respect to procedural matters as far as District of Columbia legislation is concerned. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CHANDLER] is quite right in stating that this bill came before the District of Columbia Committee in the Seventy-fourth Congress. I looked at it at that time and gave it quite a lot of consideration. The bill was considered by the Senate also. I may say it is quite beyond the mental capacity of any Member of Congress serving on several committees to carry legislation in mind from one Congress to another. You familiarize yourself at the time with the details of the measure, and then a lot of those details go out of mind. When the bill comes back, quite often as a perfunctory matter, it is restored to the committee calendar, then it is reported out with not much discussion perhaps, but that does not militate against the merits of the bill nor against that kind of procedure. This has happened very often, and may I suggest it has happened in the case of this uniform sales act.

I do not pretend to be overly familiar with all the details of the act, although I have some rudimentary familiarity with the general law of sales and contract, like most lawyers. I look at this largely in the light of the recommendation under which it came to the Congress from the District Committee. I think it is apparent that the very able lawyers who make up the District bar, and there are not hundreds of them but thousands, would be before the District Committee if there was anything wrong with a bill that was considered by the committee in 1934. They have unequivocally endorsed that bill, which in their judgment will add materially to the legal set-up and the substance of the law as it covers sales and contracts and negotiable instruments in the District of Columbia.

Now, I may say that, insofar as I myself am concerned, in view of the fact you have a Federal bar association, a District bar association, and a woman's bar association that are made up of very able lawyers, when they place their sanction upon a bill you can at least say that in large measure it must contain a great deal of legal merit.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will it increase the business of the legal profession if the bill is passed?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not know, but, as a lawyer, I hope so. [Laughter.]

This bill comes before the Committee and the Congress with this recommendation.

Secondly, you have a cojurisdiction over in Maryland, and you have a codified sales law in Virginia, and you follow a sort of basic common-law procedure here in the District, so far as sales and that sort of thing are concerned. This has led to a great deal of confusion, and it has become necessary in the interest of the District and District business to get in line with Virginia and Maryland, because of the interplay of sales and contract sales and contract law as it exists between these three jurisdictions. This is another recommendation for the bill.

Thirdly, in substantially the same form in which it appears before the House today, this same bill obtains in some 34 State jurisdictions in this country.

Now, I may say that if it is a good law in the State of Illinois, I have no hesitation in saying that, in my judgment, it will apply very properly in the District of Columbia. If the lawyers in the State of Illinois, the Illinois Bar Association, and the students of law, including professors at Chicago University and Northwestern University, have served in order to make this a part of the organic law of the State of Illinois, then I am willing to go along with it, even though I cannot come before the House today and give a detailed explanation of all the provisions you will find in the measure. This is just like a great deal of legislation. You have got to accept some of it on faith. I venture to say that if you tried to read and masticate and digest all the bills that come before the Congress you would be reading day and night, early and late, for months and months just to catch up with your reading, to say nothing of being able to digest any of the material.

So, this bill having passed the Senate and coming here with the indirect recommendation of 34 different jurisdictions and with the direct recommendation of the bar association in the District of Columbia, I believe this should recommend itself to the favorable consideration of the Committee; and this is all I have to say on the subject. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time and yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's speech makes very clear the thing to which I object. The gentleman says that somebody presents a bill here and that all the Members of the House do not have time to digest it and study it and be able to explain the measure when it comes on the floor. This is true; but, under our system of parliamentary procedure, we establish committees for that very purpose, and the rules provide that these bills must go to the appropriate committee.

The gentleman who just preceded me tells us that he is a lawyer; that he has not digested the bill; that he cannot explain it; that he does not understand its details; but he accepts it because, perchance, some group gave it to him and told him it was a good bill to pass through Congress.

Let us shun the day when this Congress accepts the philosophy of the gentleman from Illinois as just propounded in his splendid manner. The gentleman is a wonderful speaker, uses a fine lot of words, will make you think black is white by his words, but I want something more than words, and when you bring in a bill of this kind I would like to have the members of the committee, instead of running off the floor when the bill comes up, because they do not know anything about the measure, stand up here and defend the bill, as did the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CHANDLER], who is not a member of the committee, but a Member who is interested in the subject, who has given it study, who knows what it is, and who is ready to come here and explain it.

We have had a lot of trouble with our District bills here and I am going to talk quite frankly. We have had a lot of trouble getting their bills through the Congress, and what has been the trouble? This is the best illustration that the committee does not come on the floor prepared to explain its bills. It does not seem to take its work seriously. It brings bills in here that it cannot explain; that it evidently has not studied in detail. If we are going to pass bills like this, without committees understanding the bills, why have committees? Let us just have somebody present a bill here and have two or three Members make splendid speeches and say, "It sounds all right, and I do not know why it will not be all right; I have not studied it, but the objective is all right and the purpose seems all right and somebody out in the State says it is all right, so now let us make it a law. Let us do it unanimously, let us do it quickly, let us be through with it."

Mr. Chairman, we have to get away from that type of doing things if the Congress is going to have the respect that it should have, and that it must have in the country, and the committees of Congress must get away from that way of doing things if those committees want the respect of the Congress or the respect of the country. I am not opposing this bill. I am opposing the procedure. I have not had time to read it. I came here hoping that the committee would take this bill of 50 pages changing the entire contractual relations of individuals and corporations in the District of Columbia and tell us at least something about it, other than that it is a fine thing, that it is a splendid bill, that some organization said so, and that we ought to pass it. I am not going to oppose it. Of course, the bill will pass, because this Congress on District matters has reached the stage where it does not give District matters the consideration to which they are entitled. We legislate for the District. This is District day. It should be a serious day for everyone. This day is the same to the people of the District of Columbia as your State legislature session is to your State. Your State legislature passes laws for the State and we pass laws here for the District of Columbia. We should take the matter seriously and so should the committee. It should not bring in bills that it at least does not know anything about. This condition is not the fault of the chairman. It is the culmination of years of lack of interest by Congress as a body in District affairs. The first step to regain interest, however, must come from the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes. I say to my good philosophical friend from the State of Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], first of all, that it might be a good idea for him to serve on the District of Columbia Committee for a while. It is a labor of love with the Members who do serve on that committee. It is a gratuitous service for which you get no credit back home. The gentleman would be surprised at the time it takes from one's own time in serving one's own constituency or the country. In behalf of the chairwoman of the Committee on the District of Columbia and all the members of that committee, may I say that they have rendered yeoman service to the country and to the District of Columbia, coming here day after day with committee hearings, subcommittee hearings, and all that, in order to digest the hundreds of bills that go across the committee's table. I point out to my distinguished and scholarly friend from Michigan that when you legislate with reference to the District of Columbia it is quite different from legislating for the country as a whole. There are 600,000 people here, and we try to consult them as to what they want. We try to consult them insofar as the benefits of the people of the District of Columbia are concerned, and they say to us insofar as they can through representatives, through professional men and others, that they believe this is a good bill. I think that is a recommendation in itself for the bill. We try insofar as possible to give them a measure of home rule in that respect and let them say a word once in a while as to the kind of legislation they think ought to obtain here.

I did not say that I did not digest this bill. I did say that I have not digested it since 1934, when it was first introduced, and I freely confess that I do not have the mental capacity to carry that sort of legislation with all of its detail in my mind from one year to another. Perhaps the very capacious ability of my friend from Michigan is equal to that sort of thing, but I confess to you freely that I am not, and I make no apology for it. If the truth were known I venture to say that a very small, infinitesimally small, proportion of the membership of the House knows everything about all of the bills on which they vote. If you have any doubt about that general statement, I cite you to the fact that bills are considered on the floor of this House where there has been considerable discussion, and then when the bells ring, just watch the Members come in and listen to the words they get from some clerk near whichever door they may enter the Chamber, on the majority or the minority side. I have seen it for 4 years, and I know that a very small percentage of the membership knows very much about all of the bills that go through the legislative hopper. So my good friend from Michigan does not have to lecture me particularly on my legislative attainments. Those will take care of themselves.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. CREAL. To inquire as to who is responsible for goods lost or damaged in transit.

Section 22 reads:

Unless otherwise agreed, the goods remain at the seller's risk until the property therein is transferred to the buyer, but when the property therein is transferred to the buyer the goods are at the buyer's risk, whether delivery has been made or not, except that—

(a) Where delivery of the goods has been made to the buyer or to a bailee for the buyer, in pursuance of the contract and the property in the goods has been retained by the seller merely to secure performance by the buyer of his obligations under the contract, the goods are at the buyer's risk from the time of such delivery.

When is delivery made, when it is placed in transit to the buyer? Then he would have to make claim for loss or damages in transit, or is it still the property of the seller? It would seem from the reading here that the seller relieves himself of obligations, where he was merely retaining title until the buyer had performed some conditions, and for that only, and it might make a shift as to who would present the claim for damages or loss in transit, by rail, for instance.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, this is a uniform provision, as my good friend from Kentucky will bear out. I conclude with this statement: I have voted on bills here that have not been fully explained, not only coming out of the District of Columbia Committee, but of many other committees; and so I say to you again that these bills receive a thorough discussion and thorough consideration in the Committee on the District of Columbia, and when we bring them to you we feel that we have good legislation that we can commend to the favorable action of the House. I say to the chairwoman that, in my judgment, she has not only done a remarkable job as chairwoman of the District of Columbia Committee, but I think she deserves the everlasting thanks of the Congress and of the people of the District for the amount of time she has devoted so diligently to this work. [Applause.]

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I agree with what the gentleman said relative to the chairman and the committee members I certainly want to put the gentleman from Illinois in that class, because he gives splendid attention to the business of the District of Columbia Committee.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MILLARD. Were there public hearings after public notice on this bill in the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think we had considerable hearings in 1934, as I remember it, and then hearings were conducted before the Senate committee.

Mr. MILLARD. After public notice to the people of the District, and they approved it?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. MILLARD. The gentleman does not answer the question, but, however——

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, may I add this word by way of recapitulation? Maryland and Virginia, the adjoining jurisdictions, now have this uniform sales act on the books. It obtains in 34 States of the Union. It has the approval of the local bar associations. It has been passed by the United States Senate. It has been properly considered by the District Committee of the House 2 years ago. It codifies the law on sales and contracts for sale and is very definitely in the interest of the general public.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after July 1, 1937, all sales of goods in the District of Columbia shall be made under and in accordance with the following provisions of law:

PART I

FORMATION OF THE CONTRACT

SECTION 1. Contracts to sell and sales: (1) A contract to sell goods is a contract whereby the seller agrees to transfer the property in goods to the buyer for a consideration called the "price."

(2) A sale of goods is an agreement whereby the seller transfers the property in goods to the buyer for a consideration called the "price."

(3) A contract to sell or a sale may be absolute or conditional.

(4) There may be a contract to sell or a sale between one part owner and another.

SEC. 2. Capacity—liabilities for necessaries: Capacity to buy and sell is regulated by the general law concerning capacity to contract, and to transfer and acquire property.

Where necessaries are sold and delivered to an infant, or to a person who by reason of mental incapacity or drunkenness is incompetent to contract, he must pay a reasonable price therefor.

"Necessaries" in this section means goods suitable to the condition in life of such infant or other person, and to his actual requirements at the time of delivery.

FORMALITIES OF THE CONTRACT

SEC. 3. Form of contract or sale: Subject to the provisions of this act and of any statute in that behalf, a contract to sell or a sale may be made in writing (either with or without seal), or by word of mouth, or partly in writing and partly by word of mouth, or may be inferred from the conduct of the parties.

SEC. 4. Statute of frauds: (1) A contract to sell or a sale of any goods or choses in action of the value of $500 or upwards shall not be enforceable by action unless the buyer shall accept part of the goods or choses in action so contracted to be sold or sold, and actually receive the same, or give something in earnest to bind the contract, or in part payment, or unless some note or memorandum in writing of the contract or sale be signed by the party to be charged or his agent in that behalf.

(2) The provisions of this section apply to every such contract or sale, notwithstanding that the goods may be intended to be delivered at some future time or may not at the time of such contract or sale be actually made, procured, or provided, or fit or ready for delivery, or some act may be requisite for the making or completing thereof, or rendering the same fit for delivery; but if the goods are to be manufactured by the seller especially for the buyer and are not suitable for sale to others in the ordinary course of the seller's business, the provisions of this section shall not apply.

(3) There is an acceptance of goods within the meaning of this section when the buyer, either before or after delivery of the goods, expresses by words or conduct his assent to becoming the owner of those specific goods.

SUBJECT MATTER OF CONTRACT

SEC. 5. Existing and future goods: (1) The goods which form the subject of a contract to sell may be either existing goods, owned or possessed by the seller, or goods to be manufactured or acquired by the seller after the making of the contract to sell, in this act called future goods.

(2) There may be a contract to sell goods, the acquisition of which by the seller depends upon a contingency which may or may not happen.

(3) Where the parties purport to effect a present sale of future goods, the agreement operates as a contract to sell the goods.

SEC. 6. Undivided shares: (1) There may be a contract to sell or a sale of an undivided share of goods. If the parties intend to effect a present sale, the buyer, by force of the agreement, becomes an owner in common with the owner or owners of the remaining shares.

(2) In the case of fungible goods, there may be a sale of an undivided share of a specific mass, though the seller purports to sell and the buyer to buy a definite number, weight, or measure of the goods in the mass, and though the number, weight, or measure of the goods in the mass is undetermined. By such a sale the buyer becomes owner in common of such a share of the mass as the number, weight, or measure bought bears to the number, weight, or measure of the mass. If the mass contains less than the number, weight, or measure bought, the buyer becomes the owner of the whole mass and the seller is bound to make good the deficiency from similar goods unless a contrary intent appears.

SEC. 7. Destruction of goods sold: (1) Where the parties purport to sell specific goods, and the goods without the knowledge of the seller have wholly perished at the time when the agreement is made, the agreement is void.

(2) Where the parties purport to sell specific goods, and the goods without the knowledge of the seller have perished in part or have wholly or in a material part so deteriorated in quality as to be substantially changed in character, the buyer may at his option treat the sale—

(a) As avoided; or

(b) As transferring the property in all of the existing goods or in so much thereof as have not deteriorated, and as binding the buyer to pay the full agreed price if the sale was indivisible, or to pay the agreed price for the goods in which the property passes if the sale was divisible.

SEC. 8. Destruction of goods contracted to be sold: (1) Where there is a contract to sell specific goods, and subsequently, but before the risk passes to the buyer, without any fault on the part of the seller or the buyer, the goods wholly perish, the contract is thereby voided.

(2) Where there is a contract to sell specific goods, and subsequently, but before the risk passes to the buyer, without any fault of the seller or the buyer, part of the goods perish or the whole or a material part of the goods so deteriorate in quality as to be substantially changed in character, the buyer may at his option treat the contract—

(a) As avoided; or

(b) As binding the seller to transfer the property in all of the existing goods or in so much thereof as have not deteriorated, and as binding the buyer to pay the full agreed price if the contract was indivisible, or to pay the agreed price for so much of the goods as the seller, by the buyer's option, is bound to transfer if the contract was divisible.

THE PRICE

SEC. 9. Definition and ascertainment of price: (1) The price may be fixed by the contract, or may be left to be fixed in such manner as may be agreed, or it may be determined by the course of dealing between the parties.

(2) The price may be made payable in any personal property.

(3) Where transferring or promising to transfer any interest in real estate constitutes the whole or part of the consideration for transferring or for promising to transfer the property in goods, this act shall not apply.

(4) Where the price is not determined in accordance with the foregoing provisions, the buyer must pay a reasonable price. What is a reasonable price is a question of fact dependent on the circumstances of each particular case.

SEC. 10. Sale at a valuation: (1) Where there is a contract to sell or a sale of goods at a price or on terms to be fixed by a third person, and such third person without fault of the seller or the buyer cannot or does not fix the price or terms, the contract or the sale is thereby avoided; but if the goods or any part thereof have been delivered to and appropriated by the buyer he must pay a reasonable price therefor.

(2) Where such third person is prevented from fixing the price or terms by fault of the seller or the buyer, the party not in fault may have such remedies against the party in fault as are allowed by parts IV and V of this act.

CONDITIONS AND WARRANTIES

SEC. 11. Effect of conditions: (1) Where the obligation of either party to a contract to sell or a sale is subject to any condition which is not performed, such party may refuse to proceed with the contract or sale or he may waive performance of the condition. If the other party has promised that the condition should happen or be performed, such first-mentioned party may also treat the nonperformance of the condition as a breach of warranty.

(2) Where the property in the goods has not passed, the buyer may treat the fulfillment by the sell of his obligations to furnish goods as described and as warranted expressly or by implication in the contract to sell as a condition of the obligation of the buyer to perform his promise to accept and pay for the goods.

SEC. 12. Definition of express warranty: Any affirmation of fact or any promise by the seller relating to the goods is an express warranty if the natural tendency of such affirmation or promise is to induce the buyer to purchase the goods, and if the buyer purchases the goods relying thereon. No affirmation of the value of the goods, nor any statement purporting to be a statement of the seller's opinion only, shall be construed as a warranty.

SEC. 13. Implied warranties of title: In a contract to sell or a sale, unless a contrary intention appears, there is—

(1) An implied warranty on the part of the seller that in case of a sale he has a right to sell the goods, and that in case of a contract to sell he will have a right to sell the goods at the time when the property is to pass;

(2) An implied warranty that the buyer shall have and enjoy quiet possession of the goods as against any lawful claims existing at the time of the sale;

(3) An implied warranty that the goods shall be free at the time of the sale from any charge or encumbrance in favor of any third person, not declared or known to the buyer before or at the time when the contract or sale is made.

(4) This section shall not, however, be held to render liable a sheriff, auctioneer, mortgagee, or other person professing to sell by virtue of authority in fact or law, goods in which a third person has a legal or equitable interest.

SEC. 14. Implied warranty in sale by description: Where there is a contract to sell or a sale of goods by description, there is an implied warranty that the goods shall correspond with the description and if the contract or sale be by sample, as well as by description, it is not sufficient that the bulk of the goods corresponds with the sample if the goods do not also correspond with the description.

SEC. 15. Implied warranties of quality: Subject to the provisions of this act and of any statute in that behalf, there is no implied warranty or condition as to the quality or fitness for any particular purpose of goods supplied under a contract to sell or a sale, except as follows:

(1) Where the buyer, expressly or by implication, makes known to the seller the particular purpose for which the goods are required, and it appears that the buyer relies on the seller's skill or judgment (whether he be the grower or manufacturer or not), there is an implied warranty that the goods shall be reasonably fit for such purpose.

(2) Where the goods are bought by description from a seller who deals in goods of that description (whether he be the grower or manufacturer or not), there is an implied warranty that the goods shall be merchantable quality.

(3) If the buyer has examined the goods, there is no implied warranty as regards defects which such examination ought to have revealed.

(4) In the case of a contract to sell or a sale of a specified article under its patent or other trade name, there is no implied warranty as to its fitness for any particular purpose.

(5) An implied warranty or condition as to the quality or fitness for a particular purpose may be annexed by the usage of trade.

(6) An express warranty or condition does not negative a warranty or condition implied under this act unless inconsistent therewith.

SALE BY SAMPLE

SEC. 16. Implied warranties in sale by sample: In the case of a contract to sell or a sale by sample—

(a) There is an implied warranty that the bulk shall correspond with the sample in quality.

(b) There is an implied warranty that the buyer shall have a reasonable opportunity of comparing the bulk with the sample, except so far as otherwise provided in section 47 (3).

(c) If the seller is a dealer in goods of that kind, there is an implied warranty that the goods shall be free from any defect rendering them unmerchantable which would not be apparent on reasonable examination of the sample.

PART II

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY AS BETWEEN SELLER AND BUYER

SEC. 17. No property passes until goods are ascertained: Where there is a contract to sell unascertained goods no property in the goods is transferred to the buyer unless and until the goods are ascertained, but property in an undivided share of ascertained goods may be transferred as provided in section 6.

SEC. 18. Property in specific goods passes when parties so intend: (1) Where there is a contract to sell specific or ascertained goods, the property in them is transferred to the buyer at such time as the parties to the contract intend it to be transferred.

(2) For the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties, regard shall be had to the terms of the contract, the conduct of the parties, usages of trade, and the circumstances of the case.

SEC. 19. Rules for ascertaining intention: Unless a different intention appears, the following are rules for ascertaining the intention of the parties as to the time at which the property in the goods is to pass to the buyer:

Rule 1. Where there is an unconditional contract to sell specific goods, in a deliverable state, the property in the goods passes to the buyer when the contract is made and it is immaterial whether the time of payment, or the time of delivery, or both, be postponed.

Rule 2. Where there is a contract to sell specific goods and the seller is bound to do something to the goods, for the purpose of putting them into a deliverable state, the property does not pass until such thing is done.

Rule 3. (1) When goods are delivered to the buyer "on sale or return", or on other terms indicating an intention to make a present sale, but to give the buyer an option to return the goods instead of paying the price, the property passes to the buyer on delivery, but he may revest the property in the seller by returning or tendering the goods within the time fixed in the contract, or, if no time has been fixed, within a reasonable time.

(2) When goods are delivered to the buyer on approval or on trial or on satisfaction, or other similar terms, the property therein passes to the buyer—

(a) When he signifies his approval or acceptance to the seller or does any other act adopting the transaction;

(b) If he does not signify his approval or acceptance to the seller, but retains the goods without giving notice of rejection, then if a time has been fixed for the return of the goods, on the expiration of such time, and, if no time has been fixed, on the expiration of a reasonable time. What is a reasonable time is a question of fact.

Rule 4. (1) Where there is a contract to sell unascertained or future goods by description, and goods of that description and in a deliverable state are unconditionally appropriated to the contract, either by the seller with the assent of the buyer, or by the buyer with the assent of the seller, the property in the goods thereupon passes to the buyer. Such assent may be expressed or implied, and may be given either before or after the appropriation is made.

(2) Where, in pursuance of a contract to sell, the seller delivers the goods to the buyer, or to a carrier or other bailee (whether named by the buyer or not) for the purpose of transmission to or holding for the buyer, he is presumed to have unconditionally appropriated the goods to the contract, except in the cases provided for in the next rule and in section 20. This presumption is applicable, although by the terms of the contract, the buyer is to pay the price before receiving delivery of the goods, and the goods are marked with the words "collect on delivery" or their equivalents.

Rule 5. If the contract to sell requires the seller to deliver the goods to the buyer, or at a particular place, or to pay the freight or cost of transportation to the buyer, or to a particular place, the property does not pass until the goods have been delivered to the buyer or reached the place agreed upon.

SEC. 20. Reservation of right of possession or property when goods are shipped: (1) Where there is a contract to sell specific goods, or where goods are subsequently appropriated to the contract, the seller may, by the terms of the contract or appropriation, reserve the right of possession or property in the goods until certain conditions have been fulfilled. The right of possession or property may be thus reserved notwithstanding the delivery of the goods to the buyer or to a carrier or other bailee for the purpose of transmission to the buyer.

(2) Where goods are shipped, and by the bill of lading the goods are deliverable to the seller or his agent, or to the order of the seller or of his agent, the seller thereby reserves the property in the goods. But if, except for the form of the bill of lading, the property would have passed to the buyer on shipment of the goods, the seller's property in the goods shall be deemed to be only for the purpose of securing performance by the buyer of his obligations under the contract.

(3) Where goods are shipped, and by the bill of lading the goods are deliverable to the order of the buyer or of his agent, but possession of the bill of lading is retained by the seller or his agent, the seller thereby reserves a right to the possession of the goods as against the buyer.

(4) Where the seller of goods draws on the buyer for the price and transmits the bill of exchange and bill of lading together to the buyer to secure acceptance or payment of the bill of exchange, the buyer is bound to return the bill of lading if he does not honor the bill of exchange, and if he wrongfully retains the bill of lading he acquires no added right thereby. If, however, the bill of lading provides that the goods are deliverable to the buyer or to the order of the buyer, or is endorsed in blank, or to the buyer by the consignee named therein, one who purchases in good faith, for value, the bill of lading, or goods from the buyer will obtain the property in the goods, although the bill of exchange has not been honored, provided that such purchaser has received delivery of the bill of lading endorsed by the consignee named therein, or of the goods, without notice of the facts, making the transfer wrongful.

SEC. 21. Sale by auction: In the case of a sale by auction—

(1) Where goods are put up for sale by auction in lots, each lot is the subject of a separate contract of sale.

(2) A sale by auction is complete when the auctioneer announces its completion by the fall of the hammer, or in other customary manner. Until such announcement is made, any bidder may retract his bid; and the auctioneer may withdraw the goods from sale unless the auction has been announced to be without reserve.

(3) A right to bid may be reserved expressly by or on behalf of the seller.

(4) Where notice has not been given that a sale by auction is subject to a right to bid on behalf of the seller, it shall not be lawful for the seller to bid himself or to employ or induce any person to bid at such sale on his behalf, or for the auctioneer to employ or induce any person to bid at such sale on behalf of the seller or knowingly to take any bid from the seller or any person employed by him. Any sale contravening this rule may be treated as fraudulent by the buyer.

SEC. 22. Risk of loss: Unless otherwise agreed, the goods remain at the seller's risk until the property therein is transferred to the buyer, but when the property therein is transferred to the buyer the goods are at the buyer's risk whether delivery has been made or not, except that—

(a) Where delivery of the goods has been made to the buyer or to a bailee for the buyer, in pursuance of the contract and the property in the goods has been retained by the seller merely to secure performance by the buyer of his obligations under the contract, the goods are at the buyer's risk from the time of such delivery.

(b) Where delivery has been delayed through the fault of either the buyer or seller the goods are at the risk of the party in fault as regards any loss which might not have occurred but for such fault.

TRANSFER OF TITLE

SEC. 23. Sale by a person not the owner: (1) Subject to the provisions of this act, where goods are sold by a person who is not the owner thereof, and who does not sell them under the authority or with the consent of the owner, the buyer acquires no better title to the goods than the seller had, unless the owner of the goods is by his conduct precluded from denying the seller's authority to sell.

(2) Nothing in this act, however, shall affect—

(a) The provisions of any factors' acts, recording acts, or any enactment enabling the apparent owner of goods to dispose of them as if he were the true owner thereof.

(b) The validity of any contract to sell or sale under any special common law or statutory power of sale or under the order of a court of competent jurisdiction.

SEC. 24. Sale by one having a voidable title: Where the seller of goods has a voidable title thereto, but his title has not been voided at the time of the sale, the buyer acquires a good title to the goods, provided he buys them in good faith, for value, and without notice of the seller's defect of title.

SEC. 25. Sale by seller in possession of goods already sold: Where a person having sold goods continues in possession of the goods, or of negotiable documents of title to the goods, the delivery or transfer by that person, or by an agent acting for him, of the goods or documents of title under any sale, pledge, or other disposition thereof, to any person receiving and paying value for the same in good faith and without notice of the previous sale, shall have the same effect as if the person making the delivery or transfer were expressly authorized by the owner of the goods to make the same.

SEC. 26. Creditors' rights against sold goods in seller's possession: Where a person having sold goods continues in possession of the goods, or of negotiable documents of title to the goods and such retention of possession is fraudulent in fact or is deemed fraudulent under any rule of law, a creditor or creditors of the seller may treat the sale as void.

SEC. 27. Definition of negotiable documents of title: A document of title in which it is stated that the goods referred to therein will be delivered to the bearer, or to the order of any person named in such document is a negotiable document of title within the meaning of this act.

SEC. 28. Negotiation of negotiable documents by delivery: A negotiable document of title may be negotiated by delivery—

(a) Where by the terms of the document the carrier, warehouseman, or other bailee issuing the same undertakes to deliver the goods to the bearer; or

(b) Where by the terms of the document the carrier, warehouseman, or other bailee issuing the same, undertakes to deliver the goods to the order of a specified person, and such person or a subsequent endorsee of the document has endorsed it in blank or to the bearer.

Where by the terms of a negotiable document of title the goods are deliverable to bearer or where a negotiable document of title has been endorsed in blank or to bearer, any holder may endorse the same to himself or to any specified person, and in such case the document shall thereafter be negotiated only by the endorsement of such endorsee.

SEC. 29. Negotiation of negotiable documents by endorsement: A negotiable document of title may be negotiated by the endorsement of the person to whose offer the goods are by the terms of the document deliverable. Such endorsement may be in blank, to bearer, or to a specified person. If endorsed to a specified person, it may be again negotiated by the endorsement of such person in blank, to bearer, or to another specified person. Subsequent negotiations may be made in like manner.

SEC. 30. Negotiable documents of title marked "not negotiable": If a document of title which contains an undertaking by a carrier, warehouseman, or other bailee to deliver the goods to the bearer, to a specified person or order, or to the order of a specified person, or which contains words of like import, has placed upon it the words "not negotiable", "nonnegotiable", or the like, such a document may nevertheless be negotiated by the holder and is a negotiable document of title within the meaning of this act. But nothing in this act contained shall be construed as limiting or defining the effect upon the obligations of the carrier, warehouseman, or other bailee issuing a document of title or placing thereon the words "not negotiable", "nonnegotiable", or the like.

SEC. 31. Transfer of nonnegotiable documents: A document of title which is not in such form that it can be negotiated by delivery may be transferred by the holder by delivery to a purchaser or donee. A nonnegotiable document cannot be negotiated and the endorsement of such a document gives the transferee no additional right.

SEC. 32. Who may negotiate a document: A negotiable document may be negotiated by any person in possession of the same, however such possession may have been acquired if by the terms of the document, the bailee issuing it undertakes to deliver the goods to the order of such person, or if at the time of negotiation the document is in such form that it may be negotiated by delivery.

SEC. 33. Rights of person to whom document has been negotiated: A person to whom a negotiable document of title has been duly negotiated acquires thereby—

(a) Such title to the goods as the person negotiating the document to him had or had ability to convey to a purchaser in good faith for value and also such title to the goods as the person to whose order the goods were to be delivered by the terms of the document had or had ability to convey to a purchaser in good faith for value; and

(b) The direct obligation of the bailee issuing the document to hold possession of the goods for him according to the terms of the document as fully as if such bailee had contracted directly with him.

SEC. 34. Rights of person to whom document has been transferred: A person to whom a document of title has been transferred, but not negotiated, acquires thereby, as against the transferor, the title to the goods, subject to the terms of any agreement with the transferor.

If the document is nonnegotiable, such person also acquires the right to notify the bailee who issued the document of the transfer thereof, and thereby to acquire the direct obligation of such bailee to hold possession of the goods for him according to the terms of the document.

Prior to the notification of such bailee by the transferor or transferee of a nonnegotiable document of title, the title of the transferee to the goods and the right to acquire the obligation of such bailee may be defeated by the levy of an attachment or execution upon the goods by a creditor of the transferor, or by a notification to such bailee by the transferor or a subsequent purchaser from the transferor of a subsequent sale of the goods by the transferor.

SEC. 35. Transfer of negotiable document without endorsement: Where a negotiable document of title is transferred for value by delivery, and the endorsement of the transferor is essential for negotiation, the transferee acquires a right against the transferor to compel him to endorse the document unless a contrary intention appears. The negotiation shall take effect as of the time when the endorsement is actually made.

SEC. 36. Warranties on sale of document: A person who for value negotiates or transfers a document of title by endorsement or delivery, including one who assigns for value a claim secured by a document of title unless a contrary intention appears, warrants:

(a) That the document is genuine;

(b) That he has a legal right to negotiate or transfer it;

(c) That he has knowledge of no fact which would impair the validity or worth of the document; and

(d) That he has a right to transfer the title to the goods and that the goods are merchantable or fit for a particular purpose, whenever such warranties would have been implied if the contract of the parties had been to transfer without a document of title the goods represented thereby.

SEC. 37. Endorser not a guarantor: The endorsement of a document of title shall not make the endorser liable for any failure on the part of the bailee who issued the documents or previous endorsers thereof to fulfill their respective obligations.

SEC. 38. When negotiation not impaired by fraud, mistake, or duress: The validity of the negotiation of a negotiable document of title is not impaired by the fact that the negotiation was a breach of duty on the part of the person making the negotiation, or by the fact that the owner of the document was deprived of the possession of the same by loss, theft, fraud, accident, mistake, duress, or conversion, if the person to whom the document was negotiated or a person to whom the document was subsequently negotiated paid value therefor in good faith without notice of the breach of duty, or loss, theft, fraud, accident, mistake, duress, or conversion.

SEC. 39. Attachment or levy upon goods for which a negotiable document has been issued: If goods are delivered to a bailee by the owner or by a person whose act in conveying the title to them to a purchaser in good faith for value would bind the owner and a negotiable document of title is issued for them, they cannot thereafter, while in the possession of such bailee, be attached by garnishment or otherwise or be levied under an execution unless the document be first surrendered to the bailee or its negotiation enjoined. The bailee shall in no case be compelled to deliver up the actual possession of the goods until the document is surrendered to him or impounded by the court.

SEC. 40. Creditors' remedies to reach negotiable documents: A creditor whose debtor is the owner of a negotiable document of title shall be entitled to such aid from courts of appropriate jurisdiction by injunction and otherwise in attaching such document or in satisfying the claim by means thereof as is allowed at law or in equity in regard to property which cannot readily be attached or levied upon by ordinary legal process.

PART III

PERFORMANCE OF THE CONTRACT

SEC. 41. Seller must deliver and buyer accept goods: It is the duty of the seller to deliver the goods, and of the buyer to accept and pay for them, in accordance with the terms of the contract to sell or sale.

SEC. 42. Delivery and payment are concurrent conditions: Unless otherwise agreed, delivery of the goods and payment of the price are concurrent conditions; that is to say, the seller must be ready and willing to give possession of the goods to the buyer in exchange for the price and the buyer must be ready and willing to pay the price in exchange for possession of the goods.

SEC. 43. Place, time, and manner of delivery: (1) Whether it is for the buyer to take possession of the goods or for the seller to send them to the buyer is a question depending in each case on the contract, express or implied, between the parties. Apart from any such contract, express or implied, or usage of trade to the contrary, the place of delivery is the seller's place of business if he have one, and if not his residence; but in case of a contract to sell or a sale of specific goods, which to the knowledge of the parties when the contract or the sale was made were in some other place, then that place is the place of delivery.

(2) Where by a contract to sell or a sale the seller is bound to send the goods to the buyer, but no time for sending them is fixed, the seller is bound to send them within a reasonable time.

(3) Where the goods at the time of sale are in the possession of a third person, the seller has not fulfilled his obligation to deliver to the buyer unless and until such third person acknowledges to the buyer that he holds the goods on the buyer's behalf; but as against all others than the seller the buyer shall be regarded as having received delivery from the time when such third person first has notice of the sale. Nothing in this section, however, shall affect the operation of the issue or transfer of any document of title to goods.

(4) Demand or tender of delivery may be treated as ineffectual unless made at a reasonable hour. What is a reasonable hour is a question of fact.

(5) Unless otherwise agreed, the expenses of and incidental to putting the goods into a deliverable state must be borne by the seller.

SEC. 44. Delivery of wrong quantity: (1) Where the seller delivers to the buyer a quantity of goods less than he contracted to sell, the buyer may reject them, but if the buyer accepts or retains the goods so delivered, knowing that the seller is not going to perform the contract in full, he must pay for them at the contract rate. If, however, the buyer has used or disposed of the goods delivered before he knows that the seller is not going to perform his contract in full, the buyer shall not be liable for more than the fair value to him of the goods so received.

(2) Where the seller delivers to the buyer a quantity of goods larger than he contracted to sell, the buyer may accept the goods included in the contract and reject the rest, or he may reject the whole. If the buyer accepts the whole of the goods so delivered, he must pay for them at the contract rate.

(3) Where the seller delivers to the buyer the goods he contracted to sell mixed with goods of a different description not included in the contract, the buyer may accept the goods which are in accordance with the contract and reject the rest, or he may reject the whole.

(4) The provisions of this section are subject to any usage of trade, special agreement, or course of dealing between the parties.

SEC. 45. Delivery in installments: (1) Unless otherwise agreed, the buyer of goods is not bound to accept delivery thereof by installments.

(2) Where there is a contract to sell goods to be delivered by stated installments, which are to be separately paid for, and the seller makes defective deliveries in respect of one or more installments, or the buyer neglects or refuses to make delivery of or pay for one or more installments, it depends in each case on the terms of the contract and the circumstances of the case, whether the breach of contract is so material as to justify the injured party in refusing to proceed further and suing for damages for breach of the entire contract, or whether the breach is severable, giving rise to a claim for compensation but not to a right to treat the whole contract as broken.

SEC. 46. Delivery to a carrier on behalf of the buyer: (1) Where, in pursuance of a contract to sell or a sale, the seller is authorized or required to send the goods to the buyer, delivery of the goods to a carrier, whether named by the buyer or not, for the purpose of transmission to the buyer is deemed to be a delivery of the goods to the buyer, except in the cases provided for in section 19, rule 5, or unless a contrary intent appears.

(2) Unless otherwise authorized by the buyer, the seller must make such contract with the carrier on behalf of the buyer as may be reasonable, having regard to the nature of the goods and the other circumstances of the case. If the seller omit so to do, and the goods are lost or damaged in course of transit, the buyer may decline to treat the delivery to the carrier as a delivery to himself, or may hold the seller responsible in damages.

(3) Unless otherwise agreed, where goods are sent by the seller to the buyer under circumstances in which the seller knows or ought to know that it is usual to insure, the seller must give such notice to the buyer as may enable him to insure them during their transit, and, if the seller fails to do so, the goods shall be deemed to be at his risk during such transit.

SEC. 47. Right to examine the goods: (1) Where goods are delivered to the buyer which he has not previously examined, he is not deemed to have accepted them unless and until he has had a reasonable opportunity of examining them for the purpose of ascertaining whether they are in conformity with the contract.

(2) Unless otherwise agreed, when the seller tenders delivery of goods to the buyer, he is bound, on request, to afford the buyer a reasonable opportunity of examining the goods for the purpose of ascertaining whether they are in conformity with the contract.

(3) Where goods are delivered to a carrier by the seller, in accordance with an order from or agreement with the buyer, upon the terms that the goods shall not be delivered by the carrier to the buyer until he has paid the price, whether such terms are indicated by marking the goods with the words "collect on delivery", or otherwise, the buyer is not entitled to examine the goods before payment of the price in the absence of agreement permitting such examination.

SEC. 48. What constitutes acceptance: The buyer is deemed to have accepted the goods when he intimates to the seller that he has accepted them, or when the goods have been delivered to him, and he does any act in relation to them which is inconsistent with the ownership of the seller, or when, after the lapse of a reasonable time, he retains the goods without intimating to the seller that he has rejected them.

SEC. 49. Acceptance does not bar action for damages: In the absence of express or implied agreement of the parties, acceptance of the goods by the buyer shall not discharge the seller from liability in damages or other legal remedy for breach of any promise or warranty in the contract to sell or the sale. But, if, after acceptance of the goods, the buyer fail to give notice to the seller of the breach of any promise or warranty within a reasonable time after the buyer knows, or ought to know of such breach, the seller shall not be liable therefor.

SEC. 50. Buyer is not bound to return goods wrongly delivered: Unless otherwise agreed, where goods are delivered to the buyer, and he refused to accept them, having the right so to do, he is not bound to return them to the seller, but it is sufficient if he notifies the seller that he refuses to accept them.

SEC. 51. Buyer's liability for failing to accept delivery: When the seller is ready and willing to deliver the goods, and requests the buyer to take delivery, and the buyer does not within a reasonable time after such request take delivery of the goods, he is liable to the seller for any loss occasioned by his neglect or refusal to take delivery, and also for a reasonable charge for the care and custody of the goods. If the neglect or refusal of the buyer to take delivery amounts to a repudiation or breach of the entire contract, the seller shall have the right against the goods and on the contract hereinafter provided in favor of the seller when the buyer is in default.

PART IV

RIGHTS OF UNPAID SELLER AGAINST THE GOODS

SEC. 52. Definition of unpaid seller: (1) The seller of goods is deemed to be an unpaid seller within the meaning of this act—

(a) When the whole of the price has not been paid or tendered.

(b) When a bill of exchange or other negotiable instrument has been received as conditional payment, and the condition on which it was received has been broken by reason of the dishonor of the instrument, the insolvency of the buyer, or otherwise.

(2) In this part of this act the term "seller" includes an agent of the seller to whom the bill of lading has been endorsed, or a consignor or agent who has himself paid, or is directly responsible for, the price, or any other person who is in the position of a seller.

SEC. 53. Remedies of an unpaid seller: (1) Subject to the provisions of this act, notwithstanding that the property in the goods may have passed to the buyer, the unpaid seller of goods, as such, has—

(a) A lien on the goods or right to retain them for the price while he is in possession of them;

(b) In case of insolvency of the buyer, the right of stopping the goods in transitu after he has parted with the possession of them;

(c) A right of resale as limited by this act; and

(d) A right to rescind the sale as limited by this act.

(2) Where the property in goods has not passed to the buyer, the unpaid seller has, in addition to his other remedies, a right of withholding delivery similar to and coextensive with his rights of lien and stoppage in transitu where the property has passed to the buyer.

UNPAID SELLER'S LIEN

SEC. 54. When right of lien may be exercised: (1) Subject to the provisions of this act, the unpaid seller of goods who is in possession of them is entitled to retain possession of them until payment or tender of the price in the following cases, namely—

(a) Where the goods have been sold without any stipulation as to credit;

(b) Where the goods have been sold on credit but the term of credit has expired; and

(c) Where the buyer becomes insolvent.

(2) The seller may exercise his right of lien, notwithstanding that he is in possession of the goods as agent or bailee for the buyer.

SEC. 55. Lien after part delivery: Where an unpaid seller has made part delivery of the goods, he may exercise his right of lien on the remainder, unless such part delivery has been made under such circumstances as to show an intent to waive the lien or right of retention.

SEC. 56. When lien is lost: (1) The unpaid seller of goods loses his lien thereon—

(a) When he delivers the goods to a carrier or other bailee for the purpose of transmission to the buyer without reserving the property in the goods or the right to the possession thereof;

(b) When the buyer or his agent lawfully obtains possession of the goods; and

(c) By waiver thereof.

(2) The unpaid seller of goods, having a lien thereon, does not lose his lien by reason only that he has obtained judgment or decree for the price of the goods.

STOPPAGE IN TRANSIT

SEC. 57. Seller may stop goods on buyer's insolvency: Subject to the provisions of this act, when the buyer of goods is or becomes insolvent, the unpaid seller who has parted with the possession of the goods has the right of stopping them in transitu; that is to say, he may resume possession of the goods at any time while they are in transit, and he will then become entitled to the same rights in regard to the goods as he would have had if he had never parted with the possession.

SEC. 58. When goods are in transit: (1) Goods are in transit within the meaning of section 57—

(a) From the time when they are delivered to a carrier by land or water, or other bailee for the purpose of transmission to the buyer, until the buyer, or his agent in that behalf, takes delivery of them from such carrier or other bailee; and

(b) If the goods are rejected by the buyer, and the carrier or other bailee continues in possession of them, even if the seller has refused to receive them back.

(2) Goods are no longer in transit within the meaning of section 57—

(a) If the buyer, or his agent in that behalf, obtains delivery of the goods before their arrival at the appointed destination;

(b) If, after the arrival of the goods at the appointed destination, the carrier or other bailee acknowledges to the buyer or his agent that he holds the goods on his behalf and continues in possession of them as bailee for the buyer or his agent; and it is immaterial that a further destination for the goods may have been indicated by the buyer; and

(c) If the carrier or other bailee wrongfully refuses to deliver the goods to the buyer or his agent in that behalf.

(3) If goods are delivered to a ship chartered by the buyer, it is a question depending on the circumstances of the particular case, whether they are in the possession of the master as a carrier or as agent of the buyer.

(4) If part delivery of the goods has been made to the buyer, or his agent in that behalf, the remainder of the goods may be stopped in transitu, unless such part delivery has been made under such circumstances as to show an agreement with the buyer to give up possession of the whole of the goods.

SEC. 59. Ways of exercising the right to stop: (1) The unpaid seller may exercise his right of stoppage in transitu either by obtaining actual possession of the goods or by giving notice of his claim to the carrier or other bailee in whose possession the goods are. Such notice may be given either to the person in actual possession of the goods or to his principal. In the latter case the notice, to be effectual, must be given at such time and under such circumstances that the principal, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, may prevent a delivery to the buyer.

(2) When notice of stoppage in transitu is given by the seller to the carrier, or other bailee in possession of the goods, he must redeliver the goods to, or according to the directions of, the seller. The expenses of such delivery must be borne by the seller. If, however, a negotiable document of title representing the goods has been issued by the carrier or other bailee, he shall not be obliged to deliver or justified in delivering the goods to the seller unless such document is first surrendered for cancelation.

RESALE BY THE SELLER

SEC. 60. When and how resale may be made: (1) Where the goods are of perishable nature, or where the seller expressly reserves the right of resale in case the buyer should make default, or where the buyer has been in default in the payment of the price an unreasonable time, an unpaid seller having a right of lien or having stopped the goods in transitu may resell the goods. He shall not thereafter be liable to the original buyer upon the contract to sell or the sale or for any profit made by such resale, but may recover from the buyer damages for any loss occasioned by the breach of the contract or the sale.

(2) Where a resale is made, as authorized in this section, the buyer acquires a good title as against the original buyer.

(3) It is not essential to the validity of a resale that notice of an intention to resell the goods be given by the seller to the original buyer. But where the right to resell is not based on the perishable nature of the goods or upon an express provision of the contract or the sale, the giving or failure to give such notice shall be relevant in any issue involving the question whether the buyer had been in default an unreasonable time before the resale was made.

(4) It is not essential to the validity of a resale that notice of the time and place of such resale should be given by the seller to the original buyer.

(5) The seller is bound to exercise reasonable care and judgment in making a resale, and subject to this requirement may make a resale either by public or private sale.

RESCISSION BY THE SELLER

SEC. 61. When and how the seller may rescind the sale: (1) An unpaid seller having the right of lien or having stopped the goods in transitu, may rescind the transfer of title and resume the property in the goods, where he expressly reserved the right to do so in case the buyer should make default, or where the buyer has been in default in the payment of the price an unreasonable time. The seller shall not thereafter be liable to the buyer upon the contract to sell or the sale, but may recover from the buyer damages for any loss occasioned by the breach of the contract or the sale.

(2) The transfer of title shall not be held to have been rescinded by an unpaid seller until he has manifested by notice to the buyer or by some other overt act an intention to rescind. It is not necessary that such overt act should be communicated to the buyer, but the giving or failure to give notice to the buyer of the intention to rescind shall be relevant in any issue involving the question whether the buyer had been in default an unreasonable time before the right of rescission was asserted.

SEC. 62. Effect of sale of goods subject to lien or stoppage in transitu: Subject to the provisions of this act, the unpaid seller's right of lien or stoppage in transitu is not affected by any sale, or other disposition of the goods which the buyer may have made, unless the seller has assented thereto.

If, however, a negotiable document of title has been issued for goods, no seller's lien or right of stoppage in transitu shall defeat the right of any purchaser for value in good faith to whom such document has been negotiated, whether such negotiations be prior or subsequent to the notification to the carrier, or other bailee who issued such document, of the seller's claim to a lien or right of stoppage in transitu.

PART V

ACTION FOR BREACH OF THE CONTRACT; REMEDIES OF THE SELLER

SEC. 63. Action for the price: (1) Where, under a contract to sell or a sale, the property in the goods has passed to the buyer, and the buyer wrongfully neglects or refuses to pay for the goods according to the terms of the contract or the sale, the seller may maintain an action against him for the price of the goods.

(2) Where, under a contract to sell or a sale, the price is payable on a day certain, irrespective of delivery or of transfer of title, and the buyer wrongfully neglects or refuses to pay such price, the seller may maintain an action for the price, although the property in the goods has not passed and the goods have not been appropriated to the contract. But it shall be a defense to such an action that the seller at any time before judgment in such action has manifested an inability to perform the contract or the sale on his part or an intention not to perform it.

(3) Although the property in the goods has not passed, if they cannot readily be resold for a reasonable price, and if the provisions of section 64 (4) are not applicable, the seller may offer to deliver the goods to the buyer, and, if the buyer refuses to receive them, may notify the buyer that the goods are thereafter held by the seller as bailee for the buyer. Thereafter the seller may treat the goods as the buyer's and may maintain an action for the price.

SEC. 64. Action for damages for nonacceptance of the goods: (1) Where the buyer wrongfully neglects or refuses to accept and pay for the goods, the seller may maintain an action against him for damages for nonacceptance.

(2) The measure of damages is the estimated loss directly and naturally resulting, in the ordinary course of events, from the buyer's breach of contract.

(3) Where there is an available market for the goods in question, the measure of damages is, in the absence of special circumstances, showing proximate damage of a greater amount, the difference between the contract price and the market or current price at the time or times when the goods ought to have been accepted, or, if no time was fixed for acceptance, then at the time of the refusal to accept.

(4) If, while labor or expense of material amount are necessary on the part of the seller to enable him to fulfill his obligations under the contract to sell or the sale, the buyer repudiates the contract or the sale, or notifies the seller to proceed no further therewith, the buyer shall be liable to the seller for no greater damages than the seller would have suffered if he did nothing toward carrying out the contract or the sale after receiving notice of the buyer's repudiation or countermand. The profit the seller would have made if the contract or the sale had been fully performed shall be considered in estimating such damages.

SEC. 65. When seller may rescind contract or sale: Where the goods have not been delivered to the buyer, and the buyer has repudiated the contract to sell or sale, or has manifested his inability to perform his obligations thereunder, or has committed a material breach thereof, the seller may totally rescind the contract or the sale by giving notice of his election so to do to the buyer.

REMEDIES OF THE BUYER

SEC. 66. Action for converting or detaining goods: Where the property in the goods has passed to the buyer and the seller wrongfully neglects or refuses to deliver the goods, the buyer may maintain any action allowed by law to the owner of goods of similar kind when wrongfully converted or withheld.

SEC. 67. Action for failing to deliver goods: (1) Where the property in the goods has not passed to the buyer, and the seller wrongfully neglects or refuses to deliver the goods, the buyer may maintain an action against the seller for damages for nondelivery.

(2) The measure of damages is the loss directly and naturally resulting in the ordinary course of events, from the seller's breach of contract.

(3) Where there is an available market for the goods in question, the measure of damages, in the absence of special circumstances showing proximate damages of a greater amount, is the difference between the contract price and the market or current price of the goods at the time or times when they ought to have been delivered or if no time was fixed, then at the time of the refusal to deliver.

SEC. 68. Specific performance: Where the seller has broken a contract to deliver specific or ascertained goods, a court having the powers of a court of equity may, if it thinks fit, on the application of the buyer, by its judgment or decree direct that the contract shall be performed specifically, without giving the seller the option of retaining the goods on payment of damages. The judgment or decree may be unconditional or upon such terms and conditions as to damages, payment of the price, and otherwise, as to the court may seem just.

SEC. 69. Remedies for breach of warranty: (1) Where there is a breach of warranty by the seller, the buyer may, at his election—

(a) Accept or keep the goods and set up against the seller the breach of warranty by way of recoupment in diminution or extinction of the price;

(b) Accept or keep the goods and maintain an action against the seller for damages for the breach of warranty;

(c) Refuse to accept the goods, if the property therein has not passed, and maintain an action against the seller for damages for the breach of warranty; and

(d) Rescind the contract to sell, or the sale, and refuse to receive the goods; or if the goods have already been received, return them or offer to return them to the seller and recover the price or any part thereof which has been paid.

(2) When the buyer has claimed and has been granted a remedy in any one of these ways, no other remedy can thereafter be granted.

(3) Where the goods have been delivered to the buyer, he cannot rescind the sale if he knew of the breach of warranty when he accepted the goods, or if he fails to notify the seller within reasonable time of the election to rescind, or if he fails to return or to offer to return the goods to the seller in substantially as good condition as they were in at the time the property was transferred to the buyer. But if deterioration or injury of the goods is due to the breach of warranty, such deterioration or injury shall not prevent the buyer from returning or offering to return the goods to the seller and rescinding the sale.

(4) Where the buyer is entitled to rescind the sale and elects to do so, the buyer shall cease to be liable for the price upon returning or offering to return the goods. If the price or any part thereof has already been paid, the seller shall be liable to repay so much thereof as has been paid, concurrently with the return of the goods, or immediately after an offer to return the goods in exchange for repayment of the price.

(5) Where the buyer is entitled to rescind the sale and elects to do so, if the seller refuses to accept an offer of the buyer to return the goods, the buyer shall thereafter be deemed to hold the goods as bailee for the seller, but subject to a lien to secure the repayment of any portion of the price which has been paid, and with the remedies for the enforcement of such lien allowed to an unpaid seller by section 53.

(6) The measure of damages for breach of warranty is the loss directly and naturally resulting, in the ordinary course of events, from the breach of warranty.

(7) In the case of breach of warranty of quality, such loss, in the absence of special circumstances showing proximate damage of a greater amount, is the difference between the value of the goods at the time of delivery to the buyer and the value they would have had if they had answered to the warranty.

SEC. 70. Interest and special damages: Nothing in this act shall affect the right of the buyer or the seller to recover interest or special damages in any case where by law interest or special damages may be recoverable, or to recover money paid where the consideration for the payment of it has failed.

PART VI

INTERPRETATION

SEC. 71. Variation of implied obligations: Where any right, duty, or liability would arise under a contract to sell or a sale by implication of law, it may be negatived or varied by express agreement or by the course of dealing between the parties, or by custom, if the custom be such as to bind both parties to the contract or the sale.

SEC. 72. Rights may be enforced by action: Where any right, duty, or liability is declared by this act, it may, unless otherwise by this act provided, be enforced by action.

SEC. 73. Rule for cases not provided for by this act: In any case not provided for in this act, the rules of law and equity, including the law merchant, and in particular the rules relating to the law of principal and agent and to the effect of fraud, misrepresentation, duress or coercion, mistake, bankruptcy, or other invalidating cause, shall continue to apply to contracts to sell and to sales of goods.

SEC. 74. Interpretation shall give effect to purpose of uniformity: This act shall be so interpreted and construed as to effectuate its general purpose to make uniform the laws of those States which enact it.

SEC. 75: Provisions not applicable to mortgages: The provisions of this act relating to contracts to sell and to sales do not apply, unless so stated, to any transaction in the form of a contract to sell or a sale which is intended to operate by way of mortgage, pledge, charge, or other security.

SEC. 76. Definitions: (1) In this act, unless the context or subject matter otherwise requires—

"Action" includes counterclaim, set-off, and suit in equity.

"Buyer" means a person who buys or agrees to buy goods or any legal successor in interest of such person.

"Defendant" includes a plaintiff against whom a right of set-off or counterclaim is asserted.

"Delivery" means voluntary transfer of possession from one person to another.

"Divisible contract to sell or sale" means a contract to sell or a sale in which by its term the price for a portion or portions of the goods less than the whole is fixed or ascertainable by computation.

"Document of title to goods" includes any bill of lading, dock warrant, warehouse receipt or order for the delivery of goods, or any other document used in the ordinary course of business in the sale or transfer of goods, as proof of the possession or control of the goods, or authorizing or purporting to authorize the possessor of the document to transfer or receive, either by endorsement or by delivery, goods represented by such document.

"Fault" means wrongful act or default.

"Fungible goods" means goods of which any unit is from its nature or by mercantile usage treated as the equivalent of any other unit.

"Future goods" means goods to be manufactured or acquired by the seller after the making of the contract of sale.

"Goods" include all chattels personal other than things in action and money. The term includes emblements, industrial growing crops, and things attached to or forming part of the land which are agreed to be severed before sale or under the contract of sale.

"Order" in sections of this act relating to documents of title means an order by endorsement on the documents.

"Person" includes a corporation or partnership or two or more persons having a joint or common interest.

"Plaintiff" includes defendant asserting a right of set-off or counterclaim.

"Property" means the general property in goods, and not merely a special property.

"Purchaser" includes mortgagee and pledgee.

"Purchases" includes taking as a mortgagee or as a pledgee.

"Quality of goods" includes their state or condition.

"Sale" includes a bargain and sale as well as a sale and delivery.

"Seller" means a person who sells or agrees to sell goods, or any legal successor in the interest of such person.

"Specific goods" means goods identified and agreed upon at the time a contract to sell or a sale is made.

"Value" is any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract. An antecedent or preexisting claim, whether for money or not, constitutes value where goods or documents of titles are taken either in satisfaction thereof or as security therefor.

(2) A thing is done "in good faith" within the meaning of this act when it is in fact done honestly, whether it be done negligently or not.

(3) A person is insolvent within the meaning of this act who either has ceased to pay his debts in the ordinary course of business or cannot pay his debts as they become due, whether he has committed an act of bankruptcy or not, and whether he is insolvent within the meaning of the Federal bankruptcy law or not.

(4) Goods are in a "deliverable state" within the meaning of this act when they are in such a state that the buyer would, under the contract, be bound to take delivery of them.

SEC. 76a. Act does not apply to the existing sales or contracts to sell: None of the provisions of this act shall apply to any sale, or to any contract to sell, made prior to the taking effect of this act.

SEC. 77. Inconsistent legislation repealed: All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 78. Time when the act takes effect: This act shall take effect on the 1st day of July 1937.

SEC. 79. Name of act: This act may be cited as the "Uniform Sales Act."

Mr. MICHENER (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as nothing can be gained from a reading of the bill, if there is no one who has any amendment to offer or no one who knows anything about it, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the same do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 936) to regulate the sales of goods in the District of Columbia, directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including in the RECORD a short article by Woodrow Wilson on the Constitution of the United States in relation to the Supreme Court.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA LEGISLATION

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, this concludes the business of the Committee on the District of Columbia for today.

May I take this occasion to thank the Members who have remained on the floor to help us in our work today. It is the first day we have had a complete District day. Mr. Speaker, we are very grateful.

We are also grateful for any criticism, if the criticism is just, that may be offered. The chairman of the committee realizes that there are a great many bills brought into this House from the District of Columbia. Most of them are regulatory bills. A great many of them could be considered by the Commissioners of the District if the Congress were to grant more power to the Commissioners. We are hoping that in this session of Congress that power will be granted. Mr. Speaker, perhaps a great many Members of the House do not know that we have hundreds of bills in the Committee on the District of Columbia to consider. We meet once a week and we try in our limited way to give as good service as is possible. We do not pretend to be perhaps as brilliant as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], but we are always glad to receive constructive criticism. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that we would welcome the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia if he is willing to devote his unlimited time and efforts to District legislation.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield for a moment?

Mrs. NORTON. Gladly.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Did he pretend to have knowledge or did he really have the information? [Laughter.]

Mrs. NORTON. I will leave that question to the House to decide.

We do not have a vacancy on our committee at the present time, but we may have in the near future. I invite the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] to become a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia. I think, if he does not have a sufficient number of headaches now from considering legislation, we will promise to give him just a few more. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. Gladly.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Being from Michigan, I think I am perfectly able to take care of Michigan's end on the District of Columbia Committee. [Laughter.]

Mrs. NORTON. The chairman feels that the gentleman is perfectly capable of taking care of the Michigan end of the committee.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. I may say that I am very proud to be a member of this committee.

(Mr. DIRKSEN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.)

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], the ranking member of the committee, a Republican, for the splendid and remarkable help that he considerately and continually gives to District of Columbia legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I think this concludes District of Columbia business for today.

CROW TRIBE OF INDIANS

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file a supplemental report on Senate Joint Resolution 55, to amend the act of July 3, 1926, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment in claims which the Crow Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes" (44 Stat. L. 807).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The Committee on the District of Columbia having completed its calendar, is any business to come up outside of the special orders?

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows of no actual business, but the Chair suggests we are going to have two very entertaining speakers in the public interest, and hopes the suggestion made by the gentleman will not tend to withdraw the membership from the floor.

THE SUPREME COURT

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in addition to the time already allotted to me I may be allowed to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

REORGANIZATION OF THE FEDERAL JUDICIARY

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen, while I am reluctant to ask your indulgence, I do not feel that any Member of the House would be justified in the thought that I have in the past, even in the slightest degree, imposed upon the patience of my colleagues. I would not even now make this demand upon your time but for the importance of the question upon which I desire to address you. I hope, therefore, that you will hear me with some degree of patience.

Since the President's message recommending a reorganization of the judicial branch of the Government was delivered to the Congress I have given the subject the benefit of careful study and the very best thought of which I am capable. While I have studied this important question patiently and have considered it diligently, I have cherished but one hope and that is, that it might be given to me to decide it wisely. Whether the decision I have reached is wise or not, I am sure that time alone will tell.

The President's program has caused the public mind to become greatly agitated and the imagination of some of our citizens to become greatly disturbed. Some of our citizens are excited and alarmed and amazed. To others who look to this democracy for a solution of the great problems confronting this Nation today the program has brought comfort and courage and hope.

Free and fearless discussion of public policies is the very essence of a democracy and therefore open and widespread discussion should not only be welcomed, but encouraged. I am happy to note that our people are no longer apathetic or indifferent about the political side of their civilization. They are today vitally interested in the affairs of their Government. At every crossroads store, on street corners, in drawing rooms, in hotel lobbies, in the factory and on the farm our citizens are discussing constitutional law and representative government. Since other citizens in all walks of life are freely and glibly expressing their opinions upon this important matter, somehow I have the feeling that those whom I am humbly endeavoring to represent have a right to the benefit of an expression of my views and likewise I flatter myself to believe that even some of my colleagues might be interested in knowing my position upon this matter.

Being a lawyer and a son of a lawyer, and having been born and reared, taught and schooled in the exalted traditions of the legal profession, and having been closely associated with the judiciary and with the basic fabric of our civilization, the law itself, I can readily understand how the President's message was calculated to shock the sensibilities of members of the legal profession. Lawyers are officers of the court, and therefore a part of the judiciary, and are likely to consider it an attack upon the Court and its traditional power, and therefore instinctively, to come to the defense of the judiciary and oppose the enactment of the law, the vehicle which is to carry the recommendations of the President into effect.

I feel certain that I attach more than ordinary sanctity to the Constitution, the basic and fundamental law of the land. Although that somewhat faded parchment known as the Constitution is encased in marble and brass and gold at the national shrine in the Library of Congress, I like to regard it as a life-giving charter rather than as a curiosity in a museum. I like to believe that it is the charter of our rights as well as the shield of our liberties. I like to believe that it is a living, growing organism, responsive to the demands of the people, under the broad and generous outlines of which we may in any emergency rescue the people from a national disaster.

The philosophy of the New Deal, the Democratic Party, and its leaders is quite compatible with the genius of good government in a liberal and living democracy. The Democratic Party at all times entertains a spirit of progress and is now striving to distribute fairly and equitably the blessings as well as the burdens of government. It is not afraid to approach the solution of the great problems of human justice and economic security. It is unwilling to regard property and property rights as more sacred than human life and human happiness. And today it seeks to alleviate and mitigate and to prevent further human suffering and distress.

I love the law and the court, the instrumentality which is charged with the duty of interpreting and administering the law, in the temples of justice which we have established throughout the land. I yield to no man my love of my country, its government, and its grand institutions. As in war I offered myself and my all in defense of its principles, likewise in peace shall I ever defend them.

In discussing this great question, let us lift ourselves above the bondage of passions of prejudices and above the superficialties and hypocrisies or partisan politics and look the issue straight in the eye as citizens of a great nation.

If Congress is about to exercise a power which it has no right, under the Constitution, to exercise; if the President is grasping for illicit authority, a courageous people should stop them from such attempted unlawful encroachment upon the rights of the people who, after all, are supreme in this Republic. If, on the other hand, the power sought to be used is a legitimate and granted power, one which the President and the Congress, both the duly chosen representatives of the people, have a right to exercise, who has the right to question the authority or challenge the use of that power?

If we are to search for the truth, let us first look at the Constitution and see what it says with reference to the right of Congress in this matter.

Article III, section 1, provides:

> The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in the Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior and shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuation in office.

You will note that not one word is said about the number of judges which Congress shall authorize for either the Supreme or inferior courts. The membership of the Supreme Court has been increased and decreased from time to time throughout our history. The language of the Constitution is so free from ambiguity and the power vested in Congress so plainly set forth that I need not bore you by a recapitulation of the views, the comments, and the observations of men who, in their day, recognized it and passed from the scene of action, knowing that this grant of power to Congress was set forth in the fundamental law of the land under which was established this Government of checks and balances.

The Presidential veto is the check upon the legislative branch. The power of Congress to override the Presidential veto by a two-thirds vote in both Houses is a check upon the executive branch. If the power now sought to be used by Congress and the President does not exist, then pray tell me where is the check of the legislative and executive upon the judicial branch of the Government? The answer to this proposition is likewise obvious, and I shall not dwell longer upon it. I do not believe that any well-informed person will question the right of Congress to enact the law which the President has recommended. This, therefore, is not an issue and I need not discuss it. While we may not have a right to question this authority, certainly all citizens have a right to question the wisdom of the use of the power. Then, still searching for truth and light, let us inquire into the wisdom and the purpose of the proposed legislation.

The President initiated the proposed law, and he must have had some purpose in doing so. He was actuated either by good or evil impulses; he was motivated either by ignorance or wisdom. If he wants the power, he wants it for either a bad or a good purpose; he wants it for either a constructive or a destructive purpose. Now let us ask ourselves these questions:

First. Does he cherish a personal political ambition which causes him to want to become a dictator?

Second. If he does, then will giving him the power to increase the Court enable him to accomplish this vicious purpose?

It occurs to me that the one broad and all-embracing issue involved in the proposition is:

Does Franklin D. Roosevelt want to become a dictator, and could he if he wanted to? And even this is a false issue.

When we look about the world today and look at conditions in our own land we must be impressed with the fact that this is no time for either idle talk or a display of passion. Should we, in this hour of world hysteria, attempt to shake the people's faith in their President? Unfortunately, men with disturbed imaginations, intellectual and perhaps well-meaning citizens, have in a very adroit and shrewd fashion not only impugned the motives of our President and questioned his sincerity and patriotism, but have cried out the ignoble words "tyranny", "outrage", "usurpation", "false pretender", "dictator", "socialism", "communism", "fascism", and other diabolical words which are well calculated to arouse the fears of the people of the Nation and cause them to question the character and virtue of their leadership and the stability of their Government.

Even some of our Senators and Congressmen are not willing to accord to their President the same pure motives which they have ascribed to themselves. Neither are they willing to accord to him the same exalted impulses and patriotic purposes which they would have us believe animate their breasts. They point the accusing finger at the President and carry their fight to the doorway of the White House. They well know that the President is helpless until they themselves first act. Yet to divert from themselves they permit their imaginations to run riot as they by insinuations and innuendoes accuse the President of a vicious and insidious type of treason and of cherishing within his bosom a secret and an alien concept and scheme to destroy the courts, the Constitution, and all that Americans hold dear. They give him credit for neither courage nor candor. They suggest by insinuation that he sneaks as a thief in the shadows of night, seeking to deceive the people, to shoot from ambush as it were, to undermine and to destroy that which he does not have the courage to attempt to overthrow. Their campaign of insinuation is as vicious and as cowardly and as cruel and as false as that of a slanderer who places the "scarlet letter" upon the forehead of pure and virtuous womanhood.

Who is this fiend, this alien, this monster who seeks to take from us the grand heritage which was purchased with the blood of our fathers? It is the same man, with the same character and with the same soul, who only a few short months ago they held up to the Nation as the greatest humanitarian the world has ever known; the savior of the masses with whom his heart beat in unison. A few short months ago they called him savior; now they would call him traitor. They say that he has deserted them, his party platform, and the people; that he is ambitious and seeks to enthrone himself as a dictator and to run roughshod over the wants and the wishes of the people who have placed their faith in him; that he wants to usurp power which the founding fathers never intended for a President to have.

The President has only suggested and recommended that Congressmen and Senators exercise the power vested in them by the people and plainly set forth in their Constituiton. Are Congressmen and Senators to be intimidated by the possession of power? Should the possession of power cause us to tremble or the use of it make us afraid? The President may be the diagnostician but surely we are the surgeons and it is our duty to carve the Nation's pathway to progress. If this Nation were about to declare war I wonder if these same statesmen in such an emergency would be so anxious to submit the question to a referendum of the people. Surely this act they are now asked to perform is no more serious than a declaration of war and yet they tremble in their boots at the thought of exercising the power they possess. If those who now accuse him are sincere in their belief that he is seeking to undermine this Government and has formulated a conspiracy and a scheme, the purpose of which is to overthrow the Government, why are not they bold and courageous in their assertions? Why do not they call him by the name traitor? Why do not they point to the overt act of treason? Why do not they give the country a bill of particulars and put him on trial before his countrymen? Oh, no, they dare not do that. They dare not bring charges of impeachment. They would have you only infer, from their remarks, but they are afraid of a bold assertion.

If the President is public enemy no. 1 and entertains the purposes they ascribe to him, that is to gain control of the Supreme Court for an evil purpose, surely he cannot consummate the program without the aid of coconspirators and accessories. They say he wants a "puppet" Court. Is there anything in his life or his character, his acts or his conduct, in either public or private life that justifies the thought that he would ask his fellow men to join with him in such an unholy and unlawful alliance? It appears that they would have the people overlook the fact that their representatives must first authorize and the United States Senate must actually confirm the appointments of those the President nominates. Can you imagine a man of the character and caliber who is able to pass the scrutiny of the United States Senate selling his conscience and damning his soul for a little fame, only after a few years to fill an ignominous grave in the land of his fathers?

Do you believe that the President of the United States would ask a prospective appointee to surrender his self-respect, defame his name, and damn his soul by promising to abide by the wishes of the President in rendering his decisions from the bench?

If we could believe that such a thing were possible, we might just as well charge that the present Supreme Court is only a puppet, controlled by the hands of even dead men who appointed them. Such a thing is not only radical but it is ridiculous. Yet they suggest that Roosevelt would do it. Still they would not have you believe for one moment that any of his predecessors who have graced that office would have dared do such a thing.

The new judges would be just as independent and just as free as those who have served upon that tribunal in the past. The President of the United States could not, and would not attempt to "pop a whip" over a judge charged with the duty of administering public justice. Even if he attempted to do so it would be of no avail. Once they are appointed they are secure in their position beyond Executive control. Even the President himself must abide by their decrees.

No man, except by open violence and bloodshed, could ever become a dictator in the United States. If we should assume, for the sake of argument, that a President was ambitious and desired to become a dictator, what would he care about a precedent set by the Seventy-fifth Congress? What would he care even about the Court, the Constitution, or the Bill of Rights, or anything which is dear to the hearts of the American people? Even if we could possibly assume that there was a man in the White House with a "rubber stamp" Congress and a "puppet" Court, which undertook to enact and administer laws which were oppressive and offensive to the people—why, at the very next election the people, in their power, could defeat every Member of Congress and the new Congress so elected could repeal the old laws and enact new ones. The people, acting through Congress, could not only destroy the oppressive laws but would have even the power to strip the Executive and judiciary of all their functions and authority.

All this talk about dictatorship, "rubber stamp" Congress, and "puppet Court" is nothing but bunk and vicious propaganda. Need I remind my colleagues of the damnable type of propaganda used in the utility fight by the moguls of light and power when they called out "the death sentence": "The death sentence is about to be imposed upon the stocks of widows and orphans" when they knew that we were battling not only for the widows and orphans who were stockholders but for the humble users of electric current and power throughout the Nation? Then, as now, their weapon was only fright and fear. These prophets of disaster and apostles of fear, in that fight as in this, held the Constitution close to their hearts, between themselves and the people. Shall the strength, the courage, and nobility of American manhood tremble in the presence of such prophets while our people suffer in a vortex of disaster? They stand at the doorway of the temples of justice defending their sacred traditions, but they have nothing to offer to the American people save and except the allurements of hope, the do-nothing policy of former administrations. Shall we sit supinely by waiting for Nature to take its course or shall we take action and take it now, to the end that this Government may function in the interest of the people for whom it was established.

We have a mandate from the people to readjust our social order, to reestablish our national economy, and to subjugate the impulses of selfishness and greed to the higher demands of social and civic duty. Yes; every citizen has a solemn duty in this hour, the duty to lay his best gifts in the lap of his Republic, to the end that we may solve our great problems and thereby save our grand heritage.

Some of the decisions of the Supreme Court are nothing more nor less than carbuncles upon the Constitution, and the people share with the President the hope that the new judges will carve the offending growth from the body of their organic law.

The present Chief Justice has said:

> The Constitution is what the judges say it is.

This means that in 5-to-4 decisions the Constitution is really what one man says it is. The Constitution should be what the founding fathers intended it to be and not just what one man says he thinks it is. Recent decisions of the Supreme Court have had the effect of placing the representatives of a free people in the shackles of a judicial strait jacket.

Judges cannot merely by wrapping themselves in their judicial robes divest themselves of their political and economic theories nor divorce themselves from their social philosophies any more than they can shake off their historic background. If there is no precedent, then the individual philosophy and judgment of the judge becomes the law of the land. Surely no man will contend that even a judge is infallible. We want a Court composed of men who will not distort the meaning of the Constitution, but who will give the American people a liberal, a fair, and a just interpretation of that great document.

Most men realize that agriculture is no longer only the problem of him who tills the soil. Most men realize that industry is not only the problem of those in the factory or in the mine or at the furnace or at the forge. Most men realize that in this great Nation of ours no one group can long survive and prosper while another languishes in misery and distress. Most men realize that the victims of disaster and epidemics can no longer be ignored in this land of wealth and abundance.

The President has not proposed that Congress amend the Constitution. He has not suggested that we impair the dignity nor decrease the traditional power of the Supreme Court. Would you, as a citizen, have less respect for the Court or its decrees merely because its membership had been increased? Is the decree of a majority of nine men so sacred and is their judgment so infallible that even the people, whose servants they are, have no right to question the wisdom of their decision? Oh, yes; the opponents will say the people have the right, but the Congress to which the people have granted the power has not the right to place new blood, new theories, new philosophies, and new men upon the Court who will look through clear glasses at their great and vital problems.

We are dealing with problems; the Court deals only with precedents. We are close to the people; they are removed from the people.

Jefferson once said:

> It has long been my opinion, and I have never shrunk from its expression, that the germ of dissolution of our Federal Government is in the judiciary—the irresponsible body working like gravity by day and by night, gaining a little today and gaining a little tomorrow and advancing its noiseless step like a thief over the field of jurisdiction until all shall be usurped.

Lincoln, the patron saint of the Republican Party, said in his first inaugural:

> The candid citizen must confess that if the policy of the Government, upon vital questions affecting the whole people, is to be irrevocably fixed by decisions of the Supreme Court, the instant they are made in ordinary litigations between parties in personal actions the people will have ceased to be their own rulers, having to that extent practically resigned their Government into the hands of that eminent tribunal.

Some people seem to believe that the Supreme Court has a constitutional right to sit in judgment on the wisdom of legislative action. They seem to believe that the courts are the only agencies of the Government that have the capacity to govern. In this connection it may be well to consider the views expressed by the late Justice Holmes in Railroad v. May (194 U. S. 267, 270):

> It must be remembered that legislators are the ultimate guardians of the liberties and welfare of the people in quite as great a degree as the courts.

Whether legislation is wise or not is a matter that addressed itself to the conscience and the wisdom of the legislative branch. Whether it is constitutional or not addresses itself likewise to the legislative branch, but primarily is the function of the judiciary.

> The Court will certainly not substitute its judgment for that of Congress in such a matter, unless the relation of the subject to interstate commerce and its effects upon it are clearly nonexistent.

This is the language of another Chief Justice and former President, Hon. William Howard Taft.

In the interpretations of vague phrases in the Constitution, are we to forever permit the personal predilections of individual judges to become a part of the Constitution? Shall we be content when the Supreme Court destroys the effect of a law which offends no clear or explicit provision of the Federal Constitution? Shall we further permit judicial usurpation of the power of the people?

In McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat. 316, 421) we find this language of a great Chief Justice:

> Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited but consist with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional.

Are we now to accept complacently a reversal of this cardinal guide and permit the powers of the people to be curtailed by judiciary fiat upon a tortured construction of the Constitution?

In the well-reasoned dissenting opinion in the case of United States against Butler we find this language:

> But interpretation of our great charter of government which proceeds on any assumption that the responsibility for the preservation of our institutions is the exclusive concern of any one of the three branches of Government, or that it alone can save them from destruction, is far more likely, in the long run, to "obliterate the constituent members" of "an indestructible union of indestructible States" than the frank recognition that language, even of a constitution, may mean what it says; that the power to tax and spend includes the power to relieve a Nation-wide economic maladjustment by constitutional gifts of money.

The people are demanding that their Government achieve very definite objectives to meet the needs and requirements of a modern society. The only danger of a dictatorship lies in the failure of the processes of democratic government. The continuity of the achievements of our democratic processes depend largely upon the courage with which we meet the present crisis.

Once again I quote from Justice Holmes:

> The first requirement of a sound body of law is that it should correspond with the actual feelings and demands of the community.
> The courts were intended to endure for all ages to come and consequently to be adapted to the various crises in human affairs.

This is the substance of the language of Chief Justice John Marshall.

We now find ourselves in a judicial rather than in a constitutional crisis.

It appears to me, after brushing aside all the false issues, that the real issue involved in this proposition is:

Should the people wait for nature to take its course and suffer while they wait or by bold and courageous action, and in the exercise of their right and wisdom enlarge the membership of the Court and by doing so bring to it additional men with broad wisdom and patriotic purposes who will liberally, fairly, and justly interpret the Constitution under which they must live?

This, therefore, is the question which either sooner or later the people themselves will ultimately decide.

I have definitely arrived at the conclusion that delay is more dangerous than action, and that this Government should take its stand upon the solid rock of service and the firm foundation of usefulness.

The grandest pursuit to which the spirit of the times invites us is that of leading this Nation to the glowing dawn of a better day.

We are living under a complex dual system of sovereignty and in a fast-moving world. Every hour modern civilization brings forth new problems and with them new possibilities. The progress of the world, stimulated by the dynamic energies of modern trade and commerce and accelerated by the rapid and splendid achievements of science, has advanced in a half century far beyond the entire accumulation of industry and science from the fall of Babylon to the rise of the American Republic. Business is no longer in its infancy. In this new civilization we have invaded the higher and the nobler fields of industry and intellectual pursuits; mankind is no longer in the vestibule but has entered the inner courts of the temple of science and learning. We have advanced far along the shining and celestial ways of scientific truth, realizing that by gaining peaceful supremacy over the natural elements we can further advance the progress of man. The inventive genius of man has dwarfed the Nation and made us interdependent. Labor-saving machinery which man has mastered seems to have become the master of man, and the laboring man's job is no longer secure. Highly organized industry with its monopolistic tendencies is engaged in battle with highly organized labor. The disastrous effects of these battles are visited upon every citizen and his household. Surely such problems of such far-reaching effect must be national in scope. Surely agriculture, the basic industry upon which the permanent prosperity of this Nation depends, is as national in its scope as the very soil itself; yet there are those who believe that these great problems are merely local and the Nation is helpless to deal with them. These same people seem to believe that human suffering and distress in a land of wealth and abundance is something in which the Nation may not be interested. They are willing for citizens to pine in secret anguish for the want of reasonable philanthropy. They are willing to see the soul of America corroded by the vicious influences of selfishness and greed which obscure the higher and nobler ideals of life.

> Life is more than meat and the body more than raiment.

We may at this time be sustained in the glad confidence and calm assurance that our Nation is fighting for the security of its citizens and is striving to solve the great problems of human and social justice. The icy hand of fear shall not chill the hearts of our statesmen.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by printing in the Appendix of the RECORD an address delivered by Harry L. Hopkins, Administrator of the Works Progress Administration, upon the same subject to which we have just been listening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let me say to the gentleman that there is a special order for the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is a special order whereby the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] is to be recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request that after the gentleman from Maryland has finished his address I be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, may I say in the beginning that I do not believe men and women were made for constitutions. Constitutions were made for men and women; but in the same breath allow me to add that no constitution of which I can conceive could be better devised for men and women than the beloved Constitution we are sworn to defend. [Applause.]

Consider only the preamble, if you please;

"to form a more perfect union,"

"to establish justice,"

"to insure the domestic tranquility,"

"to promote the general welfare,"

"to assure the blessings of liberty,"

these, Mr. Speaker, must be the high objectives of any government organized to serve, and serve sincerely, the great requirements of the human family. Not only was the Constitution framed with those high purposes but it provided the necessary instrumentalities by which to effectuate them. The States were already habituated to their great duties of government. The National Government was now to be added, and effective power was recognized in the great instrument to permit it to achieve its noble ends.

DOES THE NATION NEED A CONGRESS?

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me venture an opinion this afternoon: The average, deeply thoughtful American citizen is going to decide the question before us on a much simpler statement than the statement we are presenting in this debate. He is going to ask himself this question, "Do the people of the United States, 125,000,000 in number, need to have a National Congress and State legislatures competent to pass the laws they find necessary to protect their liberties, their personal security, and their honest property?"

When he has asked himself that question and looks abroad at other peoples on the face of the planet, as well as the experience of the past, I believe he is going to answer "Yes", just as have other democracies and sovereign peoples. Mr. Speaker, if he does, he will find himself in very illustrious company. What said the great fathers of the Republic when this work of building the Constitution was done? They also said "Yes." I shall quote now at some length, because I consider this feature of the subject to be fundamental to all our considerations. Said Thomas Jefferson:

> The capital and leading object of the Constitution is to leave with the States: First, all powers which respect their own citizens only; second, to give to the United States those powers which respect, first, citizens of foreign countries, and, second, citizens of other States.

Wilson, a leading spirit in the Convention, also expressed himself. He said:

> Whatever object of government is confined in its operation and effect within the bounds of a particular State should be considered as belonging to the government of that State. Whatever object of government extends in its operation or effect beyond the bounds of a particular State should be considered as belonging to the Government of the United States.

Judge Marshall, who sat in the ratifying convention in Virginia, gave this statement:

> The Government's action is to be applied to those internal concerns of the Nation which affect the States generally, but not to those which are completely within a particular State which do not affect the other States.

Sir, the State was to govern the citizen in those acts which concerned only citizens within the State; the Government, in those of his acts which concerned citizens of other States as well. What could be more reasonable?

NO VACUUM IN LEGISLATIVE POWERS

There is still another great name to be quoted from that chapter of our history. Did the Constitution contemplate only those economic and social circumstances presented in the late end of the eighteenth century? Hear what Alexander Hamilton said on that subject. I quote from The Federalist (no. 34):

> Constitutions of government are not to be framed upon a calculation of existing exigencies, but on a combination of these with the probable exigencies of ages, according to the natural and tried course of human affairs. There ought to be a capacity to provide for future contingencies as they may happen. • • •

Can you find in this common understanding of the great work of the Convention any vacuum, any gaps, any no man's land, in the legislative powers of the Congress and of the States? There had been no vacuum before the Revolution. The sum total of the powers of the colonial legislature, taken with those of Parliament, were as broad and complete as the needs and interests of the human family. If you be in doubt as to the conscious purpose of the Federal Convention in this regard read the general-welfare clause—I bid you earnestly to read its history in the Convention—for there you will find this clause to be a residuary power, five times adopted in the Convention, and intended as a supplement to the specific powers, to eliminate all danger of a vacuum in the functioning powers of the Government. And without gap, sir, these powers proved to be for the first 68 years of our national life.

Mr. Speaker, 148 years have passed since these great declarations. Have any vacua shown themselves in the States' power, in the power of this Congress, to protect the great subjects of human liberty, security of person, and of honest property? Unhappily, you know that during the last few years destructive gaps have been alleged by interested litigants, and that our most important acts, passed to provide for the general welfare, have been outlawed at the instance not of the States but of private litigants by Court majorities, many Judges dissenting.

NULLIFICATION—MISSOURI COMPROMISE ACT

Sir, the most significant fact I have found in running over this subject in a historical way, is that for the first 68 years of the history of the Republic there was no judicial nullification of acts of Congress. During those 68 years the most important, the most difficult part of the path in our national history had to be trodden; a whole continent remained to be peopled and provided with the needs of human beings. Moreover, the national institution was new and had to make its adjustments to human requirements; and yet during that time of trial and experiment, in not a single instance was a substantive act of the sovereign legislative power of the United States stricken down in the courts until 1857.

What had this House done, Mr. Speaker, in the year 1857, what had it done that it alone among the great parliaments of the world should have its statute outlawed. Ah, sir, it did nothing in 1857, but in the year 1820 it had passed the Missouri Compromise Act to safeguard the national tranquility, and 37 years subsequently a divided appellate court declared this act to have been void all the time. What had the Missouri Compromise Act done so unwise, so unpatriotic, that a sovereign legislative power should be forfeited as the penalty? Well, sir, Congress had acted on a much-respected court decision. Back in 1772 a British subject from the Jamaicas carried one of his Negro slaves over to London, leaving the slave during his sojourn imprisoned on the boat in the River Thames. Some Quaker learned of this violation of a human being's right to liberty in England. A writ of habeas corpus was sought and the case was presented to Justice Lord Mansfield. Slavery was lawful in Jamaica—but Lord Mansfield declared that "the air of England is too pure for a slave to breathe", and summarily freed the slave.

I know I am addressing this afternoon the grandsons and, perhaps, the sons of Confederate soldiers who not only lived through but fought and suffered in that great contest. I know their feelings now on this unhappy subject. There is not a son of the South in this body today who, were you to offer him the ownership of a slave, that would not repulse the offer with disgust. And so, indeed, it was that in those early days an unwelcome institution was forced upon the South from the North and the East, which it so regretted that in 1820 its statesmen joined in passing the Missouri Compromise Act. On the principle of the Lord Mansfield decision it provided that if the slave owner, of his own volition, carried his human property over the Missouri Compromise line into free territory, by that act he made the slave a free man. That law had prevailed and, perhaps, had preserved the Union through a generation. The exigencies of class politics, or what not, at length were permitted to break in on the Court's deliberations; and when, at length, the case was considered by that eminent tribunal, we find it for the first time in our history nullifying an act of the Congress. When the Court did that it declared in effect that there was no power under the flag that could deal with slavery; and it put a sword in every man's hand, soon to be crimson with the best blood of the Republic.

THREE JOHN MARSHALLS

Sir, a few words about the historical background of that, the Dred Scott decision. You know, of course, of the Marbury case, and have heard of it most frequently in recent years. It was decided by Judge Marshall as you well know. But there were three Marshalls.

The first Marshall, speaking as an attorney in that very Court in 1796, expressed himself as follows:

> The legislative authority of any country can only be restrained by its own municipal constitution. This is a principle that springs from the very nature of society, and the judicial authority can have no right to question the validity of a law unless such a jurisdiction is expressly given by the Constitution.

Exit now Marshall the First, Marshall the attorney. Enter Marshall the Second, Chief Justice. In a star-chamber proceeding, and what was virtually an ex-parte case, without argument at the bar, without notice that any such important innovation was to figure in the decision, he announces sua sponte the doctrine of the power of courts to nullify acts of Congress, and, in doing so, that the Court had taken supremacy over Congress, the lawmaking function, as well as the President and the executive power. Great is Alexander Hamilton. His life officeholding principle of autocracy has been proclaimed as the law. The Convention had rejected it when he proposed that Governors, Senators, and President should hold office for life. But Marshall's coup d'état will serve instead—supremacy is to be lodged in the only life officeholding branch of the Government. But Jefferson was President and thanks to his denunciation such courthouse nullification was scotched for 54 years.

There was a third Marshall, Chief Judge Marshall, I should add, presenting his final thought, I believe. Let me read from a letter of his to one of his associates, Justice Chase:

> A reversal of those legal opinions deemed unsound by the legislature would certainly better comport with the mildness of our character, than the removal of the judge who has rendered them unknowing of his faults (a).

In other words, he suggested just what Hamilton suggested that Congress do, just what the British Parliament would do—reverse the legislative action of the judge.

But, happily, sir, there was still another Marshall, to whom I feel grateful, not for his Dartmouth College decision, not for his Georgia land-fraud decision, but for his consistent resistance as a judge to the principle of nullification of acts of Congress by whomsoever might attempt it. He doubtless contributed in this way to sustain the Union. For this service I am intensely grateful.

CONVENTION FATHERS REPUDIATE NULLIFICATION

Certainly, the Convention had not granted such a power to nullify our acts.

Said Madison in 1788:

> In the State constitutions, and, indeed, in the Federal one also, no provision is made for the case of a disagreement in expounding them [the laws]; and as the courts are generally the last making the decision, it results to them, by refusing or not refusing to execute a law, to stamp it with its final character. This makes the judiciary department paramount in fact to the legislature, which was never intended and can never be proper.

Much other matter might be quoted from the great Madison, the principal spirit in that convention except perhaps General Washington himself (b).

May I add another voice from the historic Convention, Senator Baldwin, of the State of Georgia. Speaking in debate in the Senate in 1802, he stated:

> If it had been intended to convey these distinguished powers, that would have been done in very conspicuous characters and not left to be obscurely explored by construction, not enlightened by the least recollection from anybody on a subject and on an occasion certainly of the most impressive kind and so little likely to have been forgotten (c).

Other able judges of the time, Judge Bland, of Maryland; Chief Justice Gibson, of Pennsylvania, among them, discountenanced the Marshall view. Professor Haines, the foremost student of this subject, remarks:

> Anyone who carefully considers the opinions of Judges Bland and Gibson can readily perceive that reason and logic had comparatively little weight with those who are resolutely about to make judicial review of legislation a part of the American political system.

Let me quote the late Chief Justice Clarke, of North Carolina, also:

> The power to set aside or nullify an act of Congress or a State legislature is a purely political power, and is so recognized by the constitutions which give the veto to the Executive. It comes under no definition or conception of the judicial power, which is to judge between the parties to a controversy. Neither the Government nor the State is a party to these proceedings, in which its supremest power—that of enacting laws—is nullified. As claimed and exercised by the courts, it is the absolute, autocratic power, because it is irreviewable. Those whose interest it is to have such power over the legislative and executive assert it for their own ends. The wonder is that it has ever been acquiesced in at all under a free form of government.

But above all, sir, let us not forget that the Republic grew, that it prospered without the nullifying power from 1789 to 1857. The world will never forget what followed nullification in the Dred Scott decision.

COURTHOUSE VETO

The observation may be made that somebody should determine whether an act of Congress is constitutional. Why not the courts? Why not the Congress and President, as in other parliamentary bodies? [Applause.]

In all the other countries also having written constitutions adopted in the light of our experiences here, judicial nullification is ruled out, and the judge who would outlaw an act of the highest legislative body is not only impeachable but would have committed a high crime against the sovereignty of the government (c). Why not the Congress here as elsewhere? Our committees first pass on these constitutional questions. The House can veto their report. The House passes on the constitutional question. The Senate can veto its action. The Senate again passes on the constitutional question and the President may veto the unconstitutional action of both bodies. All these are sworn like the judges to support the Constitution. Finally the people may exercise a repealing veto, as they often do, by defeating unworthy public servants. From 1789 to 1857—68 years—this kind of veto alone obtained. It surely sufficed the Republic through a chapter of changes and of progress, I venture to affirm, without parallel in the history of nations.

But why not a Court veto? The reasons are that—

The Constitution is an institutional document; it is not like a deed or mortgage, a contract, usually supplied with sufficient circumstantial detail to enable the judge to interpret it fully and where the interpretation of the judge is of consequence only to the litigants.

The Constitution is an institutional document composed largely of abstract phrases, phrases which of necessity, in such an abbreviated instrument, are of general but indeterminate significance; phrases whose interpretations call for whole statutes, which in turn call for the exercise of the lawmaker's discretion. Such general phrases call for defining statutes as the subject index of a book calls for a book. It is a document to be interpreted by statesmen in the legislative laboratory, and the interpretation needs be finally made by the Congress and President before the law goes into operation, because the welfare of the citizen or security of the country may depend upon the immediate and unconditional operation of the statute.

A courthouse veto fails fatally, besides, because since the citizen is conclusively presumed to know the law, and is entitled to know whether it is a law when it passes, to fashion his conduct accordingly, any veto should take place before the obligations of the law can attach. The lawsuit veto fails also because—

First. It can only be exercised if and when some interested litigant invokes it in the courts.

Second. Meanwhile contingent obligation attaches to all citizens.

Third. The possible courthouse veto robs the law of its necessary majesty, by degrading it to the status of a mere order nisi dependent upon litigation by private litigants, whose approach is not pro bono publico, as justly expected of the Members of Congress and the President.

Fourth. Such a lawsuit veto does not operate ab initio on the citizen. If he has not brought suit in the courts, his effective rights may be one thing; if he has, his rights may be wholly different. I give the present processing-tax situation as an illustration.

CONFLICTS STATE LAWS AND CONSTITUTION, ETC.

Mr. Speaker, in order to avoid conflicts between State and National laws, Madison had proposed in the Convention that State laws should be subject to approval by Congress. Gouverneur Morris, Sherman, and Martin opposed the motion. Sherman "thought it unnecessary, as the courts of the States would not consider as valid any law contravening the authority of the Union." The Sherman suggestion that the State judges should negative the conflicting State laws was then expressly adopted instead of Madison's proposal. The Journal recites:

Mr. Luther Martin moved the following resolution: "That the legislative acts of the United States made by virtue and in pursuance of the articles of Union, and all treaties made and ratified under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the respective States, as far as those acts or treaties shall relate to the said States, or their citizens and inhabitants, and that the judiciaries of the several States shall be bound thereby in their decisions, anything in the respective laws of the individual States to the contrary notwithstanding."

It was thus, sir, that the power of State judges to adjudge State acts void, as in conflict with Federal law came into the Constitution. Changes of wording for conciseness without change of meaning or intention were made by the Committee on "Stile and Arrangement", so that it now reads:

This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof; and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. Speaker, no friend of judicial reform disputes the wisdom of this clause—authority, unity can have but 1 voice, not 48 jarring voices. Justice Holmes emphasized the importance of this distinction between voiding State and National laws when he said:

I do not think the United States would come to an end if we lost our power to declare an act of Congress void. I do think the Union would be imperiled if we could not make that declaration as to the laws of the several States.

"PURSUANT", MEANING OF

The casual reader of the above clause is sometimes confused by the word "pursuance." It has an unquestioned relevancy to parliamentary procedural steps which must be pursued under the Constitution in the passage of an act of Congress. For example:

First. The bill must be passed by both Houses.
Second. There must be the favoring vote of a majority of a quorum of each House.
Third. (a) It must be approved by the President; (b) or in his hands and not disapproved for 10 days, etc.; and (c) or if vetoed by him, receive two-thirds of the votes of each House by yeas and nays entered on the Journals.

These are express procedural rules to be pursued or followed by Congress in the enactment of a law.

There is no authority in this clause to sanction the nullification of acts of Congress. This is the view of Professor Willoughby as found stated in his great but noncontroversial Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States (d).

COURT INTERPOLATIONS—DUE PROCESS

Mr. Speaker, I am going to discuss now some gaps, the vacua—and I can only touch them suggestively—resulting from some great interpolations which have been forced into the Constitution of our fathers, interpolations developed under the pretense of being interpretations, and I do not qualify the word "pretense."

In the Dred Scott decision, not only was this nullifying interpolation introduced into article III but another interpolation was forced into the fifth amendment; an interpolation which completely changes its meaning and the character of our Government. The fifth amendment, as you know, is, in substance, a copy of the Magna Carta. King John had been throwing his people into the Tower; he had been confiscating their property; he had been even decapitating them without an indictment or a trial under the British law. He was challenged at last by a brave and triumphant people and forced to concede the Magna Carta, whose whole object was to provide that no man should be hanged, imprisoned, or have his property taken away from him on a charge of treason, without a regular trial; that is, without "due process of law."

Mr. Speaker, it was fully recognized by the authors of the fifth amendment that Congress would need to enact laws as to crimes which would carry penalties which should take the life, the liberty, or the property of the offender. The amendment, of course, carries no inhibition against the enactment of such laws. It does provide that even though an offender has violated the law he may not be hanged, imprisoned, or have his property forfeited by fines without a day in court, an impartial trial; that is, "due process of law."

In the Dred Scott decision those words in the fifth amendment were construed to mean the full equivalent of the following interpolation which you now must add to the fifth amendment when you discuss it in the courthouse:

Provided, nevertheless, that if a judge shall consider any act of Congress, civil or criminal, with respect to life, liberty, or property to be unreasonable, the judge shall hold said act to be invalid, the judgment of the Congress that such act is reasonable to the contrary notwithstanding.

INTERPOLATION NOT DENIED

Mr. Speaker, there is really no dispute among the students of this subject as to the fact of this interpolation. You may wonder why present judges do not repent and strike this unworthy interpolation from the body of the sacred instrument. But, sir, it is forbidden. Stare Decisis, the goddess of courts and lawyers, forbids. Do you think my denunciation of this interpolation too severe? Let me read you some quotations from an authority in jurisprudence as great as the greatest of our jurists, Prof. Edwin S. Corwin, professor of jurisprudence in Princeton University:

When the fifth amendment was added to the Constitution in 1792 no one, so far as I am aware, had even suggested that the term "due process of law" had any other than its anciently established and self-evident meaning of correct procedure (p. 95, Twilight of the Supreme Court).

And later, discussing this interpolation in the Dred Scott case, Dr. Corwin says:

Indeed, at one point, and that a vital one, he (Chief Justice Taney) departs from the course of historical fact so flagrantly that one can hardly believe that he did not do so knowingly. This is where he boldly invokes the "due process" clause of amendment V as invalidating section 8 of the Missouri Compromise. No one at the time of the framing and adoption of the Constitution had any idea that this clause did more than consecrate a method of procedure against accused persons, and the modern doctrine of due process of law, the most important single basis of judicial review today, could never have been laid down except in defiance of history. (Ibid., p. 118.)

The nullification interpolation was forced into the Constitution in the Marbury case without argument of the subject at the bar; so also, sir, was the "due process" interpolation in the Dred Scott case.

DIVISION OF DUTIES—CONGRESS AND COURTS

Mark you, under that interpolation the Court has assumed a suzerainty over both legislative and judicial functions, including legislation as to all the subjects, civil or criminal, involved in life, liberty, and property. These are three great branches of the law which embrace all the rights, actual or conceivable, of the human being.

Now, sir, what is our relation to it? The relation of the Congress is that of the lawmaker. Congress, its duty is to declare what the law shall be on the subject of piracy and what the modes of punishment. The courts, they shall decide who is a pirate and sentence him. Congress has power to enact bankruptcy laws. The courts alone can declare any particular man a bankrupt. Intelligently observed, the distinction between the legislative function and the judicial function is of the very highest value in our social life; and let no man misunderstand my personal view of the matter. I have, for the courts of my country, yea, for the honest courts of all lands, only the very highest feeling of respect.

I believe so much in courts, Mr. Speaker, and their great function of deciding controversies which may otherwise lead to bloodshed, that I would, at this moment, give the World Court sitting at The Hague power to take jurisdiction of all controversies between nations, just as I am happy in the thought that our own Supreme Court can take jurisdiction of controversies between two of our States. But a court, stepping out of its judicial function into the legislative field, can only work mischief; just as a Congress stepping out of its field to try cases in the judicial field, could only work miserable failures in the adjudication of controversies between individuals.

STARE DECISIS

I asked a moment ago why these judges have not stricken this interpolation in the fifth amendment bodily out of the great document. Ah, Mr. Speaker, now we have introduced ourselves to the Eleusinian mysteries of a courthouse mind. In our temples of justice homage must be given, homage to the goddess Stare Decisis—let the decision stand.

Mr. Speaker, no lawyer here will be quicker to argue for the doctrine of stare decisis with regard to the interpretation of ordinary statutes. If the statute is doubtful, I want to have the doubt removed so I can pilot my client with assurance through the troubles of his business life. If the judge makes a mistake, there is a legislature waiting to meet shortly which can rectify it. It is just as sure to meet as the next term of court. But when, Mr. Speaker, you come to a court's decision on the Constitution, however destructive, there is no constitutional convention in waiting next year to rectify its wrong conclusions. We may have to suffer for a generation before the subject can be reexamined. Let us consider well, sir, the significance of the statement of Governor Hughes, "We are under a constitution, but the Constitution is what the judges say it is", and of the ominous declaration of a former Member and Solicitor General, whose voice still charms by its cultured eloquence, Mr. Beck, of the State of Pennsylvania, who boasted that the Supreme Court is a continual constitutional convention.

During six centuries no act of Parliament has been nullified by a British judge, but judges have been sent to the Tower for hanging and imprisoning British subjects without giving them an impartial trial, the "due process of law" guaranteed by Magna Carta. In these six centuries no British judge has suggested that Magna Carta limited the power of Parliament to pass laws determining the rights and duties of British subjects as to life, liberty, property. How could the judge determine such parliamentary questions without making a legislator of himself? Liberty, yes, but how much? property, yes, but how honest? and life, security—yes, yes, except for pirates and murderers. These questions require a lawmaker—which a king may be, which a parliament is, but which a judge by the very nature of his office must not, cannot be. "Life, liberty, property." These are titles, not under title so lacking in standards to guide judgment. It is the sociologist, not the legalist or judge, whose reaction is secured. And to whose philosophy of human rights shall the Court react? To Sir William Blackstone or Jeremy Bentham? To John Stuart Mill, the economist of the laissez faire, or to John Bright, the constructive liberal? Upon the answer to this question the progress of legal justice, the life of the Nation may depend.

INTERPOLATION HAS NO DEFENDERS

Sir, I find no advocates, no defenders of this "due process" interpolation, this "alteration" in the great instrument. It is not merely humanitarian legislation which has been made to suffer by it. May I read the following from an editorial of the Baltimore Sun?—

> It can hardly be doubted that the record of the Court in dealing with utility valuation has not been its brightest chapter. In the Baltimore United Railways case the Court found that a return of 6.26 percent on the company's investment was tantamount to taking property "without due process of law." All the way along the Court's effort to guide State commissions in regulating utility companies has produced more heat than light, and the whole subject illustrates the confusion which arises from the extension of the due-process clause to cover such matters as the fixing of rates for light, telephone, and traction companies.

We can only wonder why the courts do not cast this unworthy intruder headlong out of the sanctuary of the Constitution.

RIGHT TO WORK—LEGAL SANCTIONS OUTLAWED

So much has been said about the nullification of laws regulating minimum wages, maximum hours of labor, the employment of women and children that I will pass these now with this mere mention. But, sir, as to another decision of our highest Court, I will claim the House's attention. It concerns a decision by a divided vote which outlawed an act of this Congress protecting the right to work. The world does not owe a man a living, I grant you, but as certainly as it rests on moral foundations it does owe a man a chance to make a living. And the right to work—here is an act of Congress safeguarding the right by prohibiting the dismissal of an employee in interstate commerce because of membership in a labor union. A majority of the Court voted it down.

Fuehrer laissez faire has decreed "freedom of contract"; laissez faire, not the statute, is paramount in this Court.

Justice Holmes, dissenting, said:

> I also think that the statute is constitutional, and but for the decision of my brethren I should have felt pretty clear about it. * * * The section simply prohibits the more powerful party to exact certain undertakings, or to threaten dismissal or unjustly discriminate on certain grounds against those already employed.

Sir, this worker had dared to join a labor union. I ask, Had he not the same legal right to do this as to vote—or a stockholder to become a member of the employing corporation? But under this interpolation this undisputed legal right is outlawed. The Court had no more right under the Constitution as proclaimed to nullify this statute than King John had to hang his subjects without a trial. There was no question in the case as to the relation of Congress to parties—employer and employees were engaged in interstate commerce, that is, by railway—as to which Congress possesses undisputed power. The decision, may I say, rests squarely on a judge-made interpolation, so interpreted as to outlaw a first right, legal and moral, of an unoffending citizen of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, the outlawry of this right-to-work statute compares with the denial of freedom to Dred Scott. It is a right that connotes an equal duty in our time.

WHO DESTROYED STATE RIGHTS?

Mr. Speaker, the fourteenth amendment carries the same "due process" clause with respect to legislation by the States, and has been subjected by the courts to the same interpolation as the fifth amendment; and under it many thousands of State laws have been similarly nullified.

There are those who excuse nullification of acts of Congress by saying that the judge is protecting the State powers against impairment by Federal invasion; that the powers of the State have been almost destroyed by Federal action. There is, sir, some ground for this complaint. Consider what the State once was, clothed in her majestic colonial powers. Within the colonial boundaries she could exercise legislative powers like those of the British Parliament. Look at her now. Her legislative powers have been stripped to the bone. But who stripped them? Not this House. I challenge them to point to a single act of Congress impairing the State's power to legislate. Please note this list of subjects, purely domestic subjects, which are partly or wholly forbidden to the States now by the edicts of judges under this interpolation:

Federal decisions

1. Bakeries.
2. Banks.
3. Bedding.
4. Chain stores.
5. Creameries.
6. Education.
7. Employment agencies.
8. Flags.
9. Labor disputes.
10. Labor unions.
11. Laundries.
12. Lotteries.
13. Minimum-wage laws.
14. Mining.
15. Mortgages.
16. Negroes.
17. Newspapers.
18. Old-age homes.
19. Picketing.
20. Political parties.
21. Public utilities.
22. Railroads.
23. Railway conductors.
24. Rents.
25. Sleeping cars.
26. Statute of limitations.
27. Taxation.
28. Theater tickets.
29. Trust-made articles.
30. Use of highways.

State decisions

1. Alien employees.
2. Antitrust exemptions.
3. Barbers.
4. Chinese immigration.
5. Chinese labor.
6. Company stores.
7. Compulsory labor.
8. Convict-made goods.
9. Discharging employees.
10. Employment agencies.
11. Garnishment. (K)
12. Municipal ice.
13. Plumbers.
14. Public works.
15. Scrip payments.
16. Store orders.
17. Tips.
18. Union labels.
19. Weekly wage.
20. Women.
21. Employment.

Yes, ladies and gentlemen; do consider what the States once were. And look at them now—discrowned monarchs, cowing before some district judge, impotent to protect the helpless or the wronged against cunning and selfishness. Meanwhile the Congress is forbidden to act where the State is organically incapable to act, under the pretense that we should be encroaching on State powers. Away with this mockery! Let us hope never to hear its false voice in this Chamber again.

THE GENERAL WELFARE INTERPOLATIONS

But, ladies and gentlemen, here again the interpolator has done most violent work in crippling the Constitution. Paragraph 1 of section 8 of article I reads:

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts, and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

Careless or antagonistic readers may read this clause as if the word "excises" were not followed by a comma. The comma means "and." Read with the comma it is an independent power, like the power to levy a tax.

Judge Story, who was opposed to this clause, wrote a book in which, considering this clause, he said:

> The reading therefore which will be maintained in these commentaries is:
> "The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises 'in order' to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States."

Observe, ladies and gentlemen, that Story strikes out the dividing comma and in its stead interpolates the words "in order." In passing on the meaning of the general-welfare clause in the A. A. A. case the Supreme Court adopted the Story "reading." The Court declared:

> We shall not review the writings of public men and commentators or discuss the legislative practice. Study of all these leads us to conclude that the reading advocated by Mr. Justice Story is the correct one.

Thus, ladies and gentlemen, has a divided Court interpolated words into the Constitution which were not adopted by the Convention or by the ratifying States. This interpolation has the effect of destroying the welfare clause as a legislative power. The Vinson-Guffey coal bill and the A. A. A. acts were based on the clause, which had to be gotten rid of to outlaw them. This was done by the majority in order to save our institutions—forsooth; Justices Stone, Brandeis, and Cardozo dissent and remark:

> The assumption by judges that they alone can save them (our institutions) from destruction is far more likely in the long run to obliterate the constituent members of an indestructible Union than the frank recognition that language, even of a constitution, may mean what it says.

Even with the Story interpolation, the Court had left some meaning to the welfare clause. Later in the opinion, however, they destroyed all meaning. Despite Washington's opinion that Congress could, (e) the Court declared that because the words "agriculture", "mining", manufacturing" were not found in the specific powers following the general welfare clause, you could not do anything for such subjects under it. The effect is to make the clause read as follows:

> Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, imposts, and excises (in order) to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and the general welfare (in manner following, viz):

Sir, this adds another interpolation, and one that Story specifically discountenanced.

I shall not have time, gentlemen, to fully discuss what has happened with the general welfare clause and the interpolations you see there in red letters and brackets on the chart. With those two interpolations by the Court the welfare power of the Constitution is destroyed, regarded either as a legislative power or as an objective in taxation legislation. With those interpolations—red lines—stricken out, we do have ample power in this body to act, to provide for the general welfare of the United States. The legislative powers are ample and we need not be hanging all our necessary national legislation on one hook, the commerce clause.

CLAUSE ADOPTED TO PREVENT GAPS IN LEGISLATIVE POWER

Mr. Speaker, the destruction of the welfare clause leaves a vacuum in the power of Congress as to all national subjects not specifically named in the specific powers. Certainly no such vacuum was intended, as we can learn from the journal of the Convention. When the subject transcended the organic power of the State to reach both cause and effect because of geographical limitation, the necessary power in Congress was intended to be given. They left no gap in the judicial power where the plaintiff and defendant resided in different States.

General Washington, Governor Randolph, Madison, and other distinguished associates, reaching Philadelphia sometime before the other delegates to the Convention, prepared a plan for a constitution and a national organization of government. Its preamble read:

> Resolved, That the Articles of Confederation ought to be so corrected and enlarged as to accomplish the objects proposed by their institution; namely, common defense, security of liberty, and general welfare.
> And that Congress shall—
> (1) Enjoy the legislative rights vested in Congress by the confederation.
> (2) Moreover to legislate in all cases to which the separate States are incompetent.
> (3) Or in which the harmony of the United States might be interrupted by the exercise of individual legislation.

Sir, in the course of its proceedings the "specific powers" of the Constitution were reported from committee first, and later the Committee of Five reported the following:

> That at the end of the sixteenth clause of the seventh article the following words be added:
> "And to provide as may become necessary from time to time for the well managing and security of the common property and general interest and welfare of the United States in such manner as shall not interfere with the governments of individual States in matters which respect only their internal police or for which their individual authorities may be competent." (Elliot, p. 256.)

And so the matter stood when, on September 4, the committee of 11 made a report shifting the welfare provision to the first paragraph of the present section 8, article I, to read as follows:

> The legislature shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

And the clause was read twice and adopted by the Convention on September 4. (Elliot, pp. 281–282.) By this action the welfare clause was shifted up from the sixteenth paragraph to the first paragraph without change of meaning.

WELFARE CLAUSE A POWER

Mr. Speaker, I challenge the student of the journal; I challenge the historian of the Convention to deny that the clause was intended as a legislative power; I challenge the grammarian; I challenge the student of comparative government to deny it as a power; and by the word "power" I mean a grant of legislative authority to "provide for the general welfare" not merely through the levying of a tax but by other logical and legitimate methods; for example, the prescription of justiciable rights and duties generally. It is true that such a power is applicable to but a limited part of the total field of legislative subject matter and goes only to causes which carry interstate effects. But when applicable it possesses properties like the postal clause, enabling the lawmaker to fully control the subject matter. The break-down of the principle of competition in farming and coal mining, the equal right of competent men to work and to a share of the Nation's employment asset, all subjects which the separate State is organically unable to encompass for geographical reasons, are examples of interstate subjects, the evils of which may run into catastrophes if an equal national power to treat them be denied.

Sir, legislative power to effect such control exists in all the leading countries, most of which have taken some action.

Such a legislative power unquestionably existed in the sum total of the legislative powers of the colony and Parliament. It was to conserve this necessary legislative power that the welfare provision of the Virginia plan and the general-welfare clause was designed.

NULLIFICATION, A CANCER

Mr. Speaker, they have introduced an alien principle into the vitals of this sacred instrument when they assumed the power of nullification over the acts of the Congress. Nullification! I do not use the phrase "judicial review." It is a very clever phrase, intended to hide the gravest usurpation of authority in our history. I know that, reading the history of my country as a boy, I learned that nullification was something odious to the American heart. I know that I was taught to loathe the Hartford Convention and despise the names connected with it. I know that even John C. Calhoun, distinguished though he was, with a mental integrity that commanded respect, had once been threatened by President Jackson for his part in threatened nullification on the part of the great Commonwealth of South Carolina. What transformation has occurred that nullification, once so odious, that threatened the very life of the Republic, that at length produced a civil war from which we are only too fortunate to emerge as a republic again—what transformation has occurred, I ask, that the black flag of nullification can be raised over our heads again?

Allow me to repeat that an alien principle has been introduced into the vitals of our Government by this outlawry of our statutes. Institutions are like great organisms in the vital world. The Congress of the United States is an institution. When you introduce an alien principle into its vitals, you have started a cancer. The laws of biology apply. Please observe the propagation of the cancer since it began its life with the Dred Scott decision. History tells us how South Carolina, Kentucky, the Hartford Convention, had tried ingloriously to engraft the principle of State nullification upon our Constitution. A "slaveocracy" court succeeded later where they had failed. Its virus so infected its host as to throw it shortly into the paroxysms of the Civil War. It is an irresponsible principle by its very nature, this principle of nullification; like the cancer, its grows at the expense of its host, without care as to consequences. Observe, I say, its subsequent spread within and throughout the domain of the governmental body. See it, sir, attacking the organs of government and crippling or paralyzing them one by one. It begins by paralyzing the Government's power to safeguard the national tranquillity on the subject of slavery under the general-welfare clause. It challenged the Nation's power to issue money. It next invaded the field of taxation to annul the Nation's power to tax, destroying revenue so necessary to the life of the Government. It has vetoed our legislation as to mining, agriculture, and human welfare generally. What next? What vital parts remain? It will find them if allowed.

ENCROACHMENT—FIRST APOLOGETIC, NOW AGGRESSIVE.

Mr. Speaker, after the Dred Scott decision these Court majorities acted timidly, even apologetically, in nullifying an act of Congress. But they have now become aggressive and seem to welcome the opportunity. The name Otis has become distinguished for the third time in American history. There was an Otis of the Revolutionary War. There was another Otis, of the Hartford Convention. There is a third Otis now, who is a district judge somewhere in the Middle West.

Judge Otis has expressed great indignation at the thought that Congress was considering this subject of the restoration of its constitutional powers. What did he do as a judge? I have the record here if anybody questions it. The spirit of usurpation, the trenching on the powers of Congress, has reached such a point of presumption that Judge Otis on the mere petition of a private litigant, before hearing, issued an injunction against the Government enforcing the Labor Relations Act. Consider for a moment what that means. It means that such courts have reached such a point of contempt for your statute, for the Congress, and President that the affidavit of a private litigant, plus the signature of his lawyer, import higher legal sanction than the act you passed, that the Senate also has passed, an act signed by a successor of George Washington. Can presumption outrun this in folly? But it is always so with irresponsible power. Jefferson very well said man was not made to be trusted with power for life without any accountability to anyone. The British found it so with its lifetime House of Lords, and we have found it so with this life officeholding class of the United States. You will pardon me for reading something from Jefferson on the subject. His prophecy pronounced at the time seems preternatural. Jefferson writes:

> It has long been my opinion and I shrank from its expression, that the germ of dissolution of our Federal Government is in the judiciary, an irresponsible body, working like gravity by day and by night, gaining a little today, gaining a little tomorrow, advancing its noiseless step like a thief over the field of jurisdiction until all shall be lost.

Fascism has started no party in the United States, they say: How much does it need to do so. What is the first thing a dictator does? Abolish the legislative power.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I hope the gentleman will excuse me. I do not have the time.

COURTS AND WEAK ENFORCEMENT OF CRIMINAL LAWS

There is an old adage that I recall: "Cobbler, stick to thy last." Have not the judges of the United States enough to do, plenty of program, if they attend strictly to their own business, especially in the way of enforcing the criminal statutes of the United States? The nonenforcement of the laws against crime in the United States has made of it a byword among nations. Here are the facts: The percentage of convictions in France to the number of arrests was 89; the percentage in Norway was 83.3; in Great Britain the percentage of convictions to arrests was 80 percent; in Italy it is as low as 48 percent; in the United States it drops to 11.4 percent. Is not this courthouse outlawry of statutes inculcating a general disrespect for our laws? Let the courts return to their last, I say (f). [Applause.]

LEGAL FICTIONS—REVENUE

Mr. Speaker, perhaps in no field of their nullifying operations has more mischief been done than in the very important field of the revenues. When you turn over a constitutional subject to a courthouse, you find a wholly different mental reaction from that of the lawmaker's mind.

Let me say there is such a thing as lawyer sense that does not make common sense. In saying that, I intend no sneer at the legal profession. I am a lawyer myself. Assistant Attorney General Jackson, the other day, gave a good illustration of this. He said he was the head of some revenue bureau that desired to know at just what time a man's marriage changed his status for taxation purposes. The question was referred to a brilliant young lawyer in the Bureau. He reported shortly. You know, we have two legal maxims that we lawyers often resort to. One is that the law does not regard a fraction of a day. So the day of the marriage would be out. The second, in giving notice, the day of service is not counted. So the young attorney reported, on that legal reasoning, that the effective marriage of John and Mary did not occur until a day and a night after the wedding. [Laughter.] The Attorney General frankly said that he could find no fault with the legal reasoning, but he tore up the opinion. [Laughter.]

Now, you laugh at that. You will not laugh at this. Consider the subject, for example, of the income taxes of the United States. One hundred years ago Daniel Webster, arguing some case in that eminent court, Maryland against McCulloch, contesting the validity of a State statute imposing a special and discriminatory tax on United States Bank branches, dropped the following gem in oratory: "The power to tax is the power to destroy.' That sentence has since become one of our fictions of the law.

Let me illustrate. The State of Maryland is a sovereign State, it is argued, and so, too, are all the others. There you have a beautiful legal fiction built on a half-truth. We all know, however, that no State now a member of the American Union is a sovereign. None of them except Texas has ever exercised the first attribute of sovereign power, the making of treaties or the conducting of wars. What is the virtue of that fiction in a courthouse? A tax litigant comes in, the owner of a lot of municipal, county, or State bonds: "You must not count in my income any income I get from these bonds, Mr. Federal Government! If you start taxing my income from these Maryland bonds maybe you will destroy the State of Maryland." Now, there is a good example of courthouse sense that is utter nonsense before the court of common sense.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

RESULTING CHAOS AND INJUSTICE IN TAXATION

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. This fiction is applied by the courts not only to exempt all such income but also to all the employees of the counties, municipalities, and officeholders within the State. The fiction works also by reverse. The State income-tax collectors may not collect its income taxes from a Member of Congress or any employee of the United States living within the State. This destructive fiction does not end there. It has been used by the courts to serve the purpose of an oil company that had leased oil land from one of the States, which was thus exempted from paying the ordinary tax on its income because, forsooth, it was exercising a function of the sovereign State that gave the lease.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the exemption of stock dividends by the Court is another instance of its invasion of our constitutional powers by nullification of these revenue statutes—which has cost the country billions of dollars, altogether more than enough to have paid the "relief" bills of the depression.

I confess, sir, as one member of the Committee on Ways and Means, charged with the duty of initiating revenue measures, a feeling of complete discouragement. The Court's revenue decisions make it impossible for me to draft a revenue bill which does not grossly and unjustly discriminate in favor of large classes able to pay at the expense of other citizens whom I must make pay taxes for both. The recent corporation income tax is an example, for it illustrates to what devices the public financier has been driven by the outlawry of the statute taxing stock dividends.

REMEDIAL SUGGESTIONS

What shall be the remedy? An amendment to the Constitution is suggested. If we can get two-thirds here, two-thirds in the Senate, and then get three-quarters of the States, then under such an amendment we might reverse a decision of the Court declaring an act of Congress unconstitutional provided we could get a two-thirds vote in the House and Senate in favor of such reversal as well. Why not require that the vote be unanimous all around? Does not anybody know that under party government, which seems now to be the rule throughout the world, two-thirds government becomes utterly impossible in a legislative body? The curse of the country is government by its recalcitrants, under the one-third plus one rules.

The next suggestion is one that Hamilton and Marshall both made—as concessions, it is true—namely, that the Congress might, like the British Parliament, reverse a judicial legislative pronouncement which rendered nugatory one of its statutes (g).

Sir, the third suggestion is that under article III a statute might be passed depriving the courts of jurisdiction to pass on the constitutionality of acts under such general and indeterminate phrases as the general-welfare clause, commerce among the States, taxation, the issue of money, none of which mean anything until defined by a statute. These are title phrases, wholly lacking in self-executing force and whose construction call for legislative will and discretion. (i) It is the American court alone that assumes to substitute its views on such general phrases for that of the Parliament. It thinks it is wiser than Congress. It is not wiser. But suppose you act under article III and a court should set your statute of jurisdiction aside. It would hardly be showing more violence in doing so that it has shown in expunging the welfare clause, adulterating the due-process clause, or in exempting Federal judges from the payment of income taxes. Suppose it should set it aside; what then? You have at last been brought up exactly to the point which the President had to face—a sure constitutional solution of the problem which courts could not nullify, and that is by a revision of the number of judges. [Applause.] It is by that very method, history shows us, that the House of Lords has been controlled through the centuries and parliamentary democracy in the United Kingdom preserved.

THE ARGUMENT, ACQUIESCENCE

But they argue that we have lost the right to restore the powers of Congress, to stop courthouse nullification, we have lost it by acquiescence. Acquiescence! Who acquiesced? Let me summon the great spirits in our history before you.

James Madison, father of the Constitution, did you acquiesce?

I did not. This makes the judiciary paramount to the legislature which was never intended and can never be proper.

Thomas Jefferson, did you acquiesce?

No, no, my countrymen. The opinion makes the judiciary a despotic branch.

Andrew Jackson, did you acquiesce?

Never. I will hang the leaders of nullification if they persist.

Abraham Lincoln, savior of the Union, do you accept the Dred Scott decision?

Somebody has to reverse that decision, and we mean to do it.

General Grant, they have struck down the greenback which helped you win the war. Do you acquiesce?

I acquiesce? I will reconstitute that Court.

And he did.

Theodore Roosevelt, a great successor of yours in name and blood, is struggling with the same problem with which you struggled a generation ago. Did you acquiesce? Speak!

I do speak. Let the people recall the decision. The highest right of a free people is the right to make their own laws, and this right does not exist if under the pretense of interpretation an outside body can nullify the laws.

Now, my fellow Members, do we acquiesce? Consider the consequence in the full light of history. If we do, we have sentenced ourselves by that act to become mere legislative eunuchs, assembling here annually as a make-believe Congress to vote appropriations, to protect the gardens and seraglios of extremists in the philosophy of laissez faire. [Applause.]

Speaking for myself, Mr. Speaker, I can only say that I, too, have taken my oath to defend the Constitution of the United States; to defend it not only against foreign but also against domestic foes, mistaken only though they be.

I regard my oath as highly, sir, as any of the judges sitting on any bench today, and I mean to keep the faith; otherwise all is lost. With the death of American democracy, not only your countrymen lose but the hope of the world will suffer a shock from which it may not be able to recover for centuries to come. [Applause.]

APPENDIXES

MARSHALL-CHASE LETTER

Discussing the subject, the Honorable R. Walton Moore calls attention to the Marshall-Chase letter:

"In passing, I may remind you of a curious circumstance. That case (Marbury v. Madison) was decided in February 1803, and in January 1804 Marshall wrote a letter to Mr. Justice Chase, then involved in an impeachment proceeding based upon the charge that in various ways he had acted as a sort of judicial dictator. In that letter Marshall took the position that it might be well to concede to Congress a veto of the Court decisions, using this language: 'A reversal of those legal opinions deemed unsound by the legislature would certainly better comport with the mildness of our character than the removal of the judge who has rendered them, unknowing of his faults.' Mr. Beveridge, who in general is Marshall's unreserved eulogist, makes the following comment on the letter: 'Marshall thus suggested the most radical method of correcting judicial decisions ever advanced before or since by any man of the first class. * * * Had we not the evidence of Marshall's signature to a letter written in his well-known hand, it could not be credited that he ever entertained such sentiments. They were in direct contradiction to his reasoning in Marbury v. Madison, and utterly destructive of the Federalist philosophy of judicial control of legislation.'"

In an address to Congress on June 16, 1789, Mr. Madison said:

"The legislative powers are vested in Congress, and are to be exercised by them uncontrolled by any other department, except the Constitution has qualified it otherwise. The Constitution has qualified the legislative power by authorizing the President to object to any act it may pass, requiring, in the case, two-thirds of both Houses to concur in making a law; but still the absolute legislative power is vested in the Congress, with this qualification alone." (Fourth Elliot Debates, p. 456.)

WILLOUGHBY, COMMENTARIES ON THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES

The reasoning of Marshall is by no means convincing. In every government operating under a written constitution the function of finally determining its meaning must be located somewhere, but it does not follow that this function must necessarily be exercised by the courts. For the fact is that in nearly all countries which possess written constitutions, except the United States, the legislatures are empowered to determine for themselves, without judicial or other interference, the extent of their constitutional powers. It is true that, at the time Marshall rendered his opinion, these other written constitutions did not exist, but the fact that this consitutional practice has since existed and now exists, makes it evident that the doctrine of judicial supremacy does not necessarily find application in the operation of a government that derives its powers from a written constitution.

The provision of article VI, paragraph 2, of the Federal Constitution that "this Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof; and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding", has no pertinency to the question of the power of the courts to question the validity of acts of Congress. For evidently the sole purpose of this provision was to establish the supremacy of Federal over State law.

(e)

Washington, who presided throughout the Convention, in his very first message to Congress, declared:

"The advancement of agriculture, commerce, and manufactures by all proper means will not, I trust, need recommendation."

Both Houses made answer, as was the custom in those days. The Senate said:

"Agriculture, commerce, and manufactures, forming the basis of the wealth and strength of our Confederated Republic, must be the frequent subject of our deliberation, and shall be advanced by all proper means in our power."

And the House of Representatives declared:

"We concur with you in the sentiment that agriculture, commerce, and manufactures are entitled to legislative protection, and that the promotion of science and literature will contribute to the security of a free government; in the progress of our deliberations we shall not lose sight of objects so worthy of our regards."

Country	Year	Arrests per 100,000 population	Convictions per 100,000 population	Percent
France	1932	599.2	536.9	89.0
Norway	1934	180.0	150.0	83.3
Great Britain	1934	214.4	171.07	80.0
Italy	1934	1,304.1	630.9	48.3
United States	1933	1,429.4	162.95	11.4

(g)

"It is not true that the Parliament of Great Britain, or the legislatures of the particular States, can rectify the exceptionable decisions of their respective courts, in any other sense than might be done by a future legislature of the United States." (Federalist, No. 81, and monograph of John M. Henry, Esq., Pittsburgh, Pa., author of Nine Above the Law.)

(h)

Jackson said:

"I'll hang every leader of that infatuated people, sir, by martial law—irrespective of his name or political or social position."

Regarding nullifications at bottom as a species of sedition he vowed that he would meet it "at the threshold and have the leaders arrested and arraigned for treason" (Beard, The Rise of American Civilization, p. 560).

(i)

The following are subjects which would remain unaffected by the proposed limitation of the jurisdiction of the courts. (See Sisson bill, H. R. 10315, Seventy-fourth Congress, second session.)

INALIENABLE RIGHTS

Habeas corpus.
Bills of attainder.
Ex post facto laws.
Duties on exports from a State.
Preference to ports of any State.
Proof of treason, two witnesses, etc.
Religious qualifications for office, not to be.
No law establishing religion, or prohibiting its exercise.
No law to abridge—
(a) Freedom of speech.
(b) Freedom of the press.
(c) Freedom of peaceable assembly.
(d) Freedom of right of petition.
No law to infringe right to State to militia.
Soldiers not to be quartered "in any house", etc.
Unreasonable searches and seizures.
Denial of presentment and indictment, certain crimes.
Twice in jeopardy, or witness against oneself.
Excessive bail, fines, or cruel and unusual punishments.
Questioning validity of public debt.
Denial right to vote on account of race, slavery, sex.
Treason not to work corruption of blood, etc.
Right of trial by jury, etc.

(Mr. LEWIS of Maryland and Mr. HOOK asked and were given permission to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD.)

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of undertaking an extended argument on this very controversial question that has been raised. I asked for time in order that I might make a brief reply to the argument of my friend, the gentleman from North Carolina. I have a great affection for the gentleman, and peculiarly so for my devoted friend who has just addressed the House. Our friendship is not dependent upon our agreeing upon all questions. The time of the gentleman from Maryland was almost entirely devoted to the threshing of old straw, a pastime in which I have heretofore indulged to some extent. However, the gentleman is always interesting and I joined with the other Members of the House in complimenting him by rising when he concluded his very fine address.

I concede to the gentleman from North Carolina the very highest patriotism and the best of motives, but these same virtues I claim for myself. That we should differ does not mean that either is insincere. The gentleman is following the lead given by our Attorney General in an address he broadcast from Miami, Fla., some 10 days or more ago, in which he sought to defend before the American people this proposal, which he had succeeded in selling the President.

The gentleman from North Carolina said in the course of his remarks that the proposal had shocked the legal profession and caused great excitement amongst the people. Well, let me ask: Are you surprised that a move of this kind which, it is believed, vitally affects constitutional government in America, should have caused excitement amongst the people? Of course the people are excited, and why should they not be?

The gentleman from Maryland departed from the line of his general discussion long enough to remark that the percentage of convictions for crime in other parts of the world is very much higher than is the case in the United States. May I remind the gentleman that trial for crimes raises questions that are usually passed upon by juries, and particularly is this true in the United States. The judges have little to do with the determination of such questions and are little responsible for what is done. Is this a condition that proves that our American judiciary is corrupt?

Let me get back to the proposal to reform the Supreme Court. When taken out of its setting and considered upon its own merits, what do we find it to be? Nothing less than a demand for a new Court that will give a new meaning to the Constitution. In other words, the demand that is made upon us is for an enlarged Court that will amend the Constitution by judicial interpretation, which would be just as effective as if the question had been passed upon by the people. Advocates of the proposal insist that the adoption of this measure would in nowise involve the question of the predetermination of the views of members of the legal profession that might be elevated to the Supreme Court by the President. Yet, in the next breath, they insist that the bill must be adopted and a new Court must be created in order to make certain a different meaning may be given the Constitution so as to make valid any act that Congress might see fit to adopt. [Applause.]

Let us see if they are altogether consistent. They say that the proposal does not involve changing the Constitution; yet in the next breath insist that a new interpretation must be had and that change of the Constitution is involved because they contend that without this that which is desired cannot be accomplished.

Mr. Speaker, what is the demand in this case? It is for a Court that will, as insisted by the eloquent gentleman from Maryland, hold that the general-welfare clause carries a delegation of legislative authority. Is that one of their insistences? Your minds may be refreshed by recalling the statement just uttered on this floor by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS]. If we should have a Court that would hold the general-welfare clause contains a delegation of legislative power, you might as well do, as Jefferson and others said, wipe out all the rest of that instrument.

What is the second demand of the proponents of change? It is for a Court that will hold that under the commerce clause Federal power may be extended to the point of production control. What does that mean? It means the power to federalize every activity of life. If Congress may under the commerce clause control production, then Congress may control every activity that is connected therewith. If Congress can control production, it may regulate the sowing of seed, the cultivation and the harvesting of crops. If we extend Federal control to that extent, then we will have completely regimented the lives of the people. [Applause.]

The statement is made that those who are resisting these demands are undertaking to misrepresent and to slander the Chief Executive. This cannot be true, for many of the President's most devoted friends are resisting this proposal. I have defended him when it cost something to do so. They are undertaking to do that which Mr. Cummings sought to suggest; that is, make the President an issue in this contest. The President is not an issue. It is true that he sent the proposal up to us and that he is advocating its adoption, but he is not the issue. The question is far more important than the mere welfare of any individual in all this world. The President's fame in nowise rests upon his ability to bring about the acquiescence of Congress. [Applause.] This question is fundamental, and it is not political in the sense it is a party matter.

The advocates of change are diligently undertaking to create the impression that it is a party fight. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY] said that we had been given a mandate on the part of the people, thereby undertaking to spread out and further the propaganda which was initiated by the Attorney General in presenting this question to the country as purely a party question. This is not a party question. In its importance it transcends all party welfare. I would have utter scorn for myself if I were to make party fealty the test of my position on a question so fundamental as this, a question which involves the very life of the Republic.

Mr. Speaker, if a new Court should be had and perform as would be expected and demanded, and we might say, as would be done, it would mean that all restraint upon Congress would be removed and this body, the legislative branch of the Government, would hold blanket authority to enact their will, whatever it might be, into law, which would be binding upon the people.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COX. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McFARLANE. What objection does the gentleman have to the Congress being the legislative body of this country like our forefathers demanded?

Mr. COX. I have no objection to the Congress legislating, but I do want the Congress itself to legislate and within the powers delegated to it. [Applause.] Does that answer the gentleman?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman find in that statement his answer? If not, I will undertake to particularize. [Applause.]

I have great faith in my fellows, but I shudder to think what would happen to my country as a result of legislative conduct if all constitutional restraints were taken off this body.

What is attempted in this case? It is to exercise a power which, under the Constitution, is reserved to the people. Do advocates of change invite or do they demand a power or a condition that will enable them to obtain a new interpretation of the Constitution? Confessedly so, because they say that to submit an amendment in the usual manner would take too long. Here is a test of their sincerity of willingness to be governed by what the people want. Let Congress propose needed amendments and submit them to the States, acting in convention. It is within the competency of Congress to submit questions of amendment in this manner. Congress may fix the date of conventions and prescribe rules and regulations for the holding of them.

If the advocates of constitutional amendment through judicial interpretation are willing to be governed by what the people want, then let them accept this suggestion, let amendments be submitted, let popular expression be obtained, all of which can be had within 60 days and before the debate in this Congress well begins.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Would the gentleman vote for such an amendment in this body if it were submitted here?

Mr. COX. I do not know but that is a fair question. I am glad to answer it. I believe this question is of such widespread interest that the people should be given opportunity to express themselves on it, and therefore I would favor the submission of amendments in line with the proposal that now excites the attention of the country.

Mr. Speaker, I do not find it pleasing to be resisting a demand that comes from my President. I do not find it pleasing to have to come down in this well and bare my breast to the fire of the enemy, yet, at the same time, I want it understood that I have no apologies to offer for the position that I take, and certainly I do not apologize for any in whose company I may find myself. I am undertaking, as best I can, to meet my responsibility as a citizen of the Republic, and will at later date undertake an extended discussion of this question, which goes down to the very foundation of constitutional democracy. [Applause.]

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute to reply to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] respecting his remarks about a fellow townsman of mine, the Attorney General of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia. I respect his ability, though I do not agree with his point of view. However, I cannot sit here mute when the name of a friend is brought into the discussion without that gentleman having a chance to answer for himself. I do not believe the gentleman from Georgia intended to cast aspersions on the Attorney General of the United States. Lest it may be considered by some that he did, I take this opportunity to state that in the opinion of a great many Americans, his many friends everywhere, the Americanism of the Attorney General of the United States is as good as the Americanism of anybody and also his Democracy. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks made this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to put a petition on the desk for the purpose of discharging the Judiciary Committee from further consideration of H. R. 4417, a bill "to regulate the Supreme and other Federal courts", if the committee does not report the said measure after having it for 30 legislative days. According to information I have received, about one-third of the people in the United States are in need of the necessities of life. We Representatives in Congress should not hesitate to give our utmost support to legislation recommended by the President of the United States if it is to remove obstacles which prevent the enactment of progressive, constructive, and humanitarian legislation.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 2772. An act for the relief of certain disbursing officers of the Army of the United States and for the settlement of individual claims approved by the War Department.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 194. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Brownville, Nebr.;

H. R. 911. An act for the relief of Lewis Clark and Freda Mason;

H. R. 1120. An act for the relief of Fields B. Arthur and Arthur L. Allen, copartners, Colorado Culvert & Flume Co.; Glen Haller, Kenneth Austin, A. B. Hoffman, J. W. Jones, and Lloyd Lasswell;

H. R. 2503. An act to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River near The Dalles, Oreg.;

H. R. 2772. An act for the relief of certain disbursing officers of the Army of the United States and for the settlement of individual claims approved by the War Department;

H. R. 3148. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Alabama, or Etowah County, or both, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Cossa River at or near Gilberts Ferry in Etowah County, Ala.;

H. R. 3675. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River at or near Lincolnton, Ga.; and

H. R. 3689. An act declaring Turtle Bay and Turtle Bayou, Chambers County, Tex., to be nonnavigable waterways.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, March 9, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

A subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia will meet Tuesday morning, March 9, at 10 a. m., in room 345, House Office Building, to consider the following bills: H. R. 4803, Public Utilities Commission and joint board, enforcement of orders; H. R. 5031, offenses against property.

COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

A subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia will meet Tuesday afternoon, March 9, at 2: 30 p. m., in room 345, House Office Building, to consider H. R. 4806, for the prevention of blindness in infants.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

Y., opposing the enactment of the bill for the reorganization of the Federal judiciary or to any other bill the effect of which would be to increase the number of Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, or otherwise to interfere with the independent action of the Federal courts and the justices and judges thereof, as one of the three great departments of the Federal Government; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

857. Also, petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Walton, N. Y., unalterably opposing the plan for the change of the judiciary as proposed by the President of the United States, and urging the Senators and Representatives in Congress to lend their influence and to cast their votes against the passage of such proposed legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

858. Also, petition of the Lenni Lenape Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, Delhi, N. Y., strongly protesting against the coercion, cramming, and change in the Supreme Court of the United States, because "we feel that as patriotic Americans we must turn the tide against this change or we shall lose the precious liberty for which our forefathers sacrificed their lives and fortunes"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

859. By Mr. MARTIN of Colorado: House Joint Resolution No. 10 of the General Assembly of Colorado, urging appointment of a citizen of Colorado as a member of the Federal Power Commission; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

860. Also, Memorial No. 7 of the General Assembly of Colorado, approving measures to appropriate the necessary means for pest control in agriculture; to the Committee on Appropriations.

861. Also, House Joint Memorial No. 10 of the General Assembly of Colorado, to continue, enlarge, or make an appropriation for the continuance of the public-works program; to the Committee on Appropriations.

862. Also, House Joint Memorial No. 8 of the General Assembly of Colorado, providing for punishment of persons stealing animals moving in interstate commerce, etc.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

863. Also, House Joint Memorial No. 9 of the General Assembly of Colorado, favoring the control and eradication of noxious weeds, etc.; to the Committee on Agriculture.

864. By Mr. MERRITT: Resolution of the New York State Bar Association, Albany, N. Y., disapproving the proposed legislation affecting membership of the Supreme Court; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

865. Also, resolution of the New York City Housing Authority, endorsing the bill introduced both in the House and in the Senate providing financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions; for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income; and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

866. Also, resolution of the Fellows of the New York Academy of Dentistry, being deeply concerned over the matter of proposed changes in the Federal judiciary now being considered by Congress and, having great respect for the wide experience and having confidence in the judgment of Congress, pray with humbleness of heart that the decision of Congress will be the President's decision and that American traditions may be preserved; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

867. Also, resolution of the New York Petroleum Industries Committee, memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact with all convenient speed such legislation as may be necessary to abolish the Federal gasoline-sales tax and to surrender to the States exclusively the power to tax such sales in the future; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

868. Also, resolution of the officers and members of the Delaware Regular Democratic Club, of Jackson Heights, N. Y., giving their unqualified endorsement to the President's plan for reforming the Federal judiciary; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

869. Also, resolution of the Trinity League of New York City, declaring its firm opposition to the President's proposal of enlarging the Supreme Court; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

870. Also, resolution of the Society of Mayflower Descendants of New York, opposing any attempt to subject the Supreme Court of the United States to political or executive domination; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

871. By Mr. MOTT: Senate Joint Memorial No. 2 of the Thirty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, urging the Congress of the United States to make an appropriation to aid the fisheries of the States of Oregon and Washington; to the Committee on Appropriations.

872. Also, Senate Joint Memorial No. 6 of the Thirty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, urging that Federal funds that are now or which hereafter are made available for the control of white-pine blister rust be expended on private and State-owned timberlands as well as upon timberlands owned by the Federal Government; to the Committee on Agriculture.

873. By Mr. PFEIFER: Petition of the Brooklyn Postal Employees' Credit Union, Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring the passage of House bill 1984; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

874. Also, petition of the New York State Flood Control Commission, Albany, N. Y., opposing any Federal legislation designed to change the principles and policies of the 1936 Federal Flood Control Act; to the Committee on Flood Control.

875. Also, petition of the Brooklyn Merchant Bakers' Association, Brooklyn, N. Y., concerning amendment to the windfall tax provisions to permit refunds by mills to all bakers, without discrimination; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

876. By Mr. QUINN: Resolution by Local Union 524, United Mine Workers of America, Harwick, Pa., requesting that appropriations be made to continue the work of investigating unlawful groups who terrorize the trade unions, and a resolution advocating a shorter work day and week as the solution of solving unemployment in the coal-mining industry; to the Committee on Rules.

877. By Mr. RICH: Petition of the McKean County Home Rule Association, of Kane, Pa., protesting against the President's plan to change the judicial system; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

878. Also, petition of citizens of Kane, McKean County, Pa., protesting against the proposed changes in the membership of the Supreme Court; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

879. By Mr. SHAFER of Michigan: Petition of Ray J. Dagon and 67 other citizens, of Hillsdale, Hillsdale County, Mich., protesting against the bill offered by President Roosevelt, or any substitutes, permitting the executive branch of the Government to control or subordinate the judicial or legislative powers established under the Constitution; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

880. Also, petition of Laura DeLashmutt and five other citizens, of Vicksburg, Mich., protesting against any changes in the Supreme Court as proposed by President Roosevelt; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

881. By Mr. SMITH of West Virginia: Resolution of the West Virginia State Legislature, urging the enactment of legislation providing Federal funds for flood relief in West Virginia; to the Committee on Flood Control.

882. By Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey: Petition signed by Eliza S. Hensel and 20 other residents, of Tenafly, N. J., protesting against the President's plan, or any substitutes, permitting the executive branch of the Government to control or subordinate the judicial or the legislative powers established under the Constitution; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

883. Also, petition of E. J. Surbeck and five other persons, of Ridgewood, N. J., protesting against the President's plan to enlarge the Supreme Court; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

884. Also, letter from Mrs. Albert R. Doughty, of Rutherford, N. J., legislation chairman, Woman's Club of Rutherford, N. J., which has a membership of approximately 400, advising that the Woman's Club of Rutherford has voted unanimously to go on record as opposed to the plan to increase the number of members of the Supreme Court of the United States, and, as opposed to any bill submitted to Congress the effect of which would be to bring about such a plan; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

885. By Mr. WITHROW: Joint Resolution No. 34–A, passed by the Wisconsin Legislature, relating to memorializing Congress to modify the Works Progress Administration so as to provide needy taxpayers preferred employment on works projects; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

886. Also, Joint Resolution No. 16–A passed by the Wisconsin Legislature, memorializing the Congress of the United States to amend the Federal Social Security Act to include other classes of labor; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

887. Also, Joint Resolution No. 23–A, passed by the Wisconsin Legislature, memorializing the Congress to reduce the payments for interest and principal on farm and home loans; to the Committee on Appropriations.

888. Also, Joint Resolution No. 21–A, passed by the Wisconsin Legislature, memorializing the Congress to provide a moratorium on foreclosure of mortgages held by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation; to the Committee on Appropriations.

889. Also, Joint Resolution No. 17–A, passed by the Wisconsin Legislature, memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact more simplified and stringent regulatory measures for aircraft and other legislation tending to lessen the hazards of aviation; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

890. Also, Joint Resolution No. 12–S, passed by the Wisconsin Legislature, urging the Congress of the United States to include the production of agricultural lime in all work programs carried out by the Federal Government; to the Committee on Agriculture.

891. Also, Joint Resolution No. 14–A, passed by the Wisconsin Legislature, memorializing the Congress of the United States to authorize the construction of the Kickapoo Valley project and to make an appropriation therefor; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

892. Also, Joint Resolution No. 13–A, passed by the Wisconsin Legislature, memorializing Congress to provide for the repayment of Wisconsin Emergency Relief Administration loans made to farmers in drought-stricken areas by working on county, township, or village municipal-work projects; to the Committee on Appropriations.

893. Also, Joint Resolution No. 20–A, passed by the Wisconsin Legislature, urging the Congress of the United States to allocate to the several States the whole appropriation authorized by the George-Deen Act for vocational education; to the Committee on Appropriations.

SENATE

TUESDAY, MARCH 9, 1937

(Legislative day of Monday, Mar. 8, 1937)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Monday, March 8, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 936) to regulate the sales of goods in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 157. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation of disabled residents of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes" (Public, No. 801, 70th Cong.);

H. R. 2898. An act to amend section 1 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to fix the salaries of officers and members of the Metropolitan Police force, the United States Park Police force, and the fire department of the District of Columbia", approved May 27, 1924, and for other purposes;

H. R. 4188. An act to amend section 907 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901, as amended, up to and including June 7, 1924;

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—KENTUCKY UTILITIES CO.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, on last Thursday I read into the RECORD a paragraph of a letter relating to the activities of an attorney at Middlesboro in Kentucky in procuring telegrams to be sent to Members of Congress. Later I was requested by the Kentucky Utilities Co., which was mentioned in the letter, to give the name of the writer of the letter as well as the attorney, which I did. The letter was written by the Honorable Joseph F. Bosworth, an outstanding Republican leader in Kentucky, who has been a member of both houses of the general assembly and speaker of the lower house, and the attorney was mentioned as J. W. Smith.

I desire to say that the letter from Mr. Bosworth did not charge that the Kentucky Utilities Co. was responsible for what the attorney was doing. I have a telegram which I ask consent to place in the RECORD, sent to me by R. M. Watt, president of the Kentucky Utilities Co., and also a letter written by Mr. Watt on the same subject, as well as a letter from Mr. Smith, the attorney referred to. I also wish to announce I have an affidavit from Mr. Bosworth in which he reiterates the truth of his charge, and a telegram from the mayor of the city of Middlesboro, the city clerk, and a prominent attorney there, Mr. Rohrer, who say that Mr. Smith has been an attorney for the Kentucky Utilities Co. and has been employed by it on different occasions.

I did not mean to charge, and neither do I now charge, and neither do I believe, that the officers and directors of the Kentucky Utilities Co. are responsible for the activities of Mr. Smith. I simply meant to show, by reading the letter, that some people were going about inducing men and women to send telegrams on the Court matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the communications referred to by the Senator from Kentucky will be printed in the RECORD.

The letters and telegram are as follows:

KENTUCKY UTILITIES CO.,
Lexington, Ky., March 6, 1937.

Senator M. M. LOGAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Since I was advised on yesterday that Mr. Jos. F. Bosworth, of Middlesboro, was the author of the letter referred to in my telegram to you and that Mr. J. W. Smith, of Middlesboro, was the lawyer whose name was mentioned in that letter by Mr. Bosworth, I have talked with Mr. Smith, who promised me that he would write you fully today in denial of the statements contained in Mr. Bosworth's letter connecting the Kentucky Utilities Co. with the transactions therein referred to.

So far as this company is concerned, I can only reiterate what I stated in my telegram to you, which is that this company has never made any expenditure in connection with or participated in either the controversy over the Supreme Court or the controversy over the Holding Company Act. No officer, agent, employee, attorney, or any other person representing or in any way associated with this company has ever had any authority or direction from the company to do or say anything relating to the legislation concerning either of these matters.

The act relating to the Supreme Court has never even been discussed or considered by the management of this company.

As to the Holding Company Act, the charge made by Mr. Bosworth is absolutely the first and only intimation ever made by any person as to any participation whatever on the part of our company, or any of its officers, in opposition thereto. As a matter of fact, this company took no part in the opposition to the passage of the Holding Company Act, and since its enactment has complied fully with its terms.

You are well aware that in the minds of a large part of the public a charge, however groundless, against a public-service corporation is frequently equivalent to a conviction. Being conscious as I am of the absolute correctness of the position of this company in respect to the matters referred to, I want you to know that we feel that this company has already been done a grave injustice.

Yours very truly,

R. W. WATT, President.

LOUISVILLE, KY., March 5, 1937.

Senator M. M. LOGAN,
Washington, D. C.:

Upon the floor of the Senate today you read a letter from an unnamed author containing the intimation that Kentucky Utilities Co., through an attorney also unnamed, was offering to pay for telegrams to Senators and Representatives urging opposition to the President's plan with respect to the Supreme Court. The letter also contained the charge that the company, through the same unnamed attorney, had done the same thing in the late controversy over the Holding Company Act. This is to advise you with emphasis that both the intimation and the charge are utterly without the slightest foundation. In fact, whenever you are at liberty to disclose the names of the author of the letter and the alleged attorney for the company, we will welcome the opportunity to meet that issue of fact. The plain truth is that never at any time has this company made any expenditure in connection with or participated in any way in either the controversy over the Supreme Court or that over the Holding Company Act. It is unfortunate that a public-service corporation which endeavors to comport itself with propriety should be subjected to anonymous calumny, since the letter above referred to has been attended with such publicity. It will be appreciated if you will see that this response is accorded the same favor.

R. M. WATT.
President, Kentucky Utilities Co.

MIDDLESBORO, KY., March 6, 1937.

Senator M. M. LOGAN,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: My attention has been called to statements made in a letter written to you by Mr. Joseph F. Bosworth, of Middlesboro, indicating that, acting on behalf of Kentucky Utilities Co., I had been active in opposing the proposed plan to enlarge the Supreme Court, and also in opposing the passage of the Holding Company Act some years ago. These statements are absolutely untrue.

I am a Republican in politics. I am chairman of the Middlesboro city Republican organization, and have been since last fall. I am opposed to the plan to enlarge the Supreme Court. I have been active in that opposition to the extent of getting a number of my friends, who are also opposed to the plan, to send telegrams to Congressman J. M. ROBSION of our district, urging him to use every effort to defeat the plan. I requested Mr. Bosworth to send such a telegram. He declined. I never requested Mr. Bosworth or anyone else to send a telegram to anyone except to the Congressman from my own congressional district. I have always felt that any American citizen has a right to favor or oppose the enactment of any law. I acted in this matter as any citizen has a right to act.

I have never heard directly or indirectly any expression of opinion by anyone connected in any way with the Kentucky Utilities Co. with reference to the Supreme Court controversy. I have never discussed that matter with anyone connected with the Kentucky Utilities Co. My activities in connection with the Supreme Court matter have been and are entirely personal, and, so far as I know and believe, without the knowledge or information of anyone connected with the Kentucky Utilities Co. or any other utilities company. I never gave any thought whatsoever as to what anybody connected with any utilities company thought about the Supreme Court matter.

I never engaged in any activity in connection with the Holding Company Act. I had no interest whatever in that matter and I have none now. I never mentioned that subject to Mr. Bosworth in my life. I never discussed that matter, directly or indirectly, with anybody connected with any utilities company.

Yours very truly,

JAMES W. SMITH.

REPORT OF CALIFORNIA PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION COMMISSION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a joint letter from the Secretaries of State, Agriculture, and Commerce, members of the California Pacific International Exposition Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report concerning the character and extent of Federal participation in the California Pacific International Exposition at San Diego, Calif., during the years 1935 and 1936, together with a detailed statement of expenditures, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

LANDS FOR SHIVWITZ BAND OF PAIUTE INDIANS, UTAH

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to reserve certain lands in the State of Utah for the Shivwitz Band of Paiute Indians, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Oklahoma, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolution opposing the construction of the Denison Reservoir and Dam on Red River

Whereas the United States of America is considering the construction of a large reservoir and dam on Red River below the mouth of the Washita River to be called the Denison Reservoir, for the purpose of impounding a large supply of water; and

Whereas the construction of said dam will inundate completely a large area of valuable farm land within the State of Oklahoma and completely destroy several towns and almost completely inundate two entire counties in the State of Oklahoma; and

Whereas the State of Oklahoma will thereby be compelled to bear the entire loss from this project and will receive no compensating benefits from the construction of said reservoir and dam; and

Whereas the problem of flood control in the affected area may be much better solved by the construction of smaller dams and smaller reservoirs on the various tributaries of Red River in the State of Oklahoma at a much smaller total cost and would result in the impounding and saving of floodwaters for the use of the drought sufferers in the semiarid areas of this State and prevent its dissipation, and would also result in the employment of labor being distributed throughout the entire State: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Sixteenth Legislature of the State of Oklahoma:

SECTION 1. That it does hereby express its vigorous opposition to the construction of said reservoir and dam; and

SEC. 2. That it hereby respectfully requests the chief executive of the State of Oklahoma and the entire national congressional delegation from the State of Oklahoma to do all in their power to prevent the construction of said dam; and be it further

Resolved—

SEC. 3. That the secretary of state be, and is hereby, directed to send certified copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, the Governor of Oklahoma, each of the United States Senators and Congressmen of Oklahoma, the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, to the Mississippi River Commission at Vicksburg, Miss., and to the National Water Resources Committee at Washington, D. C.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolution memorializing the congressional delegation from Oklahoma to support President Franklin Delano Roosevelt in the reorganization of the judiciary of the United States

Whereas the President of the United States recently sent a message to Congress suggesting a reorganization of the judiciary of the United States, increasing the membership of the Supreme Court of the United States; and

Whereas it is within the prerogative of the President to suggest such changes and it is within the power of Congress to pass laws relative to the judiciary, it is deemed expedient by the House of Representatives of Oklahoma, the senate concurring therein, to express its opinion and favor of such changes; and

Whereas it appears that the rights of the people might be better protected and the will of the people more clearly expressed under the law from time to time if the judiciary were increased so as to provide a more current view and better opinions on the matters now pending before the Supreme Court: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the house of representatives, the senate concurring therein, is hereby memorializing Congress to consider favorably the suggestion of the President of the United States and to pass the act which he has recommended for the increase of membership to the Supreme Court from 9 to 15; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent by the clerk to each Member of the Oklahoma delegation in Congress, to the President of the Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to the President of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

Concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives and the Senate of the Sixteenth Legislature of the State of Oklahoma, memorializing the Seventy-fifth Congress of the United States to enact proper legislation to eliminate competitive bidding on star mail routes, and to provide for the retention of star-route contractors who have given satisfactory service; authorizing the Postmaster General to grant additional compensation where rates are unreasonably low; directing the clerk of the house of representatives to send a copy of this resolution to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Seventy-fifth Congress of the United States and to each Member of the Oklahoma delegation of said Congress

Whereas the present system of competitive bidding on star mail routes tends to bring into the service of the Post Office Department inexperienced carriers, thereby resulting in inferior service; and

Whereas the fear of losing his contract every 4 years causes the contractor holding said contract to refrain from purchasing the proper equipment; and

Whereas the present economic stress has forced certain contractors to bid below the cost of operation rather than to apply for Federal relief; and

Whereas the patrons on star routes are entitled to the same class of service as given to patrons on routes where tenure and pay are fixed: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives and the Senate of the Sixteenth Legislature of the State of Oklahoma:

SECTION 1. That the Seventy-fifth Congress of the United States of America be respectfully memorialized to enact such legislation as is necessary to retain in the star mail service satisfactory and experienced contractors and to give the Postmaster General the proper authority to grant additional compensation where rates are unreasonably low.

SEC. 2. That the clerk of the House of Representatives of the Sixteenth Legislature of Oklahoma is directed to send a copy of this resolution to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Seventy-fifth Congress, to the President of the Senate of the Seventy-fifth Congress, and to each Member of the Oklahoma delegation of said Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Joint memorial requesting Congress to impose a tariff on imported potash

Whereas the potash industry in this country, and particularly in the southwestern part of the United States, is now in its infancy; and

Whereas such industry must be fully protected to permit it to grow and prosper; and

Whereas continued production of potash in this country is an essential to the relief of our widespread unemployment situation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, That the Legislature of the State of New Mexico does hereby request the Congress of the United States to impose a tariff on all potash imported into this country; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be sent to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the Senators and Representative of New Mexico in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by Democrats and citizens of Jackson County, Ill., assembled at a victory day dinner, and members of the Italian-American Citizens Society, of Altoona, Pa., favoring the enactment of legislation to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Oberlin, Tex., praying for the enactment of the bill (S. 100) to amend the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies", approved July 2, 1890, the so-called Tydings-Miller fair-trade enabling bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Texas, praying that no law be enacted which would disturb or abridge religious rights or liberties, or close the mails to religious publications, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of 224 citizens of Castro County, Tex., praying for the enactment of legislation to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TYDINGS presented resolutions adopted by Arlington Council, No. 69, of Baltimore; South Mountain Council, No. 88, of Boonsboro; and Stockton Council, No. 187, of Stockton, all of the Junior Order United American Mechanics in the State of Maryland, favoring the enactment of legislation restricting immigration and providing for the registration of aliens and the deportation of undesirable aliens, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Maryland, praying for the enactment of the bill (S. 1709) for the better assurance of the protection of persons from mob violence and lynching, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Stockton Council, No. 187, Junior Order United American Mechanics, of Stockton, Md., protesting against the enactment of legislation to enlarge the membership of the Supreme Court, or any other legislation of a similiar character, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of the Harbor Sales Co., Inc., of Baltimore, and sundry citizens of the State of Maryland, praying for the passage of legislation to extend title I of the National Housing Act, relative to the repair and remodeling of homes, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Montgomery County League of Women Voters, of Chevy Chase, Md., favoring the enactment of an adequate food and drug law for the protection of consumers against false or incomplete labeling and the misleading advertising of food, drugs, and cosmetics, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LONERGAN presented a letter from the town clerk of Greenwich, Conn., embodying a resolution adopted by a town meeting relative to the proposed reorganization of the judiciary, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TOWN OF GREENWICH, CONN.,
March 8, 1937.

Hon. AUGUSTINE LONERGAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LONERGAN: At a representative town meeting, legally warned, held at the Havemeyer Auditorium, in Greenwich, on March 4, 1937, at 8 o'clock p. m., the following resolution was adopted:

"I. Resolved, That the representative town meeting, in meeting assembled, hereby registers its disapproval of and strong protest against the recommendation contained in the special message of the President of the United States of February 5, 1937, that, among other things, the President be empowered by act of Congress to appoint, under certain conditions, six additional members of the Supreme Court, the same being in its judgment ill-advised and tending to subject our highest Court to the will of the executive and legislative, to subject the rights and liberties of a people to the tyranny of a majority, and thus to convert our National Government of laws into a government of men.

"II. Resolved further, That the said representative town meeting earnestly requests the two United States Senators from Connecticut and the Representative of Fairfield County in the House of Representatives to oppose by their efforts and their votes all proposals to enact any legislation tending to overthrow the independence of the Supreme Court or to destroy its power and rank as a branch of the Federal Government coordinate with the legislative and executive.

"III. Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to said Senators and Representative."

Yours very truly,

HAROLD W. ALLEN, Town Clerk.

Mr. STEIWER presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

House Joint Memorial 14

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent:

Whereas weeds constitute one of the greatest agricultural problems in the United States and constitute the greatest source of agricultural loss, with the possible exception of soil erosion; and

Whereas a conference, representing five different upper Mississippi Valley States, estimated an annual crop loss of $1,000,000,000 because of weeds; and

Whereas the State of Idaho, after large expenditures previous to 1936, engaged in a $2,000,000 weed-control program for that State in 1936, three-fourths of which was financed with Federal money; and

Whereas the other Northwestern States, including Utah, Montana, Wyoming, Oregon, and Washington, are taking steps in the matter of weed control; and

Whereas 57 percent of the land in Oregon is in Federal ownership; and

Whereas the weed problem has been recognized by the three farm organizations of Oregon, namely, the Oregon State Grange, the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union, and the Farm Bureau Federation, as of major importance, and they have passed resolutions favoring National, State, county, and individual weed control; and

Whereas the Oregon State Planning Board has reported an annual loss of $1,500,000 from a limited number of perennial noxious weeds in Oregon alone and has recommended additional research work, additional control work, and Federal assistance; and

Whereas it is the consensus of opinion of these bodies that noxious weeds are gaining ground rapidly, that the control measures are inadequate, and that more research is needed, and that the weed problem is no longer an individual problem but a public problem: Be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the senate jointly concurring therein), That the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon hereby does petition the Congress of the United States:

1. To enact legislation declaring that the control of noxious weeds is of major agricultural importance and of such far-reaching consequence that the problem may no longer be considered solely an individual problem but that it has become a major national problem, and that in the public interest Federal assistance should be given the States, counties, and individuals cooperating in the control of noxious weeds just as such assistance has been provided for insect, plant, and animal disease control.

2. To provide funds and assistance through special appropriation, W. P. A., or similar channels, civilian conservation camps, soil conservation and agricultural conservation activities for actual work in weed control.

3. To provide for the control of noxious weeds on all federally owned and controlled lands in counties having regularly organized weed-control districts.

4. To require the United States Department of Agriculture to establish, after conference with the interested States, national policies covering (a) weed control, (b) interstate movement of seeds containing weed seeds designated as noxious, and (c) a comprehensive policy of research.

5. To finance a comprehensive Federal and State program of research in the Bureau of Plant Industry of the United States Department of Agriculture to determine upon the best materials and methods that may be used in the control of weeds.

6. To take steps toward the production of cheap weed-killing chemicals at some of the Federal power projects in or near weed-infested regions such as the Bonneville project in Oregon and the Grand Coulee project in Washington; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to forward one copy of this memorial to the President of the United States, to each Member of both Houses of Congress, to the Governors of each of the respective States, and to the Secretary of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Mr. STEIWER also presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

House Joint Memorial 1

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We the memorialists, the Thirty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, convened in regular session, respectfully represent that:

Whereas a large group of the citizens and voters of the State of Oregon have expressed their deep convictions of the merits of the Townsend recovery plan; and

Whereas these members of the Townsend clubs, as law-abiding American citizens, feel that their rights should be respected and that they should be given a hearing before your august body; and

Whereas the Townsend national recovery plan should be fully considered because the economic depression has continued for 7 years without solution: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the senate jointly concurring therein), That the Legislature of the State of Oregon hereby does petition the Congress of the United States to give a fair, full, and impartial hearing and consideration of the Townsend national recovery plan, with a view to its enactment into law after the Members of Congress shall have settled the details of this legislation.

Resolved, That a certified copy of this joint memorial be sent forthwith to the President of the United States and the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the Members of the congressional delegation from the State of Oregon.

ADMINISTRATION OF RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS BY CORPS OF ARMY ENGINEERS

Mr. LA FOLLETTE presented a resolution adopted by the Board of Harbor Commissioners of Milwaukee, Wis., which was referred to the Select Committee on Government Organization and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution adopted by the Board of Harbor Commissioners of the City of Milwaukee at its meeting of February 12, 1937

Whereas in the reorganization of the executive departments of the Government it is proposed that a Department of Public Works be created; and

Whereas the establishment of a Department of Public Works not only suggests the river and harbor work now being executed by the Corps of Engineers in the War Department be transferred to the new department, but also clearly indicates this purpose by ascribing only military functions to the War Department; and

Whereas under the present system the United States Corps of Engineers have ably and efficiently administered river and harbor improvements for more than 100 years on a nonpartisan, unbiased basis, entirely free from political influence and prejudice: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Board of Harbor Commissioners of the City of Milwaukee is opposed to any legislation or order which will relieve the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, of its present administration of river and harbor improvements; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States, to the Secretary of War, to the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Wisconsin.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the 4th instant that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 84. An act to provide for the issuance of a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia to Dr. Ralph Charles Stuart; and

S. 989. An act to provide for the issuance of a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia to Dr. Clarence Quinton Pair.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BORAH:

A bill (S. 1799) granting a pension to Marie L. Wood (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 1800) providing for the cancelation of certain charges against the Klamath Drainage District, of Klamath County, Oreg., and charging such unpaid balance to the unentered public lands within the district; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

By Mr. LODGE:

By Mr. GEORGE:

A bill (S. 1813) to increase the existing rates of death compensation payable to widows, children, and dependent parents of World War veterans who died while receiving monetary benefits for disabilities incurred in or aggravated by active military or naval service in the World War, and to increase the rates now being paid widows and children of the combat dead; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 96) authorizing allotments of pay by civilian personnel stationed abroad; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. BROWN of Michigan:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 97) to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to accept title for the United States to certain real property to be donated by Mr. Henry Ford and wife for Veterans' Administration Facility purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The following bills and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

H. R. 157. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation of disabled residents of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes" (Public, No. 801, 70th Cong.);

H. R. 2898. An act to amend section 1 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to fix the salaries of officers and members of the Metropolitan Police force, the United States Park Police force, and the fire department of the District of Columbia", approved May 27, 1924, and for other purposes;

H. R. 4188. An act to amend section 907 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901, as amended, up to and including June 7, 1924;

H. R. 4217. An act to provide for the erection of a building to be used exclusively for the recorder of deeds;

H. R. 4536. An act to provide for the holding of an examination by the board of optometry of the District of Columbia for a license to practice optometry in the District of Columbia for Welton B. Hutton;

H. R. 4804. An act to amend section 11 of an act entitled "An act to establish standard weights and measures for the District of Columbia; to define the duties of the superintendent of weights, measures, and markets of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", approved March 3, 1921; and

H. J. Res. 171. Joint resolution for the designation of certain streets or avenues in the Mall as Ohio, Missouri, Oklahoma, and Maine Avenues.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion by Mr. SHEPPARD, the Committee on Education and Labor was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1308) to aid business and economic research in connection with collegiate schools of business in the several State and Territorial universities, and it was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT—AMENDMENTS

Mr. TYDINGS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1362) to amend the Social Security Act with respect to its application to employees of fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, and associations, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

FEDERAL, STATE, AND LOCAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR EDUCATION—ADDRESS BY SENATOR LEE

[Mr. HARRISON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the subject Federal, State, and Local Responsibility for Education, delivered by Senator LEE on the evening of Mar. 8, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE LAWYER AND THE COMMUNITY—ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT WOODROW WILSON

[Mr. MCADOO asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address entitled "The Lawyer and the Community", delivered by President Woodrow Wilson before the American Bar Association, Chattanooga, Tenn., Aug. 31, 1910, which appears in the Appendix.]

VICTORY DINNER—ADDRESS BY JOSEPH B. KEENAN

[Mr. PITTMAN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address entitled "Time, America, and Roosevelt March On", delivered by Joseph B. Keenan, assistant to the Attorney General, upon the occasion of the victory dinner at New Orleans, La., on Mar. 4, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

POSTMASTER GENERAL JAMES A. FARLEY

[Mr. HARRISON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial published on Feb. 18, 1937, in the Daily Clarion Ledger of Jackson, Miss., relative to Postmaster General James A. Farley, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE COURT, THE PEOPLE, AND THE PRESIDENT—ATLANTA JOURNAL EDITORIAL

[Mr. ROBINSON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Atlanta (Ga.) Journal on Mar. 7, 1937, entitled "The Court, the People, and the President", which appears in the Appendix.]

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN FOOD, DRUGS, AND COSMETICS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5) to prevent the adulteration, misbranding, and false advertisement of food, drugs, devices, and cosmetics in interstate, foreign, and other commerce subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, for the purposes of safeguarding the public health, preventing deceit upon the purchasing public, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate, by an order adopted yesterday, made the confidential committee print of the bill the copy to be used at the desk. So the Chair assumes the print referred to is on the desk of each Senator. If not, the Chair suggests that Senators obtain copies, because amendments offered to the original Senate bill probably would not apply to the bill pending.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. COPELAND obtained the floor.

APPLICATION OF MONEYS PAID FOR FOREIGN LOANS TO DEBTS OF DEBTOR NATIONS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I accept the generosity of the Senator from New York to address the Senate, with its permission, for a few moments on the subject of debts due the United States by foreign governments. I do not rise to speak on the so-called food and drug bill as pending now before the Senate.

Mr. President, I assume to remind the Senate that a month past I was bold enough to say to this honorable body that there was a plan afoot on the part of certain debtors of the United States—meaning the debtors who are nations—among other things, to float an indebtedness in this country in the form of loans. Later the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] joined me on this floor from time to time in making clear corroborative information revealed in their different addresses delivered here on this subject.

I now wish to invite the attention of the Senate to the vindication of what I had said was afoot as well as the complete confirmation of my statement, by reports now appearing in the public press, verified by the conference at which the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, very fully and accommodatingly disclosed facts to our distinguished leader on this side [Mr. ROBINSON] and Senators on the other side of the Chamber, sitting in conference. Members of the Senate have all seen this matter develop as it has been submitted to the Treasury and been contained in certain correspondence joined to forms of request for information and direction.

Mr. President, in connection with this subject I beg to say it is my intention at the proper time to carry out that which I shall now suggest to the Senate as being in my mind. Sirs, let us be fair to say that it is not France only that is now seeking to float her securities in different forms, most of covert adaptation. There are foreign nation debtors whose names are not mentioned, but whose agencies were prepared to carry on in the same form as intimated by France but who, not receiving encouragement from this Government, did not so boldly propose the system of which we have now read.

I now desire to say if any of these nations or their citizens have bought the bonds of the United States of America in the form of securities we have been selling to ourselves and to the world, these, of course, as a matter of national honor will be paid, and their interest properly paid to whomsoever shall hold the coupon; but I here say that if the nations who are in debt to us and who continuously repudiate the debt and decline any negotiations, either separately or combined, shall attempt to establish in this community an agency assuming to collect the money of Americans upon loans floated by those countries, I shall take such steps as are in my humble power to invite this honorable body to pass such measure as will require the Government to appropriate such money, the money paid by Americans for foreign loans floated by those lands in violation of the law and directly in opposition to the statute designated as the Johnson Act, and I will demand that such sums, paid by any American to any committee or any bank in behalf of loans forbidden by law, shall be applied as a credit to the debt owed by those governments.

These nations, our debtors, are in the position of violating the law in soliciting more loans. To the object and purpose I confess, I now notify the Senate that, to the extent of my capacity, I shall proceed on the same theory that has been applied against us in other lands, but particularly, sir, under the statutes of the United States, to ask that those moneys, which come in any form whatever, collected by the debtors under the form of a national loan, shall be promptly seized by legal process by the United States of America and the money itself applied to the debts those debtors owe to the United States.

It may be said that this seems rather severe, but I beg to invite my colleagues who have given their attention from time to time to literary subjects to note that the only observation that appears in the mouth of Hamlet touching affairs of government is the judgment expressed that—

> Diseases desperate grown
> By desperate appliance are relieved,
> Or not at all.

While it may be regretful that steps be taken such as I intend will be my effort to undertake, the regret is not parallel to the attempts on the part of any power our debtor to evade the laws of the United States and by some confederation or conspiracy do violence and injustice to citizens of the United States.

I have submitted the policy I have in mind. When circumstances justify I shall take steps before this body that will carry out by law my object.

Mr. President, I thank the Senate for giving me such considerate attention, and I thank the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] for so graciously yielding to me.

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN FOOD, DRUGS, AND COSMETICS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5) to prevent the adulteration, misbranding, and false advertisement of food, drugs, devices, and cosmetics in interstate, foreign, and other commerce subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, for the purposes of safeguarding the public health, preventing deceit upon the purchasing public, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment, which will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 2, paragraph (f), under the title "Definition of terms", on page 3, in line 20, after the word "provided", to strike out "the" and insert "any"; in the same line, after the word "or", to strike out "failure of" and insert "failure, or the ordering thereof, by"; in line 21, after the word "officer", to strike out "employee or"; in line 22, after the word "agent", to strike out "acting" and insert "or employee"; in line 22, after the word "person", to insert "acting"; in line 23, after the word "his", to strike out "employment agency or" and insert "directorship"; in line 24, after the word "office", to insert "agency, or employment"; on page 4, line 1, after the word "officer", to insert "agent, or"; in the same line, after the word "employee", to strike out ", or agent who personally ordered or did any of the acts constituting, in whole or in part, such violation", so as to make the paragraph read:

(f) The term "person" includes individual, partnership, corporation, and association. Unless otherwise hereinafter provided, any act, omission, or failure, or the ordering thereof, by any director, officer, agent, or employee for or employed by any person, acting within the scope of his directorship, office, agency, or employment, shall in every case be deemed to be the act, omission, or failure of such person, as well as that of the director, officer, agent, or employee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, paragraph (h), on page 4, line 8, after the word "drug", to strike out "for the purposes of this act"; in line 10, after the word "in", to strike out "the official United States Pharmacopœia, official Homoepathic Pharmacopœia of the United States, or official National Formulary, or any supplement to any of them", and insert "any official compendium", so as to make the paragraph read:

(h) The term "drug" includes (1) all substances and preparations recognized in any official compendium; and (2) all substances and preparations intended for use in the diagnosis, cure, mitigation, treatment, or prevention of disease in man or other animals; and (3) all substances and preparations, other than food, intended to affect the structure or any function of the body.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, paragraph (i), on page 4, line 18, after the word "device", to strike out "for the purposes of this act", so as to make the paragraph read:

(i) The term "device" includes all devices intended (1) for use in the diagnosis, cure, mitigation, treatment, or prevention of disease in man or other animals; and (2) to affect the structure or any function of the body.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, paragraph (j), on page 5, line 1, after the word "soaps", to strike out the words "represented for cleansing purposes only" and insert the words "intended for no cosmetic uses other than those resulting from cleansing", so as to make the paragraph read:

(j) The term "cosmetic" includes all substances and preparations intended for cleansing, or altering the appearance of, or promoting the attractiveness of, the person, except that such term shall not include soaps intended for no cosmetic uses other than those resulting from cleansing.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I rise to ask the able Senator in charge of the bill what, if any, reference the bill has to alcohol. It will be remembered that when Congress closed its session last June there had been a contest over an item which I thought interdicted or discriminated against alcohol distilled from sugar beets. I have not read the bill now before the Senate, but I shall be content with the answer made by the able Senator from New York and the assurance he may give as to whether or not the bill does interdict or discriminate against the alcohol made from sugar beets.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator will recall that the matter in question was inserted in the House. The last day of the last session, when the bill came to the Senate, that language was defeated by the Senate on the motion of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. That matter does not appear in the bill now before us.

Mr. ASHURST. The word of the able Senator from New York is all I need or should need. I thank him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 2, paragraph (o), on page 6, line 2, after the word "representations", to strike out "of fact or opinion", so as to make the paragraph read:

(o) The term "advertisement" means all representations disseminated in any manner or by any means, other than by the labeling, for the purpose of inducing, directly or indirectly, the purchase of food, drugs, devices, or cosmetics.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in chapter III, "Prohibited acts and penalties", on page 6, after line 7, to insert a subhead "Prohibited acts."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Changes from numerals to letters in the designation of the subparagraphs will be made by the clerks, if there be no objection. The Chair hears no objection, and that will be done. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 3, paragraph (d) (1), on page 6, line 21, after the word "commerce", to strike out "by radio broadcast or otherwise, or by any other means", and insert in lieu thereof "in any manner or by any means, including radio broadcast"; on page 7, in line 2, after the word "subdivision", strike out the numeral "5" and insert "(e)"; in line 3, after the word "medical", to insert "dental, and pharmaceutical"; in line 3, after the word "pharmaceutical", to strike out "profession" and insert "professions"; and in line 5, to strike out "that profession" and insert "those professions", so as to make the paragraph read:

(d) (1) The dissemination, by United States mails, or in interstate commerce in any manner or by any means, including radio broadcast, of any advertisement which represents any drug, or device to have any therapeutic effect in the treatment of Bright's disease, cancer, tuberculosis, poliomyelitis (infantile paralysis), venereal diseases, or heart or vascular diseases, unless such advertisement, not in violation of subdivision (e) of this section, is disseminated only to members of the medical, dental, and pharmaceutical professions and/or appears only in the scientific periodicals of those professions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, in section 3, paragraph (d) (2), after line 5, to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

(2) The dissemination, in any manner or by any means, for the purpose of directly or indirectly inducing interstate commerce in any drug or device, of any advertisement which represents such drug or device to have any therapeutic effect in the treatment of Bright's disease, cancer, tuberculosis, poliomyelitis (infantile paralysis), venereal diseases, or heart or vascular diseases, unless such advertisement, not in violation of subdivision (e) of this section, is disseminated only to members of the medical, dental, and pharmaceutical professions or appears only in the scientific periodicals of those professions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, paragraph (e) (1), on page 7, line 18, after the word "commerce", to strike out "by radio broadcast, or otherwise" and insert "in any manner, or by any means, including radio broadcast"; in line 20, after the word "any", to strike out "statement, design, or device" and insert "representation"; in line 23, after the word "therein", to insert "or the identity, strength, quality, purity, quantity, origin, source, harmlessness, or safety thereof"; in line 25, after the word "preventive", to insert "diagnostic"; and on page 8, line 1, after the word "the", to insert "safety or efficacy of the", so as to make the paragraph read:

(e) (1) The dissemination, by United States mails, or in interstate commerce in any manner, or by any means, including radio broadcast, of any advertisement which contains any representation regarding any food, drug, device, or cosmetic, or the ingredients thereof, or the substances therein, or the identity, strength, quality, purity, quantity, origin, source, harmlessness, or safety thereof, or the nutritional, dietary, curative, therapeutic, preventive, diagnostic, or beneficial effects thereof, or the safety or efficacy of the dosage, frequency, or duration of use pertaining thereto, which is false or misleading in any particular.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from New York explain what is the purpose of the amendment, and its effect.

Mr. COPELAND. The purpose of this amendment is to control the advertising by any means, including radio broadcasting, of statements which are misrepresentations of fact as regards the curative or other alleged merits of a product. This is almost the same language as that of last year's bill and is in effect exactly what we did at that time.

Mr. ROBINSON. I note that apparently the language permits the dissemination of the information to members of the medical, dental, and pharmaceutical professions, but denies it to the general public. What is the reason for that distinction?

Mr. COPELAND. There are a great many experiments being made in medicine as to which there is a hope on the part of scientific investigators that some measure may be useful in the treatment of a disease now regarded, perhaps, as incurable. While we are quite unwilling to have hopes raised in the hearts of the general public, we should not wish to prevent the scientific development of the profession, or the attainment of any knowledge which might be had from printing the results of such experiments and expressing hopes in scientific journals.

I call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas—we discussed this matter privately one day—to the fact that on line 3, between "any" and "particular", at the end of the line, there had been inserted the word "material." Wherever that word had been inserted in the bill it has now been omitted.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well, Mr. President. I myself did not regard the insertion of the word "material" as of very great importance. I do not think it changed the legal construction of the provision; but some authorities in the Department did think so. The word may be very well stricken out in view of the interpretation which has been given the language.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, in section 3, paragraph (e) (2), on page 8, line 4, after the word "dissemination", to insert "in any manner or"; in line 5, after the words "purpose of", to strike out "inducing"; in the same line, after the word "indirectly", to strike out "the purchase of" and insert "inducing interstate commerce in"; in line 7, after the word "cosmetic", to strike out "in interstate commerce"; in line 8, after the word "contains", to strike out "any statement, design, or device" and insert "any representation"; in line 10, after the word "therein", to insert "or the identity, strength, quality, purity, quantity, origin, source, harmlessness, or safety thereof"; in line 13, after the word "preventive", to insert "diagnostic"; and in line 14, after the word "the", to insert "safety or efficacy of the", so as to read:

(2) The dissemination in any manner or by any means, for the purpose of directly or indirectly inducing interstate commerce in any food, drug, device, or cosmetic, of an advertisement which contains any representation regarding such food, drug, device, or cosmetic, or the ingredients thereof, or the substances therein, or the identity, strength, quality, purity, quantity, origin, source, harmlessness, or safety thereof, or the nutritional, dietary, curative, therapeutic, preventive, diagnostic, or beneficial effects thereof, or the safety or efficacy of the dosage, frequency, or duration of use pertaining thereto, which is false or misleading in any particular.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I make the same comment here regarding the omission of the word "material" in line 16.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, in the same section and paragraph, on page 8, line 16, after the word "particular", to insert:

Any representation concerning the effect of a drug or device shall be deemed to be false and misleading under subdivision (1) and (2) of this paragraph if such representation is not supported by persons who, by reason of scientific training and experience, are qualified as experts on the subject to which such representation relates.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, that seems to be an important amendment, and I should like to understand it a little better before it is disposed of. It occurs to me that there might be cases in which this language would raise difficulties that could be avoided. This amendment requires that representations concerning the effect of a drug or device shall be deemed false, and so forth, unless supported by persons who have scientific knowledge. Just what is the intent of the committee in incorporating the amendment?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, let me say, first, that the language here is exactly the same, in effect, as the language in our bill last year. A great many persons who are entirely sincere, but perhaps not very well informed as regards the human body and what should be put into it, have recommended certain products as cures for tuberculosis or Bright's disease or some other disease which is usually considered to be incurable. These persons have been upset because they have not been permitted by the Department to market their wares. So this matter was the subject of much discussion in the hearings during the past 2 or 3 years and on the floor of the Senate last year.

There can be no question that any therapeutic device or measure which has a scientific foundation or a reasonable chance of being helpful in the cure of disease ought to be encouraged. But surely it ought not to be left to a layman, or to some person not fully informed regarding these matters, to say, "This product will cure consumption", because a man who took it 5 years ago is alive today. So after considering all the possibilities of the matter, to make sure that no really worth-while remedy should be prohibited from sale, it was thought by all those who have studied the matter, both in the House and in the Senate, and as a result of the representations made to us by witnesses, that if the claim could be supported by proper scientific testimony there could be no objection to the sale of the product.

There has been a question as to what is meant by the language—

By persons who, by reason of scientific training and experience, are qualified as experts on the subject to which such representation relates.

It might be a matter which relates to some germ, making it a bacteriological problem. Then witnesses in that field of science could be called. It might be with reference to some device—and I speak of that now deliberately because the osteopaths feared that perhaps they would be interfered with in this respect. I should say that under this language they would be competent witnesses to testify as to the scientific value of the device.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. The thought occurs to me, upon considering for the first time the language of the amendment, that if a representation should be made as to the effect of any drug or device, and the party making the representation should fail to support it with a statement from some person who, by reason of scientific training, was qualified as an expert, the one making the representation would be in danger of prosecution even though his representation were entirely true. It is conceivable that might happen.

Suppose, for instance, that someone sought to promote the sale of a commodity for a certain purpose, and that actually the commodity was helpful and the representation made concerning it was true, but that no support accompanied the representation from a scientific source or from an expert: Would that subject the party making the representation to danger of prosecution?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, before the Senator from New York answers, I desire to say, with his permisison, that the same question had arisen in my mind, but upon reading the whole amendment it will be seen that it does not raise a conclusive presumption. It seems more like a prima-facie case. The language is—

Shall be deemed to be false and misleading.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will permit me, I, too, had that thought.

Mr. GEORGE. It is difficult to see how that could be conclusively deemed. If it were, then, of course, the objection raised by the Senator from Arkansas would be good.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the authorities in the Department charged with the enforcement of the act should proceed with a prosecution when the representation actually made was really true, the question probably would be raised as to whether this conclusion or presumption was intended to be prima facie or conclusive. Of course, if it were conclusive, the courts probably would hold that it would not be binding, because Congress could not raise a conclusive presumption in that manner; but the thought I have in mind is that it would be well enough for us to understand just what is the intent of the committee.

Mr. COPELAND. It is provided in another part of the bill—I do not place my finger on it at the moment—that in case such a person as the Senator mentions is aggrieved, he has a right to apply for an injunction to restrain the Department from the application of this particular feature of the bill; and in the trial and determination of that question in the courts the facts would be substantiated. So I think there is ample means of relief.

I desire to impress upon Senators that there is no question that one of the reasons why we have in existence now a law like this, and one of the reasons why we want to make it more comprehensive, is that there are products upon the market under false and misleading representations. For example, some man developed a mange remedy, and it did not go very well as a mange remedy, so he decided to sell it as a cure for tuberculosis. [Laughter.] I am not giving a hypothetical case; this really has happened.

Mr. ROBINSON. On the theory that what is not good for the dog might be good for the man? [Laughter.]

Mr. COPELAND. That is it exactly. It might be that that mange remedy would be good in the treatment of tuberculosis; but the Senator would not desire to take it until someone of scientific attainment had examined into the fact to see whether or not it really was a remedy. It is to deal with such cases that this language is employed.

Mr. ROBINSON. The committee gave prolonged study to the matter and thought it out carefully?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes. I may say that this matter was first raised in the consideration of the so-called Tugwell bill, and the then Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. Hebert, was a very active member of the subcommittee. We spent practically a whole day with the witnesses in discussing this matter, and finally reached the conclusion that the provision before us was the best solution; and such a provision has been carried through the various bills since. So far as I know, there has been and is no opposition.

Mr. ROBINSON. What I was wondering was whether it would raise practical difficulty in the enforcement of the law. I am as anxious as the Senator from New York or anyone else can be to have on the statute books an effective pure food and drugs act, one which will protect the public against the shams and frauds which are so often perpetrated, particularly in connection with certain well-known diseases. If the committee gave the thought and attention to the question that is indicated by the Senator's statement, I am satisfied.

Mr. COPELAND. And the Department itself believes that this is a necessary strengthening of the present law.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I was very much interested in the statement of the Senator to the effect that the language on lines 20 and 21, page 8, would not deprive certain individuals who view themselves as experts by reason of scientific training and experience of the opportunity of supporting the representations. I do not see in the proposed language any wording that would protect them. In other words, suppose we have a department which thinks that in order to be an expert and qualify as an expert a person must be a member of the medical profession. I say that with all due respect to the medical profession. What is there in this language which would permit an osteopath to testify and to support a representation?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator, in one of the prints of the bill we attempted to enumerate all those who might be considered experts—medical men, chemical experts, bacteriologists, and so forth. Let me say to the Senator, so that the RECORD will show it, and he can have the information for the benefit of his constituents—and there are some in my State who are interested in this matter—in any State where osteopathy is recognized, as it is in my State, and as it is in the District of Columbia, a man belonging to that profession, taking osteopathy merely as an example, a man who has had the benefit of a professional education and has received his degree, as the osteopath has, would be included among those "of scientific training", when the matter is in his field.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It is the opinion of the Senator that the question as to whether or not a man would be recognized as an expert would depend upon the law of the State in which he was practicing?

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 8, line 16.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment of the committee was, in section 4, on page 9, line 18, before the word "district", to strike out "several"; on line 19, after the word "hereby", to strike out "given" and to insert in lieu thereof "vested with"; on line 20, after the word "injunction" and the comma, to insert "upon due notice"; on line 21, after the words "permanent, any", to strike out "violation of" and to insert "person from violating"; on line 22, after the word "subdivisions", to strike out "1 to 10" and to insert in lieu thereof "(a) to (j)"; on line 23, to strike out "In such injunction proceedings discontinuance" and to insert in lieu thereof "Discontinuance"; on page 10, line 1, after the word "injunction", to insert a comma and the words "if the court shall find that repetition of the offense is likely to occur"; on page 10, after line 2, to strike out subdivision (b), as follows:

(b) Any injunction granted pursuant to this section may be served on the person, or persons, against whom such injunction is granted anywhere in the United States, or in the Territories thereof, where he, or they, may be found, and shall be operative, and may be enforced by proceedings to punish for contempt, or otherwise, by the court by which such injunction was granted, or by any other district court, or judge thereof, in the United States, or in the Territories thereof. The said courts, or judges thereof, shall have jurisdiction to enforce said injunction, as herein provided, as fully as if the injunction had been granted by the district court in which it is sought to be enforced. The clerk of the court or judge granting the injunction shall, when required to do so by the court before which application to enforce said injunction is made, transfer without delay to said court a certified copy of all the papers on which the said injunction was granted that are on file in his office. Such proceedings to punish for contempt, or otherwise, may be instituted by order of the court or by the filing of an information by the United States attorney; and process of the court for the arrest of the violator of any injunction, or order, granted hereunder, may be served at any place in the United States, or in the Territories thereof.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

(b) Any injunction issued pursuant to this section shall be operative throughout the United States and the Territories and may be served on the person enjoined at any place in the United States or any Territory where such person may be found. Any person who violates such injunction may be punished for contempt in the court of his residence or where such person may be found. The clerk of the court which issued the injunction shall, when so required by any other court before which application to enforce the injunction is made, transfer without delay to such other court a certified copy of the decree of injunction. Contempt proceedings may be instituted by order of the court or by the filing of an information by the United States attorney; and such order or information, and the process of the court for the arrest of the violator, may be served at any place in the United States or the Territories.

So as to make the section read:

INJUNCTION

SEC. 4. (a) The several district courts of the United States are hereby vested with jurisdiction to prevent or restrain by injunction, upon due notice, temporary or permanent, any person from violating any of the provisions of subdivisions (a) to (j), inclusive, of section 3. Discontinuance of the violation shall not be grounds for denial of injunction, if the court shall find that repetition of the offense is likely to occur.

(b) Any injunction issued pursuant to this section shall be operative throughout the United States and the Territories and may be served on the person enjoined at any place in the United States or any Territory where such person may be found. Any person who violates such injunction may be punished for contempt in the court of his residence or where such person may be found. The clerk of the court which issued the injunction shall, when so required by any other court before which application to enforce the injunction is made, transfer without delay to such other court a certified copy of the decree of injunction. Contempt proceedings may be instituted by order of the court or by the filing of an information by the United States attorney; and such order or information, and the process of the court for the arrest of the violator, may be served at any place in the United States or the Territories.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, in section 5, paragraph (a), on page 11, line 24, after the word "subdivisions", to strike out "(1), (2), (3), (4), (6), (7), or (8)" and to insert in lieu thereof "(a), (b), (c), (d), (f), (g), or (h)", so as to make the subdivision read:

CRIMINAL

SEC. 5. (a) Any person who violates any of the provisions of subdivisions (a), (b), (c), (d), (f), (g), or (h) of section 3 shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall on conviction thereof be subject to imprisonment for not more than 1 year or a fine of not more than $1,000, or both such imprisonment and fine; and for a second or subsequent offense imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or a fine of not more than $5,000, or both such imprisonment and fine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from New York to subsection (c), on page 11, which reads:

No person shall be deemed to have violated an injunction, issued pursuant to this section, by reason of the dissemination, subsequent to such injunction, of an advertisement which was the basis of the injunction, if such dissemination was beyond the control of such person.

What does that mean in practice?

Mr. COPELAND. Let us take a great magazine such as the Saturday Evening Post, for example: The advertising is prepared for a number of weeks in advance. Such a publication could not be proceeded against by reason of the fact that an injunction had been served at a time previous to the last publication of the magazine in which the advertisement appeared. Do I make clear what I mean?

Mr. ROBINSON. No; because I cannot for the life of me see why the Saturday Evening Post or any other publication should be encouraged to continue the publication of an advertisement which had been enjoined. Why should not the magazine be bound, as well as the party who places the advertisement?

Mr. COPELAND. Let me say, if I may, that the product being advertised would have been prohibited from the market; therefore, so far as the public is concerned, the public would be protected, because it could not get the medicine. But many of the great magazines and other publications prepare their advertising copy weeks in advance. I just happened to think of the Saturday Evening Post; I do not know that they have expressed any interest in the matter. They send out their material weeks in advance, so that there is a release all over this country on a given day. An injunction may have issued several days or perhaps a week or so before the magazine is actually given to the public in some remote section of the country.

We had long discussion of this matter in the committee. It will be noted that no amendment was offered to the provision, because the matter had been given the most thorough consideration by all the subcommittees and in all of the previous hearings. The language now before the Senate has been carried through several prints, including that of last year.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Taken in connection with the amendment just above, in subdivision (b), which provides that "Any injunction issued pursuant to this section shall be operative throughout the United States and the Territories", the provision to which the Senator from Arkansas has called attention probably creates a conflict. Subdivision (c) provides that—

No person shall be deemed to have violated an injunction, issued pursuant to this section, by reason of the dissemination, subsequent to such injunction, of an advertisement which was the basis of the injunction, if such dissemination was beyond the control of such person.

It is not difficult for a magazine such as the Saturday Evening Post, or Colliers, or any other magazine to "kill" an advertisement within almost 30 minutes prior to the printing of the magazine. The dissemination of false advertisements which may have been the basis of an injunction in some remote part of the country is not really the question here. The question is whether the magazine or the periodical or newspaper after the issuance of the injunction should be allowed to go ahead and publish the matter simply because the man who has paid for the advertisement may say he has no further control over it. He ought to be made to have control over it, and the magazine itself ought to be made responsible. There is no time limit provided here. Months after the injunction the magazine might print the advertisement on the theory that the real perpetrator has no control over the article.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. My attention was distracted when action was taken on section 4. I wish to call attention to the fact that we are here giving almost blanket authority for injunction, and all over the United States. Section 4 provides:

The several district courts of the United States are hereby vested with jurisdiction to prevent or restrain by injunction, upon due notice, temporary or permanent, any person from violating any of the provisions of subdivisions (a) to (j), inclusive, of section 3.

That covers all the transactions that are found on pages 6, 7, 8, and 9, down to the injunctional clause. Then the language in section 4 continues:

Discontinuance of the violation shall not be grounds for denial of injunction, if the court shall find that repetition of the offense is likely to occur.

Now, read that in connection with paragraph (b) on page 11:

(b) Any injunction issued pursuant to this section shall be operative throughout the United States and the Territories and may be served on the person enjoined at any place in the United States or any Territory where such person may be found. Any person who violates such injunction may be punished for contempt in the court of his residence or where such person may be found. The clerk of the court which issued the injunction shall, when so required by any other court before which application to enforce the injunction is made, transfer without delay to such other court a certified copy of the decree of injunction. Contempt proceedings may be instituted by order of the court or by the filing of an information by the United States attorney; and such order or information, and the process of the court for the arrest of the violator, may be served at any place in the United States or the Territories.

Mr. President, through the injunctive process the court would now control the execution of this measure throughout the United States in all particulars. It is a broad authority. The court is given power to say whether any of these violations have taken place, and the court is given power to issue injunctions, and then power is given to extend the court injunction throughout the United States, and the entire matter is under the injunctive process of the court. I presume that is the purpose of the committee, but it seems to me highly objectionable.

Has this matter been passed upon by the Department of Justice?

Mr. COPELAND. I am not sure about the Department of Justice, but it was very thoroughly studied by the lawyers on our committee, including the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. I remember an expression made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY]. She said:

I am just as much entitled to protection against lethal drugs in Arkansas as you are in New York.

I recall very well that comment being made at the time of the hearing on the bill. This language was prepared by the Department of Agriculture, and I assume it was after consultation with the Department of Justice. I cannot speak by the card in that matter.

Mr. BORAH. All these matters in connection with which the injunctive process operates are subject to criminal prosecution in case of violation under the law.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Then we are giving the court injunctive power to prevent crime throughout the United States under this proposed law.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does not the Senator from Idaho think that very broad restraining power is necessary and will be necessary in many cases? Take, for instance, the case where poison or some other dangerous drug is being distributed throughout the United States as a wholesome medicine; take the case of any poison—and there are many that have been sold in commerce. The criminal prosecution in a remote district court would probably occasion a fine; but before the case would be tried there might be hundreds, even thousands, of persons poisoned or otherwise injured.

I am told by the Senator from New York that a product known as "ginger jake" is a good example of the case that I am attempting to state. The promoters of that business or of any such business as I have described—those who sell narcotics, opium, or other deleterious drugs—are not scrupulous. They are in the business to make money. They pay a small fine or some agent goes to jail for a few days in a remote district, and all through the United States elsewhere they carry on their business. If the injunction applies only to one limited area, the effectiveness of the measure is destroyed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I appreciate the strength of the Senator's argument, but here we have a great number of things provided for from paragraph (a) to paragraph (j) which are not connected with selling opium, and so forth, and those things are all punishable by fine and imprisonment. To spread the injunctive power over the entire field covered by these different subdivisions and then to make it coextensive with the United States seems to me a greater power than we ought to give to the injunctive side of the court. We criticize the court for abusing the injunction process and still are imposing the duty on the court in a most startling way.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, of course it is absurd for me, a layman, to attempt to discuss the legal language or the legal aspects of this problem, but I wish to take a page out of my own experience. It may be recalled that for a long time I was president of the board of health of the city of New York. There was shipped into our city some olives, olives which were the very large, expensive type, put up in expensive glass jars. It developed that those particular olives were contaminated with the germ of botulism, and within a day or two in my city 23 persons were killed by eating those olives. I seized them, as I could under the power of the charter of our city and the law of the State. I seized them wherever I could find them. Now, suppose that brand had been distributed throughout the country. There ought to be some immediate way to stop its sale and distribution at once, no matter where, no matter how remote might be the place where that particular article was on sale.

I regard the bill before us as a health measure.

I do not think we can regard this proposed law in quite the same way that we do other things in connection with which the health and life problems do not enter in any way, but where the loss may be an economic one. We are dealing here with something to protect the men, women, and children of our country, and I want to see the law made just as rigid and as far-reaching as possible. I want it to go, as the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] said, to her State and to every other section of our country.

I am not competent to say whether this is good legal language or not. That is out of my field. But the legal lights on our committee and the legal experts of the Department studied this question; this is what they brought to us, and after a study and modification, and the change of a word here and there, bringing out in the discussion exactly the point raised by the Senator from Idaho. I remember that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] said that this is more far reaching than anything he had ever heard of in this connection. But after he had heard all the argument he thought it was wise that it should be included in the bill in the language here presented.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. How would an injunction be procured in the first place unless service were had upon some defendant? What good would there be in obtaining an injunction which could be served on a defendant wherever he could be found, if he could not be found in the first place, so as to get jurisdiction of his person?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not know. I am thinking of him after he is found. I have known of innocent men being wrongly charged with crime.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The language of the amendment on page 11, which was agreed to, provides:

> Any injunction issued pursuant to this section shall be operative throughout the United States.

Of course, I presume that means, shall be operative on the injunctee throughout the United States wherever he may be found, but it could not be said to be operative on everybody who was not a party to the action throughout the United States.

That is important in connection with the language to which the Senator from Arkansas has called attention. An injunction might be obtained against some defendant to prevent the issue of an advertisement or the misbranding of an article intended for interstate commerce or the placing of the article in interstate commerce, and the injunction might stop him anywhere in the United States, but shelves all over the country might be filled with the very article. How are the owners of those shelves to be prevented from going ahead and continuing the sale and distribution of the article if the injunction does not apply to the numerous persons to which the article may have been distributed, who are not parties to the action and who might be beyond the control of the person against whom the injunction is granted?

Mr. BORAH. I am thinking of the many things covered by the bill in section 3, from paragraph (a) to paragraph (j), on pages 7, 8, and 9, which do not partake of the nature of criminal actions in the sense that we have been discussing them here. There are some opportunities for mistake as to whether a person has acted in bad faith with reference to advertisements, and so forth. There are some things such as selling narcotics, and so forth, which, I suppose, we should cover in any way we can, but the injunction power, as granted here, covers all the provisions of the bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield for a question?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is it not the understanding of the Senator from New York that this remedy is an equitable one and can be brought against a specified defendant and all other persons similarly situated, so that the scope of the injunction may be such as to afford a basis for contempt proceedings anywhere in the United States and be good against any person falling within the proscribed class of defendants?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. John Doe or Richard Roe.

Mr. AUSTIN. Exactly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 6, paragraph (a), on page 14, line 8, after letter "a", to strike out "criminal injunction" and to insert "criminal, injunction,", so as to read:

> SEC. 6. (a) Any article of food, drug, device, or cosmetic that is adulterated or misbranded when introduced into or while in interstate commerce, or which may not, under the provisions of section 13, be introduced into interstate commerce, shall be liable to be proceeded against while in interstate commerce, or at any time thereafter, on libel of information and condemned in any district court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which the article is found: Provided, however, That no libel for condemnation shall be instituted under this act, for any alleged misbranding if there is pending in any court a libel for condemnation proceeding under this act based upon the same alleged misbranding, and not more than one such proceeding shall be instituted if no such proceeding is so pending, except that such limitations shall not apply (1) when such misbranding has been the basis of a prior judgment in favor of the United States, in a criminal, injunction, or libel for condemnation proceeding under this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, paragraph (a), page 14, line 12, after the word "it", to insert "actually", so as to read:

> or (2) when the Secretary has probable cause to believe from facts found by him that such misbranding of the article renders it actually dangerous to health or is, in a material respect, false.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that here is another one of the changes about which I spoke to the Senator from Arkansas. The words originally were "eminently dangerous" and they have been changed to read "actually dangerous."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 6, paragraph (a), on page 14, line 13, after the word "false", it is proposed to strike out:

> fraudulent; and in any case where the number of libel for condemnation proceedings is limited as above provided the proceeding pending or instituted shall, on application of the claimant, seasonably made, be removed for trial to any district of reasonable proximity to the district of the claimant's principal place of business which may be agreed upon by stipulation between the parties to the proceeding > and fraudulent, or is labeled or advertised as a cure or remedy for cancer, tuberculosis, Bright's disease, poliomyelitis, venereal diseases, or heart or vascular diseases.

In the portion to be inserted as stated, Mr. COPELAND proposes to strike out the words "a cure or remedy for" and insert "having any therapeutic effect in the treatment of."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, just a moment. I did not give the clerk quite the correct language. I propose to strike out, on line 20, the words "or is labeled or advertised", and, in line 21, to strike out the words "a cure or remedy" and insert, after the word "as", the words "having any therapeutic effect in the treatment of."

The reason for that is to make it read in exactly the same language as is used on page 6 and page 7, so that it will read:

False and fraudulent, as having any therapeutic effect in the treatment of cancer—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, in section 6, paragraph (b), page 15, beginning in line 3, to strike out:

In cases of articles of food, drugs, devices, or cosmetics seized under the provisions of this section when the same issues of adulteration or misbranding under the provisions of this act, raised by the same claimant, are pending in various jurisdictions, the United States district court for any district where one of such seizures is pending, or for any district of reasonable proximity to the district of the claimant's principal place of business, which may be agreed upon by stipulation between the parties to the proceeding, is hereby vested with jurisdiction to consolidate and try such cases; and on application of the claimant, seasonably made, such cases may be tried in any such jurisdiction.

And insert:

The United States district court for any district of reasonable proximity to the district of the claimant's principal place of business is hereby vested with jurisdiction to try such cases. Such district may be determined by stipulation between the United States attorney and the claimant, or, in the event the United States attorney refuses to stipulate or the parties cannot agree, the claimant may apply to the judge of the district court in which the seizure has been made and the judge of said court shall by order specify the district of reasonable proximity to the claimant's principal place of business to which the case shall be removed for trial. On the filing of the stipulation, or order, by either party thereto in the court within the jurisdiction wherein the seizures were made, the clerk of such court shall transfer immediately to the court stipulated, or ordered, a certified copy of the stipulation, or order, and all papers and records relating to such cases, including itemized statements of all accrued court costs and fees; and such cases shall thereupon be tried in the court stipulated, or ordered. The United States marshal for the district wherein the seizure were made shall hold the articles under seizure and shall execute the orders and decrees of the court stipulated, or ordered.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this amendment provides that—

The United States district court for any district of reasonable proximity to the district of the claimant's principal place of business is hereby vested with jurisdiction to try such cases.

I presume that would permit the court to send a case practically anywhere the court thought proper?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the purpose of this provision—and I wish the RECORD so to show—is to prevent, as we wish to prevent, the imposition of any undue burden upon the person involved in the procedure. We had in mind, in a sense, a "jury of the vicinage", as the lawyers call it.

Mr. BORAH. That is correct.

Mr. COPELAND. The idea is that, so far as possible, the procedure should be in the court nearest the chief place of business of the person involved in the procedure.

Mr. BORAH. That was the idea, and that was the correct idea; but the language is within "reasonable proximity to the district of the claimant's principal place of business."

Under the provision a person arrested in Idaho could be sent over into the State of Washington and there tried, or a person arrested in Washington could be sent into the State of Oregon for trial. There should be, it seems to me, a more definite provision as to the place of trial.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the Senator suggest an amendment?

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator from New York will allow the amendment to be passed over for a moment, I will be glad to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will take the liberty af asking the Senator from New York if the word "seizure", on page 16, at the end of line 8, should not be "seizures"?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; I think the word should be in the plural; and I ask that it be so amended, and then that the amended section go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment striking out "seizure" and inserting "seizures."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment, as perfected, will be passed over, and the next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, in section 6, paragraph (c), page 16, line 15, after the word "article", to strike out "seized" and insert "seized, and as regards fresh apples and fresh pears, a true copy of the analysis on which the proceeding is based", so as to make the section read:

The court at any time after seizure up to a reasonable time before trial shall by order allow any party to a condemnation proceeding, his attorney or agent, to obtain a representative sample of the article seized, and as regards fresh apples and fresh pears, a true copy of the analysis on which the proceeding is based.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, in connection with this amendment, permit me to say a word. Mr. Fraser, who is a great apple expert in my section of the country, and who represents the International Apple Association, wants to be sure that the "true copy" is properly identified and that there is some identifying mark. I wish to say that that will be the practice of the Department, I am sure. Of course, the "true copy" will be identified in some manner as actually the "true copy."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, page 18, line 1, after the word "hearing", to strike out "the Secretary decides to make such report, then the" and insert "it appears that any of the provisions of this act have been violated by such person, then the Secretary shall at once certify the facts to the proper United States attorney", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. Before reporting any violation of this act to any United States attorney for institution of criminal proceedings, the Secretary shall, in accordance with regulations prescribed by him, afford appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing to the person against whom the proceedings are contemplated. If after such hearing it appears that any of the provisions of this act have been violated by such person, then the Secretary shall at once certify the facts to the proper United States attorney. The report shall be accompanied by findings of the appropriate officers and employees, duly authenticated under their oaths.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, page 18, line 9, at the beginning of the section, to strike out "Nothing" and insert "Notwithstanding the provisions of section 7, nothing", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 7, nothing in this act shall be construed as requiring the Secretary to report for prosecution, or for the institution of libel or injunction proceedings, minor violations of this act whenever he believes that the purposes of the act can be accomplished by a suitable written notice or warning.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, line 18, after the word "of", to strike out "sections 6 and 7" and insert the words "this act"; in line 20, after the word "proceedings", to strike out "under this act"; in line 21, after the word "Territory", to strike out "or political subdivision thereof"; in line 23, after the word "and", to insert "in the case of criminal proceedings"; and on page 19, line 4, after the numerals "30", to strike out "and under subdivision (10) of section 3", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. It shall be the duty of each United States attorney to whom the Secretary, consistently with the provisions of this act, reports any violation for institution of criminal, libel of information for condemnation, or other proceedings, or to whom any health, food, or drug officer of any State or Territory, presents evidence satisfactory to the United States attorney of any such violation and, in the case of criminal proceedings, that appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing has been afforded to the person against whom the proceedings are contemplated, to cause appropriate proceedings to be instituted in the proper courts of the United States without delay. All suits instituted under this act, except those arising under section 30 shall be by and in the name of the United States. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 876 of the Revised Statutes, subpenas for witnesses who are required to attend a court of the United States, in any district, may run into any other district in any proceeding under this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, page 19, line 20, after the word "no", to insert "definition and"; and in line 21, after the word "vegetables", to insert "Provided further, That in the fixing and establishing of any standard of quality for any canned fruit or canned vegetable, consideration shall be given and due allowances made for the differing characteristics of the several varieties of such fruit and vegetable", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 10. For the effectuation of the purposes of this act the Secretary is hereby authorized to promulgate regulations fixing and establishing for any food a definition and standard of identity, and a reasonable standard of quality and fill of container: Provided, That no standard of quality shall be established for fresh fruits or fresh vegetables and no definition and standard of identity for fresh fruits (except fresh citrus fruits) or fresh vegetables: Provided further, That in the fixing and establishing of any standard of quality for any canned fruit or canned vegetable, consideration shall be given and due allowances made for the differing characteristics of the several varieties of such fruit and vegetable.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I observe that by section 10 chapter IV, on page 19, provision is made "that no standard of quality shall be established for fresh fruits." I wish to ask the Senator, Would that mean that no standard of quality would be applied to fresh citrus fruits?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I call the attention of the Senator to page 5 of the amended report?

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator have reference to the language that?—

(A standard of quality is authorized by the present law for canned fruit only.)

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; I refer to the second paragraph on page 5 of the amended report, from which I quote:

(A standard of quality is authorized by the present law for canned fruit only.) In providing a standard of identity for citrus fruit it is intended that such will be a standard of maturity only.

That is exactly what is intended by the language of the bill, that in fixing that standard it shall be with reference to the maturity of the fruit and nothing else.

Mr. PEPPER. If I understand correctly, then, with respect to fresh citrus fruit, in the first place, no standard of quality is imposed?

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct.

Mr. PEPPER. And no standard of identity may be imposed except standards relating to maturity only?

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator is entirely correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the amendment which has been adopted, in lines 21 to 25, was urged upon the committee by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], and the Senators from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE and Mr. RUSSELL]. It was given thorough study by the committee and the experts, and the language chosen is in full accord with the views held by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, under the subtitle "Adulterated food", in section 11, paragraph (a), on page 20, line 7, after the word "section", to strike out "15, or in excess of the limits of tolerance prescribed by regulations as provided by section", so as to make the paragraph read:

ADULTERATED FOOD

SEC. 11. A food shall be deemed to be adulterated—

(a) (1) If it bears or contains any poisonous or deleterious substance which may render it dangerous to health; or (2) if it bears or contains any added poisonous or added deleterious substance which may render it injurious to health, or which is unsafe within the meaning of section 15; or (3) if it consists in whole or in part of any filthy, putrid, or decomposed substance, or if it is otherwise unfit for food; or (4) if it has been prepared, packed, or held under insanitary conditions whereby it may have become contaminated with filth, or whereby it may have been rendered injurious to health; or (5) if it is, in whole or in part, the product of a diseased animal or of an animal which has died otherwise than by slaughter; or (6) if its container is composed, in whole or in part, of any poisonous or deleterious substance which may render the contents injurious to health.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, paragraph (b), on page 21, line 1, after the word "strength", to strike out "to" and insert "or", so as to make the paragraph read:

(b) (1) If any valuable constituent has been in whole or in part abstracted therefrom; or (2) if any substance has been substituted wholly or in part therefor; or (3) if damage or inferiority has been concealed in any manner; or (4) if any substance has been added thereto or mixed or packed therewith so as to increase its bulk or weight, or reduce its quality or strength, or make it appear better or of greater value than it is.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subtitle "Misbranded food", in section 12, paragraph (c), on page 21, line 20, after the word "food", to strike out "and" and insert "unless"; in line 21, after the word "label", to strike out "fails to bear" and insert "bears", so as to make the paragraph read:

(c) If it is an imitation of another food, unless its label bears, in type of uniform size and prominence, the word 'imitation' and, immediately thereafter, the name of the food imitated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, paragraph (d), on page 21, line 25, after the word "to", to strike out "mislead the purchaser" and insert "be misleading in any particular", so as to make the paragraph read:

(d) If its container is so made, formed, or filled as to be misleading in any particular.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, paragraph (g), on page 22, line 18, after the numerals "10", to strike out "and (1) it fails to conform" and insert "unless (1) it conforms"; in line 20, after the word "standard", to strike out "or (2) its label fails to bear" and insert "and (2) its label bears"; in line 22, after the word "standard", to strike out "or" and insert "and", so as to make the paragraph read:

(g) If it purports to be or is represented as a food for which a definition and standard of identity has been prescribed by regulations as provided by section 10, unless (1) it conforms to such definition and standard, and (2) its label bears the name of the food prescribed in the definition and standard, and, if so required by such regulations when such definition and standard permits optional ingredients other than spices, flavors, and coloring, the common names of such optional ingredients as are present in such food.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, paragraph (h), on page 23, line 4, after the word "below", to strike out "such standard of quality or fill of container and its label fails to bear" and insert "either such standard, unless its label bears"; and in line 7, after the word "standard", to strike out "of quality or fill of container", so as to make the paragraph read:

(h) If it purports to be or is represented as a food for which a standard of quality or fill of container has been prescribed by regulations as provided by section 10, and its quality or fill falls below either such standard, unless its label bears a statement, in such manner as the regulations specify, showing that it falls below such standard.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, paragraph (i), on page 23, line 10, after the word "section", to strike out "and its label fails to bear" and insert "unless its label bears"; in line 12, after the word "be", to strike out "or" and insert "and"; and in line 18, after the word "impracticable", to insert "or results in deception or unfair competition", so as to make the paragraph read:

(i) If it is not subject to the provisions of paragraph (g) of this section unless its label bears (1) the common or usual name of the food, if any there be, and (2) in case it is fabricated from two or more ingredients, the common or usual name of each such ingredient; except that spices, flavors, and colorings, other than those sold as such, may be designated as spices, flavors, and colorings without naming each: And provided, That to the extent that compliance with the requirements of subdivision (2) of this paragraph is impracticable, or results in deception or unfair competition, exemptions shall be established by regulations promulgated by the Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, paragraph (j), on page 23, line 22, after the word "uses", to strike out "such as"; in line 23, after the word "special", to strike out "nutritional requirements, and its label fails to bear" and insert the words "dietary uses, unless its label bears"; in line 24, after the word "by", to strike out the word "such"; in line 25, after the word "regulations", to strike out the words "as may be"; on page 24, line 2, after the word "its", to strike out the word "nutritional", and in the same line, after the word "value", to insert the words "for such uses", so as to make the paragraph read:

(j) If it purports to be or is represented for special dietary uses by infants or invalids, or for other special dietary uses, unless its label bears, if so required by regulations prescribed by the Secretary, statements concerning its vitamin, mineral, and other dietary properties which fully inform the purchaser as to its value for such uses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, paragraph (k), on page 24, line 5, after the word "preservative", to strike out "which is not prohibited by section 11 and it fails to bear" and insert "unless it bears", so as to make the paragraph read:

(k) If it bears or contains any artificial flavor, artificial color, or chemical preservative, unless it bears a label stating that fact: Provided, That to the extent that compliance with the requirements of this paragraph is impracticable, exemptions shall be established by regulations promulgated by the Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Tolerances for poisonous ingredients in food and certification of coal-tar colors for food", in section 15, paragraph (a), page 26, line 14, after the word "Any", to strike out "contaminating" and the comma and insert "contaminating"; in line 22, after the word "health", to insert "and any quantity exceeding the limits so fixed shall also be deemed to be unsafe for purposes of the application of section 11 (a)"; and in line 25, after the word "the", to strike out "quality" and insert "quantity", so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 15. (a) Any contaminating poisonous, or deleterious substance added to any food, except where such substance is required in the production thereof or cannot be avoided by good manufacturing practice shall be deemed to be unsafe for purposes of the application of section 11 (a); but when such substance is so required or cannot be so avoided, the Secretary is authorized to promulgate regulations limiting the quantity therein or thereon to such extent as he finds necessary for the protection of public health, and any quantity exceeding the limits so fixed shall also be deemed to be unsafe for purposes of the application of section 11 (a). In determining the quantity of such added substance to protect the public health, and after the effective date of such regulations, and during such temporary period, no person shall introduce into interstate commerce any such food manufactured, processed, or packed by any such manufacturer, processor, or packer, unless such manufacturer, processor, or packer holds a permit issued by the Secretary as provided by such regulations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in chapter V, "Drugs and devices", on page 27, line 12, in the subtitle, after the word "drugs", to insert the words "and devices", so as to make the subtitle read:

Adulterated drugs and devices.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 16, paragraph (c), on page 29, line 4, after the word "its", to strike out the words "identity or strength differs from, or its purity or quality falls below" and insert the words "strength, quality, or purity differs from", so as to make the paragraph read:

(c) If it is not subject to the provisions of paragraph (b) of this section and its strength, quality, or purity differs from that which it purports or is represented to possess.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subtitle "Misbranded drugs and devices", in section 17, page 29, line 12, after the word "particular", to insert a new sentence, so as to make the paragraph read:

(a) If its labeling is false or misleading in any particular. Any representation concerning the effect of a drug or a device shall be deemed to be false and misleading under this paragraph if such representation is not supported by persons who, by reason of scientific training and experience, are qualified as experts on the subject to which such representation relates.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, that is the same language and provides for the same experts as were considered a moment ago in the colloquy with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New York a question at that point?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does that mean that, even though the branding be true, it shall be deemed misbranding unless supported by the exports?

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, no; not at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next committee amendent will be stated.

The next amendment was, in the same section, paragraph (e), on page 30, line 12, to strike out "Alpha" and insert "alpha"; in line 13, after the word "chloral", to strike out "cocoa" and insert "coca"; in line 15, after the word "derived", to strike out "therefrom or any other narcotic or hypnotic substance, which derivative or other narcotic or hypnotic substance has been designated as habit-forming by regulations prescribed by the Secretary, and" and to insert "therefrom, unless its label bears"; and in line 21, after the word "profession", to strike out "its label fails to bear", so as to make the paragraph read:

(e) If it is for use by man and contains any quantity of alpha eucaine, barbituric acid, beta eucaine, bromal, cannabis, carbromal, chloral, coca, cocaine, codeine, heroin, marihuana, morphine, opium, paraldehyde, peyote, sulphonmethane, or any substance chemically derived therefrom, unless its label bears, except when dispensed on the written order of a member of the medical profession, the name and quantity or proportion of such substance or derivative and in juxtaposition therewith the statement "Warning—May be habit forming."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, paragraph (f), on page 30, line 25, after the word "drug", to strike out "and is not", and in the same line, after the word "designated", to insert "on its label"; in line 26, after the word "name", to insert "not"; in line 26, after the word "official", to strike out "compendium and its label fails to bear (1) a" and insert "compendium, unless its label bears (1) the"; in line 3, after the word "be", to strike out "or" and to insert "and"; in line 4, after the words "ingredients, the", to insert "common or usual"; in line 7, before the word "ether", to insert "bromides"; in line 9, after the word "digitalis,", to insert "digitalis", so as to make the paragraph read:

(f) If it is a drug designated on its label by a name not recognized in an official compendium, unless its label bears (1) the common or usual name of the drug, if such there be; and (2), in case it is fabricated from two or more ingredients, the common or usual name of each active ingredient, including the quantity, kind, and proportion of any alcohol; and also including, whether active or not, the name and quantity or proportion of any bromides, ether, chloroform, acetanilid, acetphenetidin, amidopyrine, antipyrine, atropine, hyoscine, hyoscyamine, arsenic, digitalis, digitalis glucosides, mercury, ouabain, strophanthin, strychnine, thyroid, or any derivative or preparation of any such substances, contained therein: Provided, That to the extent that compliance with the requirements of subdivision (2) of this paragraph is impracticable, exemptions shall be established by regulations promulgated by the Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, paragraph (g), on page 31, line 16, after "(g)", to strike out "If" and insert "Unless"; in line 16, after the word "labeling", to strike out "fails to"; and in line 17, after the word "use", to strike out "or" and insert "and", so as to make the paragraph read:

(g) Unless its labeling bear plainly and conspicuously (1) adequate directions for use, and (2) adequate warnings against use in those pathological conditions or by children where its use may be dangerous to health, or against unsafe dosage or methods or duration of administration or application: Provided, That where any requirement of subdivision (1) of this paragraph, as applied to any drug or device, is not necessary for the protection of the public health, the Secretary shall promulgate regulations exempting such drug or device from such requirement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, paragraph (h), on page 32, line 3, after the word "recognized", to strike out "and it is not" and insert "unless it is"; and in line 4, after the word "therein", to insert "Provided, That the method of packing may be modified with the consent of the Secretary", so as to make the paragraph read:

(h) If its name is recognized in an official compendium, or if it purports to be a drug the name of which is so recognized, unless it is packaged and labeled as prescribed therein: Provided, That the method of packing may be modified with the consent of the Secretary. Whenever a drug is recognized in both the United States Pharmacopœia and the Homœopathic Pharmacopœia of the United States, it shall be subject to the requirements of the United States Pharmacopœia with respect to packaging and labeling unless it is labeled and offered for sale as a homeopathic drug, in which case it shall be subject to the provisions of the Homœopathic Pharmacopœia of the United States, and not to those of the United States Pharmacopœia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, paragraph (i), on page 32, line 15, after the word "deterioration", to strike out "and is not" and insert "unless it is"; and in line 16, after the word "manner", to strike out "or its label fails to bear" and insert "and its label bears", so as to make the paragraph read:

(i) If it has been designated by regulations prescribed by the Secretary as a drug liable to deterioration, unless it is packaged in such form and manner, and its label bears a statement of such precautions, as such regulations require for the protection of public health. No such regulation shall be established for any drug recognized in an official compendium until the Secretary shall have informed the appropriate body charged with the revision of such compendium of the need for such packaging or labeling requirements and such body shall have failed within a reasonable time to prescribe such requirements.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, paragraph (j), on page 32, line 26, after the word "to", to strike out "mislead the purchaser" and insert "be misleading in any particular", so as to make the paragraph read:

(j) (1) If its container is so made, formed, or filled as to be misleading in any particular; or (2) if it is an imitation of another drug; or (3) if it is offered for sale under the name of another drug.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in chapter VI, "Cosmetics", in section 20, paragraph (a), on page 33, line 25, after the words "customary or", to strike out "usual, provided that" and insert "usual: Provided, That", so as to make the paragraph read:

ADULTERATED COSMETICS

SEC. 20. A cosmetic shall be deemed to be adulterated—

(a) If it bears or contains any poisonous or deleterious substance which may render it injurious to users under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling thereof, or under such conditions of use as are customary or usual: Provided, That this provision shall not apply to coal-tar hair dyes, the label of which bears the following legend conspicuously displayed thereon: "Caution—This product contains ingredients which may cause skin irritation on certain individuals and a preliminary test according to accompanying directions should first be made. This product must not be used for dyeing the eyelashes or eyebrows."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, paragraph (d), on page 34, line 15, after the word "which", to strike out "renders or will" and insert "may", so as to make the paragraph read:

(d) If its container is composed, in whole or in part, of any poisonous or deleterious substance which may render it injurious to health.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, paragraph (e), on page 34, line 17, before the word "contains", to insert "is not a hair dye and", so as to make the paragraph read:

(e) If it is not a hair dye and contains a coal-tar color other than one from a batch that has been certified in accordance with regulations as provided by section 23.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subtitle "Certification of coal-tar colors for cosmetics", in section 23, at the beginning of line 1, on page 36, to insert "other than those used in hair dyes", and in line 2, after the words "for use in", to strike out "cosmetics, and for coal-tar colors used in hair dyes as provided in section 20, paragraph (a)", and to insert "cosmetics. For the purposes of this chapter the term 'hair dyes' shall not include eyelash dyes or eyebrow dyes", so as to make the paragraph read:

CERTIFICATION OF COAL-TAR COLORS FOR COSMETICS

SEC. 23. The Secretary is hereby authorized to promulgate regulations for the certification of coal-tar colors other than those used in hair dyes, which are harmless and suitable for use in cosmetics. For the purposes of this chapter the term "hair dyes" shall not include eyelash dyes or eyebrow dyes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 24, paragraph (e), on page 37, line 5, after the word "paragraph", to strike out "(a) or", and in line 17, after the word "its", to strike out "promulgation, and may be amended or repealed in the same manner as is provided for its adoption" and to insert "promulgation. Such regulation may be amended or repealed in the same manner as is provided for its adoption, and an interested industry may also request the Secretary for a new regulation or a change in an existing regulation, in which event the Secretary shall proceed as specified", so as to make the paragraph read:

(e) Whenever the Secretary deems that there should be established any regulations contemplated by section 11, paragraph (c); section 12, paragraph (g), (h), or (j); section 10; section 15, paragraph (a) or (b); section 13, paragraph (a); section 16, paragraph (a) or (b); section 17, paragraph (e) or (i); section 19; section 20, paragraph (e); or section 23, he shall give appropriate notice of the proposal and of the time and place for a public hearing to be held thereon not less than 30 days after the date of such notice. After such hearing the Secretary is authorized to formulate and promulgate such regulation as he shall find to be necessary to effectuate the purposes of such provision. The regulation so promulgated shall become effective on a date fixed by the Secretary, which date shall not be prior to 90 days after its promulgation. Such regulation may be amended or repealed in the same manner as is provided for its adoption and an interested industry may also request the Secretary for a new regulation or a change in an existing regulation, in which event the Secretary shall proceed as specified; except that public hearing on regulations under section 13 (a) may be held within a reasonable time after notice thereof, and the Secretary may fix the effective date of such regulations at any reasonable time after promulgation thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senator from New York an amendment on page 15, which we were discussing a short while ago. I move to strike out all after the word "court", in line 15, down to and including the word "trial", in line 25, and to insert the matter which I have heretofore sent to the desk. Then it would read as follows:

The United States district court wherein the claimant's principal place of business is located, or such district court as the parties may agree upon, are hereby vested with jurisdiction to try such cases.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, that is satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, in section 25, paragraph (b), on page 38, line 19, after the word "request", to insert "seasonably made"; in line 20, after the word "sample", to insert "if available"; and in line 21, after the words "label of the", to strike out "article; except that the Secretary is authorized, by regulations, to make such reasonable exceptions from, and impose such terms and conditions relating to, the operation of this sentence as he deems necessary for the effectuation of the purposes of this act", and insert "article, or the owner thereof, or his attorney or agent", so as to make the paragraph read:

(b) Where a sample of a food, drug, or cosmetic is collected for analysis under this act, the Secretary shall, upon request, seasonably made, provide a part of such official sample, if available, for examination or analysis by any person named on the label of the article, or the owner thereof, or his attorney or agent.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, my friend, Mr. Fraser, called me about this amendment this morning, and wanted to know its meaning; and I think the RECORD should show what it does mean.

The first part of the amendment says:

The Secretary shall, upon request, seasonably made, provide a part of such official sample, if available.

That has no reference whatever to fruit, because if for any reason there should be a seizure of fruit, the individual articles are so large that there would be no trouble. The reason why the amendment is inserted is because the seizure might involve a very minute quantity of a poisonous drug, where the quantity would be so small that for the Department or the district attorney's office to divest itself of a part of the sample might defeat the proceedings. So I wish the RECORD to show that this language, which I hope will be adopted, has no reference whatever to fruit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, may I have the attention of the Senator from New York for a moment? I notice on page 36, in line 4, the following language:

For the purposes of this chapter the term "hair dyes" shall not include eyelash dyes or eyebrow dyes.

Why the difference?

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator remember, last year and the year before, and the year before that, when I "orated" on this subject, that I had two pictures, one of a beautiful girl and the other of the same girl with her eyes mutilated and destroyed by reason of an infection from the use of a dye upon the eyelashes? This provision is to attempt to prevent other cases of blindness from the misuse of poisonous dyes of the eyelashes.

Mr. DAVIS. Would not the same dye tend to bring about baldness if applied to the hair?

Mr. COPELAND; No; the scalp might not suffer at all, while if the dye got into the eyes it would destroy the eyes.

I may say that since we had our argument about that matter last year, another case has occurred where a girl lost her sight. It is to protect against those terrible consequences that this language is used.

Mr. President, on page 43, line 23, I move to strike out the word "section" and insert "sections 12 (e) and", so as to read:

in accordance with sections 12 (e) and 24.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 43, line 23, after the word "with", it is proposed to strike out the word "section" and to insert "sections 12 (e) and", so that, if amended, it will read:

Promulgated in accordance with sections 12 (e) and 24—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, in section 32, paragraph (a), on page 45, line 24, after the word "form", to insert "and the provisions of the act of June 6, 1896 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 26, ch. 10), filled cheese; and the provisions of act of July 1, 1902 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 26, ch. 4), viruses, serums, toxins, antitoxins", so as to make the section read:

EFFECTIVE DATE AND REPEALS

SEC. 32. (a) This act shall take effect 12 months after the date of its enactment. The Federal Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 21, secs. 1–15), shall remain in force until such effective date, and, except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, is hereby repealed, effective upon such date: Provided, That the provisions of section 24 shall become effective on the enactment of this act, and thereafter the Secretary is authorized hereby to (1) conduct hearings and to promulgate regulations which shall become effective on or after the effective date of this act as the Secretary shall direct, and (2) designate prior to the effective date of this act food having common or usual names and exempt such food from the requirements of subdivision (2) of paragraph (1) of section 12 for a reasonable time to permit the formulation, promulgation, and effective application of definitions and standards of identity therefor as provided by section 10: Provided further, That the act of March 4, 1923 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 21, sec. 6; 42 Stat. 1500, ch. 268), defining butter and providing a standard therefor, and the provisions of the act of July 24, 1919 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 21, sec. 10; 41 Stat. 271, ch. 26), defining wrapped meats as in package form, and the provisions of the act of June 6, 1896 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 26, ch. 10), filled cheese; and the provisions of act of July 1, 1902 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 26, ch. 4), viruses, serums, toxins, antitoxins, shall remain in force and effect and be applicable to the provisions of this act: And provided further, That amendment to the Food and Drugs Act, section 10A, approved August 27, 1935 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. I, title 21, sec. 14a), shall remain in force and effect and be applicable to the provisions of this act.

(b) The provisions of this act shall not be held to modify or repeal any of the existing laws of the United States except as provided by paragraph (a) of this section.

(c) Meats and meat food products shall be exempt from the provisions of this act to the extent of the application or the extension thereto of the Meat Inspection Act, approved March 4, 1907, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 21, secs. 71–91; 34 Stat. 1260 et seq.).

(d) Nothing in this act shall impair, or be construed to impair or diminish the powers of the Federal Trade Commission under existing law.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] wishes to modify the language of this amendment; and I think it would be well to have it done now, so that we may complete the bill.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 45, line 19, after the word "That", it is proposed to insert "section 10 and section 24 (d) of this act notwithstanding"; and on page 46, line 5, before the colon, it is proposed to insert:

However, the provision of section 12 (k) of this act shall not be applicable to butter as defined in the act of March 4, 1923, nor to cheese as defined in the act of June 6, 1896.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, we are glad to accept this amendment, because it puts in very much better language exactly what we wish to say. The Senators from the dairy States are interested in seeing that the butter and cheese industry shall not be disturbed. We thought we had chosen the right language, but I have been convinced by the Senator from Wisconsin that the change should be made, and I hope his amendment will be adopted in lieu of our amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, in the pending committee amendment, on the first line of page 46, I suggest to the Senator the use of the word "defining" instead of just "filled cheese." In other words, that is the act now on the statute books defining cheese.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well.

Mr. DUFFY. I offer that amendment to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, sometime ago, while the bill was in process of preparation, the Senator from New York and I discussed certain provisions relating primarily, as I recall, to seizures. It will be remembered that when the former bill was here a year or more ago controversy arose over what was known as the Bailey amendment. It was thought by some authorities that the effect of that amendment would be to weaken the arm of the Department in carrying out the law. Will the Senator from New York state what action was finally taken by the committee with regard to that matter?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the matter referred to by the Senator from Arkansas is found on page 14 of the bill. When I introduced the bill in the Senate, beginning on line 9—it is line 10 in the bill before us—the language relating to seizures was that they might be made—

When the Secretary has probable cause to believe from facts found by him that such misbranding of the article renders it dangerous to health or is, in a material respect, false, grossly misleading, or fraudulent—

And so forth.

After the bill went to the Commerce Committee, the committee, upon the recommendation of the subcommittee, inserted before the word "dangerous" the word "imminently", so that it read:

That such misbranding of the article renders it imminently dangerous to health.

Since that time, as found in the bill before us, the word "imminently" has been changed to "actually", and there has been restored to the bill the language that the seizure may be made if the misbranding "is, in a material respect, false and fraudulent, or is labeled or advertised as a cure or remedy for cancer", and so forth.

So my judgment is that the amendment adopted here does away to a large degree with the criticism which was passed upon the bill heretofore; and that, I may say, is the opinion of the Department.

I quote from a letter from the Department on this subject:

The seizure provision has proved to be the most effective sanction of the present law in protecting the public. Any weakening of it, even to the extent of the proposed modification, is to be deplored. On the other hand, the improvements in other sections of the bill constitute such a signal advance that, desirable as it is to strengthen the seizure provision, we believe that the bill enacted with the proposed changes would be a more effective instrument for public protection than the old law.

Since that letter was written, the further language has been added—which, to my mind, materially strengthens the seizure provision—that a product labeled as having any therapeutic effect in the treatment of cancer, tuberculosis, Bright's disease, poliomyelitis, venereal diseases, or heart or vascular diseases may be seized. So fraudulent, alleged tuberculosis cures, Bright's disease cures, and so forth, may now be seized.

Frankness compels me to say that if I had my way I perhaps would make the bill a little more rigid. But this language meets the full approval of the committee, and I think it should stand as we have accepted it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from New York, what are the limitations on multiple seizures in the bill as now written? In what cases is the Department denied the right to make several seizures?

Mr. COPELAND. There might be a food product the label of which was grossly misleading so far as it related to the filling of the package, raising an economic question. We have tried to avoid a conflict over the Federal Trade Commission jurisdiction. If the label is grossly misleading, where health is not involved, that might well be dealt with by the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to a further question?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Stating the inquiry differently, if the Department finds that a representation is false, and that it relates to a product which is dangerous to the health or safety of consumers, may there still be multiple seizures notwithstanding the fact that there has been no previous judgment on the subject?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still open to amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senator from New York, in charge of the bill, to the punctuation on line 15, page 26. In view of the adoption of the amendment already agreed to in line 14, the comma after the word "poisonous" on line 15 should come out. I therefore ask the Senator if he will not accept an amendment merely striking out the comma after the word "poisonous", on line 15, page 26.

Mr. COPELAND. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In section 15, page 26, line 15, after the word "poisonous", it is proposed to strike out the comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the first section of the act entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes", approved June 30, 1906, as amended, is amended by striking out "food or drug" and inserting in lieu thereof "food, drug, or cosmetics."

SEC. 2. Section 2 of such act of June 30, 1906, as amended, is amended by striking out the words "food or drugs" and inserting in lieu thereof "food, drugs, or cosmetics"; by striking out the words "foods or drugs" and inserting in lieu thereof "foods, drugs, or cosmetics"; by striking out "be fined not exceeding $200" and inserting in lieu thereof "be fined not exceeding $2,000, or be imprisoned not exceeding 1 year, or both, in the discretion of the court"; and by striking out "not exceeding $300 or be imprisoned not exceeding 1 year" and inserting in lieu thereof "not exceeding $10,000, or be imprisoned not exceeding 10 years."

SEC. 3. Section 3 of such act of June 30, 1906, as amended, is amended by striking out "foods and drugs" and inserting in lieu thereof "foods, drugs, and cosmetics"; and by adding at the end of such section the following new sentence: "Any citizen of the United States shall have the right to submit to the Secretary of Agriculture specimens of food, drugs, or cosmetics with indicative evidence of adulteration or misbranding, and with identification of party from whom said specimens were obtained, which specimens shall also be given such examination."

SEC. 4. Section 6 of such act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The term 'cosmetic', as used herein, shall include any substance or preparation which is intended for, or which is represented as possessing qualities capable of, cleansing, altering, or improving the physical state or attractiveness of the skin or other human body surface structures or teeth."

SEC. 5. (a) Section 7 of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out "Fifth. If it contain any added poisonous or other added deleterious ingredient" and inserting in lieu thereof: "Fifth. If it contain any poisonous or other added deleterious ingredient."

(b) Such section 7 is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"In the case of cosmetics:

"If it contain any ingredient which may render the product injurious to the user under conditions of use prescribed in the labeling or other instructions for use, or under such conditions of use as are customary or usual."

SEC. 6. (a) The first paragraph of section 8 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. That the term 'misbranded', as used herein, shall apply to all drugs, or articles of food, or articles which enter into the composition of food, or cosmetics, the package or label of which shall bear any statement, design, or device regarding such article, or the ingredients or substances contained therein which shall be false or misleading in any particular, and to any food or drug or cosmetic product which is falsely branded as to the State, Territory, or country in which it is manufactured or produced, and to any food or drug preparation which is habit forming, or is dangerous to entrust in the hands of the lay public without medical supervision, the label of which bears no adequate statement of such danger in the form of directions for use covering its therapeutic effects and possible danger to the user."

(b) So much of such section 8 as reads as follows:

"Third. If its package or label shall bear or contain any statement, design, or device regarding the curative or therapeutic effect of such article or any of the ingredients or substances contained therein, which is false and fraudulent." is amended by striking out the words "false and fraudulent" and inserting in lieu thereof "false, fraudulent, or misleading."

(c) So much of such section 8 as reads:

"In the case of food:

"First. If it be an imitation of or offered for sale under the distinctive name of another article."

is amended to read as follows:

"In the case of food:

"First. If it be an imitation of or offered for sale under the distinctive name of another article, or if it is labeled as a commonly known food but does not comply with the standard of identity and minimum quality which has been established for such food by rules and regulations made in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of this act; or if it is labeled as a commonly known food of a particular commercial grade for which commercial grades or standards of size, quality, and character have been adopted by commercial organizations, with which it does not comply: Provided, however, That all food standards adopted by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purposes of this act shall be solely of identity and minimum quality and shall be based solely upon ascertainable scientific facts, which standards shall not be enforced by the Secretary until 1 year after promulgation, which shall be not less than 3 months after public hearings have been held in the offices of the Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C., St. Louis, Mo., and San Francisco, Calif., at which hearings all citizens having knowledge of such food products shall have a right to be heard."

(d) Such section 8 is further amended by inserting after the words "First. In the case of mixtures or compounds which may be now or from time to time hereafter known as articles of food, under their own distinctive names, and not an imitation of or offered for sale under the distinctive name of another article" a comma and the following: "or under a name or picture or other representation on the label or in the package which may deceive or mislead the purchaser."

SEC. 7. Section 10 of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out the words "That any article of food, drug, or liquor" at the beginning thereof, and inserting in lieu thereof "Any article of food, drug, cosmetics, or liquor"; and by inserting before the period at the end of the proviso in such section a colon and the following: "And provided further, That all documentary evidence of compliance with such bonds, or relating to their forfeiture, shall be filed with the clerk of the district court in which the case was heard, along with the other papers in such case, as public records which shall be open for inspection at appropriate hours."

SEC. 8. Section 11 of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out the words "foods and drugs" and inserting in lieu thereof "foods, drugs, and cosmetics"; and by striking out the words "food or drug" and inserting in lieu thereof "food, drug, or cosmetics."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I hesitate to lengthen unduly the debate upon the bill, but it is a measure of such vital importance and means so much to every citizen in this Nation that it seems to me we can afford to give it the most careful consideration.

In New Jersey 3,600 doctors are much concerned about the bill. They have appointed a "welfare committee", which has examined the bill carefully. They have made a number of suggestions, but have not had opportunity to appear before the committee and tell the committee what they think of the bill. So they have conferred with me in regard to it and have urged me to bring their objections to the attention of the Senate and to present a substitute. The proposed substitute is really the Wiley law, a law in which the doctors thoroughly believe. It is the Wiley law with certain amendments putting teeth into the statute, and they urge the enactment of the suggested substitute.

The doctors point out that on page 18 of the pending bill the provision as to prosecution is permissive; that it would not be necessary under the bill to enforce the law. It would give the Secretary of Agriculture the right to be judge, jury, and trial attorney. He might or might not decide that he should present evidence of any violation to the proper authorities.

They point out that in the repeal of the Wiley Act there would be the loss of judicial interpretations covering 30 years. That objection should be apparent at once. For 30 years the Wiley Act has been tested in the courts; all the decisions regarding pure food and drugs have been based on the wording of the Wiley Act, and those decisions would all be wiped out. The doctors believe that that is a sufficiently important consideration to engage the attention of the Senate.

They point out, too, that on page 4, line 14, the word "intended" is directly written into the law; and they contend that, since the word "intent" has been one of the chief causes of complaint, it is hardly wise to write it into the proposed law.

On page 4, line 20, the definition of the word "device" is made so loose as to include boots and overcoats; and the term "cosmetics" could well include a "transformation", which is what the ladies call the article they add to their own natural hair. The term could cover such an article and might include many things which ladies wear in order to make their appearance more attractive. These physicians point out how loosely the terms are used. They maintain that the definition of "antiseptic" is much better as it is written in the Federal Insecticide Act.

Further, Senators will notice that by the provision in line 19, page 17, it is made impossible to fix the costs of the trial which may be held unless the claimant comes in and claims the goods in issue.

Section 11, found on page 20, could well be confined to the first three lines. The remainder of the section, these physicians assert, has been inserted in order to weaken it.

I particularly call attention to lines 15 to 19, on page 28. I have heretofore invited the attention of the Senator from New York to those lines, and he very graciously stated that he would look into the situation.

On page 28, line 15, there is the following provision:

No drug defined in an official compendium shall be deemed to be adulterated under this paragraph because it differs from the standard of strength, quality, or purity therefor set forth in an official compendium, if its standard of strength, quality, or purity be plainly stated on its label.

I hope Senators realize the significance of that provision. A physician is called in a case of illness. He has in mind the standards, and he prescribes for the patient the standard drug. The prescription is taken to a druggist who has an adulterated drug, but on the label he has the fact written that it is adulterated. Who knows, however, what is on his labels and on the shelves in his drug store? The druggist uses a drug of a lower percentage of strength than standard. The doctor wonders why it does not effect a cure, why it is not helpful. He does not know that it is stated on the label that the drug has been adulterated, and that it is not of the standard strength.

These New Jersey physicians claim that when they prescribe for a person, they are at least entitled to know that they are getting the standard provided in the pharmacopœia, or wherever standards are prescribed. How otherwise can they with any intelligence treat a person? It seems to me the point is well taken, and should be considered by this body, because it affects every one of us.

I ask Senators to read the penalties provided in section 5 on page 11 of this measure. Let us turn to those penalties. It is provided:

Any person who violates any of the provisions of subdivisions (a), (b), (c), (d), (f), (g), or (h)—

Where is (e)? (e) refers to radio; (e) is left out. Turn back to (e), and see what (e) says:

The dissemination, by United States mails, or in interstate commerce in any manner, or by any means, including radio broadcast, of any advertisement which contains any representation—

And so forth. It will be seen that it does not refer to newspapers. It refers to radio or the mails.

Then when we turn to the criminal procedure we find that that particular section is left out. The doctors wonder why. A man may speak over the radio and tell the radio audience that some mouth wash will kill all the germs in the throat without stating that it may also remove the throat tissues. He can get away with that; but if a newspaper prints it, the newspaper cannot get away with it. At least, that is the interpretation which has been placed upon the bill. Subdivision (e) is omitted from the criminal section.

The New Jersey physicians point out that the main purpose of the proposed amendments to the present Harvey Wiley Food and Drugs Act is to satisfy complaints, and to make the law satisfactory to those who condemn the existing statute. The additional purpose of the amendments, as they refer to cosmetics, is to add to the list of products which the law controls something which was foreign to the purposes of the statute as originally passed. They point out the reason for these amendments. I have practically covered them, and I am presenting for the consideration of the Senate these amendments in the nature of a substitute.

I ask that there be printed in the RECORD, in connection with my remarks, the report of analysis of the provisions of the Food and Drugs Act, and so forth, prepared under instructions from the welfare committee of the Medical Society of New Jersey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the report will be printed in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

REPORT OF ANALYSIS OF THE PROVISIONS OF THE FOOD AND DRUGS ACT, WILEY ACT, THE PROPER COMPLAINTS AGAINST ITS EFFECTIVENESS, THE ANALYSIS OF THE NOTICES OF JUDGMENTS UNDER THE EXISTING LAW, THE ANNUAL REPORTS OF THE CHIEF OF THE FOOD AND DRUG ADMINISTRATION, THE PRESENT SENATE CONGRESSIONAL BILLS (S. 5) AND (H. R. 300) PREPARED UNDER INSTRUCTIONS FROM THE WELFARE COMMITTEE OF THE MEDICAL SOCIETY OF NEW JERSEY

Most of the complaints against the effectiveness of the Wiley Act take their origin from the reports of the Food and Drug Administrator, and have been enlarged upon to the public to the extent that a great many public-spirited organizations actually believe that the deficiencies of the Wiley Act are responsible for the present deplorable conditions in commerce and advertising of food and drugs and cosmetics.

Amongst a very large number of notices of judgment under the Wiley Act and the reports of proceedings of the Federal Trade Commission are to be found numerous records which would tend to demonstrate that most of the criticisms are not only unjustifiable but are also falsifications of documentary evidence.

It is a fact that when criticism by the Medical Society of New Jersey was made public in 1934, the proportion of criminal prosecutions instituted by the officials of the Administration were increased, from an almost negligible number, by several hundred percent. This leads us to believe that the Wiley Act could be enforced. Also one of the gravest criticisms of these affairs has centered about the fact that the Wiley Act contains no provision against false advertising. Where the fault lies in regard to this particular is too subtle for a short analysis. Sufficient to say that the records of the Federal Trade Commission display ample actions, either under stipulation or orders to cease and desist, the false advertisements of foods, drugs, cosmetics and theraputic devices, to warrant the opinion that these matters are adequately controllable under the Federal Trade Commission Act.

It has been alleged that the Federal Trade Commission cannot act on questions of false advertising because its actions are based on unfair competition. We would cite the record to demonstrate, and court opinions to prove that the Federal Trade Commission's actions can be based on false advertising because false advertising is unfair competition. The only case on record in which the Federal Trade Commission failed in its efforts to stop false advertisement was one in which the Federal Trade Commission itself inadvertently omitted the term "unfair competition" from the formal complaint.

Diverse individuals at sundry times have made statements alleging superior virtues to the Copeland bill (S. 5).

(1) Let it be thoroughly understood that the Wiley Act is a mandatory criminal statute on which have been based a large mass of district, appellate, and Supreme Court opinion.

This mass of judicial interpretations would be entirely obliterated if the Wiley Act is repealed. It would certainly take years to build up similar interpretation of any new legislation that might replace it in any of the bills that have been introduced into the Congress over the past 4 years. This is so important in itself as to be basis for summary rejection. Most of them have even contained clauses which would make it almost impossible for any enforcement to be obtainable.

The Copeland bills uniformly contain the paragraph (ch. 3, sec. 8): "Nothing in this act shall be construed as requiring the Secretary to report for prosecution or for the institution of libel or injunction proceedings for minor violations of this act, whenever he believes that the purposes of the act can be accomplished by a suitable written notice or warning."

The only part of the present S. 5 which is mandatory to the Secretary of Agriculture is chapter 3, section 7, which requires the Secretary to hold hearings for "persons against whom proceedings are contemplated in accordance with regulation prescribed by himself" with no provision that the records of these hearings shall be made public; then, if after such a hearing, the Secretary decides to make report, it becomes obviously a direct invitation for corrupt practice.

S. 5 is alleged to control false advertising, and the only paragraph of prohibited offenses left out of the penalty (secs. 5 A and 5 B) is that paragraph of prohibited offenses which has to do with false and misleading advertising, namely, section 3, paragraph 5.

In the article by Dr. Woodward, Journal of the A. M. A., December 20, 1935, in which he analyzed the Copeland bill officially, he unequivocally condemned the discretionary features of the bill. It has been proposed that amendment of the Wiley Act itself to include the essential changes would be more suitable than to attempt to enact new legislation, especially since it seems impossible to convince the authorities of the necessity for complete congressional investigation under oath. No testimony under oath has ever been taken, either on past performances or on statements concerning proposed legislation.

We are herewith submitting photostatic copy of a proposal for amendments to the Wiley Act which we believe will cover all proper criticisms which have been directed at it. The essential amendments which have been included in this copy are nine in number.

Amendments nos. 3 and 4 are for the purpose of including cosmetics in the preparations controlled by the act.

Amendments nos. 1, 5, 6, 7, and 8 have to deal with the proper criticisms of the act as it now relates to foods and drugs.

Amendments nos. 2 and 9 are proposed amendments concerning which, up to the present time, we believe, there has been no proper discussion but which, in our opinion, would add materially to the usefulness of the act.

NORMAN W. BURRITT.

FEDERAL INSECTICIDE ACT—SECTION 6

The term "insecticide", as used in this act, shall mean any substance or mixture of substances intended to be used for preventing, destroying, repelling, or mitigating any insects which may infest vegetation, man or other animal or households, or be present in any environment whatsoever.

The term "fungicide", as used in this act, shall mean any substance or mixture of substances intended to be used for preventing, destroying, repelling, or mitigating any fungi which may infest vegetation, man or other animal or households, or be present in any environment whatsoever.

These two paragraphs have served as a basis for numerous court decisions to both the Department of Agriculture and the Federal Trade Commission, the interpretation to include germs or other infective agents in the terms "insects" and "fungi."

Mr. MOORE. I also ask that a statement explanatory of the amendment in the nature of a substitute presented by me be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

The main purpose of these amendments to the present Harvey Wiley Food and Drugs Act is to satisfy complaints which may be considered legitimate and which have not come from those whose interest might be served by weakening this law or by repealing it outright.

The additional purpose of the amendments, as they refer to cosmetics, is to add to those products which the law controls something which was foreign to the purposes of the statute as originally passed.

It should be unnecessary to point out that repeal of the present law by the passage of an entirely new statute would wipe out every judicial interpretation based thereon over a period of 30 years. The inevitable result would be confusion, which would be utilized to delay or handicap any effective enforcement, even if the new law were finally found to be a suitable one. The amendment here proposed to section 2 materially increases the penalties provided, thus meeting the criticism that the maximum penalties now in the Wiley law are insufficient to act as a deterrent to some of the persistent violators of the statute.

The amendment in section 7 of the fifth paragraph relating to adulteration of foods merely deletes the word "added" before the words "poisonous." This obviates a defense to an action brought under these provisions of the law which is based upon the allegation that the poison was already in the food and therefore was not "added."

The amendment to the first paragraph of section 8 provides that a suitable warning must appear on the labels of all patent foods and patent medicines which may be dangerous to entrust in the hands of the lay public without medical supervision. When such adequate warning is stated upon the label the public is protected.

The second amendment to section 8 deletes the word "fraudulent" from the third paragraph on misbranded drugs, and thus, when the charge is misbranding, it will never again be possible to set up a defense based upon the intent of the offender.

The next amendment to section 8 specifically authorizes the adoption of food standards such as have already been promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purposes of this act.

The final amendment to section 8 relates to misbranded proprietary foods, and by strengthening the terminology against deception on such products would seem to satisfy all complaints upon this score.

The foregoing cover the most frequently raised criticisms of the present law for which any justification may be found. In addition, the amendment to section 3 here proposed is advisable in order to make it impossible for the officials to ignore evidence proffered by citizens who may have a just complaint in which the public welfare is obviously involved.

Another amendment of this character, that to section 10, makes it impossible for records which should rightly be public to be lost or concealed.

The various amendments which relate to cosmetics are drawn in such a wise, by the terminology of the definitions, as to amply differentiate a substance used for a cosmetic from something foreign to our purpose; let us say, "ladies' wearing apparel." Under the terminology here proposed there is no confusion, by exceptions of substances which may be deleterious, whether coal-tar dyes or anything else. If it is deleterious, these definitions unequivocally forbid it.

The purpose of each of these amendments has been to strengthen the original law while retaining the simplicity of its language and the mandatory character of its letter and spirit, which have always caused it to be regarded as a masterpiece of legislation of this character.

Every ambiguity in a law like this provides a thousand loopholes for the guilty to escape or the lax official to procrastinate and spells ultimate disaster for those for whose protection the statute exists.

When we consider as an alternative to thus amending the Wiley law such proposals as have been made in the bills S. 5 and H. R. 300 we must first compare the fundamental character of the proposed new laws with the old one. Obviously the administrative or enforcement clauses are of paramount importance; in the present law we find the word "shall" is invariably used whenever the Secretary is instructed as to his obligations. Thus the act is wholly mandatory and the Secretary must act to prosecute each violation detected insofar as Congress provides him with funds so to do.

Consider now the administrative features of S. 5, which are repetitions of similar sections in H. R. 300 and most of the previous bills. We find in section 25 of S. 5 that "The Secretary is merely authorized to conduct examinations and investigations for the purposes of this act." But this is not the worst, because in section 8 we find that the Secretary or his agent is given the right to simply write a letter to an offender for whatever he may say that he "believes" to be a "minor violation." A minor violation is legally undefinable in any court; a man's belief is equally undefinable in a statute. Furthermore, there is nothing to prevent these private letters following each other in rapid succession for repetitions of the same offense.

Thus we find that this clause provides for an administrative arbitrator who may legally limit the definitions of offense and the infliction of penalty on each violation detected; who may prosecute or withhold action as he sees fit, and thus may adjudicate each offense en camera; a combination of legislative, administrative, and judicial functions in one Cabinet official, to be delegated to a bureau chief.

As example of a drug which would legally call for criminal prosecution of the manufacturer, with no loophole through which prosecution could be properly withheld under the Wiley Act, let us assume a single pint bottle of tincture of digitalis examined. It is found to be 50 percent over the U. S. P. assay, which is the legal standard of strength and purity. It is therefore misbranded. The physician is trying to give his patient, who is gravely ill with heart disease, a physiologic dose of digitalis. The drug will have no therapeutic effect upon the patient's condition until he has the maximum dose; the overdose to 150 percent of the physiologic dose will kill the patient, and the physician, though not at fault, might be held responsible.

On the other hand, under the discretionary administrative features and the minor violation clause in S. 5, the Bureau chief may legally say that he believes that this single pint bottle of deadly digitalis is an offense against which no proceeding need be had. Under pressure from commercial interest, he could be persuaded to give this opinion if he could do it legally.

But any manufacturer who purports to be producing tincture of digitalis, U. S. P., and is so careless as actually to have shipped even a single bottle so irregular in strength as to be capable of causing death has probably shipped other bottles, undetected, of similar irregularity with like results. Under S. 5, he could even continue this offense with only the chastisement of a few letters of warning.

As another example a shipper of oleomargarine labeled butter must be prosecuted criminally under the mandate of the Wiley law, just as the shipper of the digitalis must be prosecuted, and with the same impartiality, insofar as the enforcement official is concerned. The quality of mercy to be exercised should be in public by the court.

Under S. 5, however, the Bureau chief who may say that he believes the digitalis to be a minor violation, not warranting action, may say, with equal legality, if S. 5 becomes the law, that he believes the oleomargarine offense, which did not endanger human life, is, nevertheless, a major violation, to be prosecuted criminally.

Endless comparisons of this kind are available.

As to therapeutic devices which are attempted to be controlled in S. 5, it is sufficient to say that the term "therapeutic devices" cannot be defined to be both inclusive and exclusive. We must not clutter up a pure food and drug law with corset stays and ear muffs, both of which are therapeutic devices under the terminology of S. 5.

Improper therapeutic devices are already being controlled on their advertising and misbranding by the Federal Trade Commission. The same applies to the advertising of any other commodity in interstate commerce, including foods, drugs, and cosmetics. Why duplicate the control of an existing statute? During the year 1936 the Federal Trade Commission issued orders and stipulations to cease and desist the false advertising of foods, drugs, cosmetics, and therapeutic devices in several hundred separate actions, which covered many more hundred individual offenses. There is neither candor nor logic in the allegation that we do not now have a Federal statute covering such offenses.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am so devoted to my friend the Senator from New Jersey, and have been for many years, that I wish I might say without reservation that what he wants I want. If he really and truly wants what he has proposed, however, I must say that I do not want it.

In order that the record may be clear, so that those who take pains to read the RECORD may have knowledge of the subject, I think there should be included here as much of a rebuttal as can be made of the points made by the able Senator in presenting his substitute.

His amendment, in the nature of a substitute, omits all reference to cosmetics and devices. It does not cover advertising. It leaves in it the evil of the "distinctive names" which are given products; it permits the commercial trade to establish standards which must be enforced by the Department, and is otherwise evil.

I begin, Mr. President, with the proposed substitute at page 2. If Senators are interested, and if they will read the proposed substitute, they will find in line 19, on page 2, this language:

Any citizen of the United States shall have the right to submit to the Secretary of Agriculture specimens of food, drugs, or cosmetics with indicative evidence of adulteration or misbranding, and with identification of party from whom said specimens were obtained, which specimens shall also be given such examination.

We have made great appropriations in the past few years. We no longer appropriate money in thousands of dollars or millions of dollars; we appropriate money in billions of dollars. Mr. President, if any citizen of the United States, no matter where he lives, is permitted and encouraged to send a sample of what he thinks is the wrong kind of a food or drug product to the Secretary of Agriculture for examination and analysis, we shall have to take over the Interior Department Building and the Commerce Department Building and convert them into laboratories. Ninety-nine times out of a hundred violations of food and drug laws are violations of a State law. They do not relate in any way whatever to interstate commerce in drugs or foods. They relate to products which are produced and sold within the States. But under the terms of the measure presented by my able colleague, he proposes to let anybody in Michigan, or New Jersey, or Idaho, or New York, or Pennsylvania, or Tennessee, or Oregon send in samples for analysis. I do not need to enlarge upon the thesis to show how utterly impossible it would be, with the meager funds at the disposal of the Department—and I assure Senators they are meager—to provide money with which to carry out this work.

The Senator from New Jersey has included in his measure, on page 4, beginning with line 14, the language of what is known in the Department as the Sherley amendment, which was enacted at some time or other; and this is what happened: This language, which is identical with that presented by the Senator, was held by the Supreme Court, in the Johnson case (221 U. S. 488), as not applicable to therapeutic claims for drugs, with a strong implication in that decision and in subsequent decisions under the Sherley amendment itself that a simple prohibition of false or misleading statements of therapeutic effect would be unconstitutional.

Because of this probable effect of the proposed change it can only be regarded as a weakening of the present law.

I have merely to mention that fact, because I know that my friend from New Jersey would not wish under any circumstances to weaken the present law, which he contends is so valuable a law and ought to be maintained in its original purity and wording.

I am sure the Senator will not be hurt by what I say, because I feel it my duty to put the facts in the RECORD.

Here is a most amazing proposal in this substitute. I desire to read the paragraph on page 5, beginning at line 2:

First. If it be an imitation of or offered for sale under the distinctive name of another article, or if it is labeled as a commonly known food but does not comply with the standard of identity and minimum quality which has been established for such food by rules and regulations made in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of this act; or—

Mr. President, I know how interested the Presiding Officer (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair) is in this bill, which he stands for under all circumstances.

The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey continues, on page 5, line 7, as follows:

or if it is labeled as a commonly known food of a particular commercial grade for which commercial grades or standards of size, quality, and character have been adopted by commercial organizations, with which it does not comply.

In short, some canning industry or some commercial organization might decide that only peaches measuring 3 inches in diameter should be recognized as grade A. The grade would be fixed not by a standard established by the present act, sponsored by our able colleague, the Senator from Oregon, and known as the McNary-Mapes law, but by standards fixed by the industry, the leaders of the industry, not the independent men in the industry, but the commercial organizations. We have heard much about the illegality of the delegation of authority even to a member of the Government, but the proposed substitute of the Senator from New Jersey would delegate the fixing of grades to commercial organizations. The Senator from New Jersey was a little careless in his reading of that provision, because he never would approve of the delegation of authority under any circumstances and especially to a commercial organization.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. MOORE. I do not think I referred to food. I was referring to drugs; the Senator is talking about foods.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well; exactly the same argument applies to drugs. Why should a commercial organization of druggists, even the able men in the State of New Jersey who are engaged in that profession, determine for us what the standard should be?

In his speech a little while ago the Senator from New Jersey very properly stated that it was desired to have the standards for articles measured by the United States Pharmacopoeia but now he would so weaken the law as to have a commercial organization of druggists in the State of New Jersey fix the standards.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. MOORE. I did not know the Senator was arguing in my behalf, but he is saying the things I am trying to say. If the Senator will read on page 28 of the bill he may be able to explain the provision there found, but he has not done so as yet. I refer to line 15, which reads:

> No drug defined in an official compendium shall be deemed to be adulterated under this paragraph because it differs from the standard of strength, quality, or purity therefor set forth in an official compendium, if its standard of strength, quality, or purity be plainly stated on its label.

Let us follow that, if the Senator will permit me, for just a second.

Mr. COPELAND. To what page is the Senator referring?

Mr. MOORE. To page 28. An adulterated drug—I do not know the names of many drugs, but we will say adrenalin, if that may be used as an illustration, with a 100-percent standard set by the Pharmacopoeia.

Mr. COPELAND. Iodine would be a better illustration.

Mr. MOORE. Very well, we will take iodine. A poor New Jersey doctor who has to work hard for a living prescribes iodine which he thinks is of 100-percent strength in some drug store. The prescription is taken to the drug store, but the iodine proves not to be 100 percent, but only 25 percent, and the label reads: "This is 25 percent iodine." The doctor cannot go around the drug stores and see what is on the labels on the bottles on the shelves; and so he wonders why the prescription does not help his patient. The patient does not realize the difference, and after he is dead, and the undertaker has covered up the mistake of the druggist, or whoever is responsible, then it is discovered that the iodine was not of proper strength. What we want is to have a standard and say, "This is the standard", so that a doctor at any place prescribing any drug may have in mind the standard and may know he is going to get it when he writes the prescription.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator has challenged me to explain what the provision on page 28 means. I did not put it in the bill; in one of the previous 20 prints of the bill it was put in by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], but I am going to explain what it means.

Mr. President, there are others beside the doctors in New Jersey who have been excited about this matter. I wish to answer them as well as my professional colleagues in New Jersey. I do not know the exact number of drugs which would be involved in this provision. I doubt if it would exceed the number of the fingers on my hand. I can only think of three or four of them—cascara sagrada, Fowler's solution, and iodine are all I can think of at the moment.

As a matter of fact, this provision has more to do with the method of preparing the drug than it has with its strength. There is a great concern which originated the use of cascara sagrada; they were pioneers in the marketing of that particular drug; they learned, through the years, how to prepare it and how to make a stable product and a palatable one.

When the United States Pharmacopoeia came along to establish a standard for cascara sagrada, either by revelation from on high or otherwise, they set up a standard of their own, that is as to the method of preparation. Now, under the strict interpretation of the law as we are proposing to write it, that product, the original product, could not be sold to the general public because it was not prepared, forsooth, by the method set forth by the board of the United States Pharmacopoeia.

In attempting to serve well the medical profession of the State of New Jersey, as he serves all his constituents well, I am sure the Senator would not wish to reflect in any manner whatever upon the able pharmacists of the State of New Jersey.

Mr. President, if you will permit me a personal allusion, when I was a young medical student I had as professor of organic chemistry one of the finest men I have ever known—an old gentleman who represented the highest standard of Christian citizenship and fine qualities of heart and mind.

He was a man who sought always to impress upon his students the importance of the ethical relations which they should hold with the public. I took his course in organic chemistry, and, I confess, I was one of the poorest students in the class; but, even though the professor did not teach me personally much organic chemistry, he taught me many things about morals and ethics. He was the dean of the department of pharmacy in the university as well as professor of organic chemistry in the medical department. Afterward I went back to that university as a professor, and at the time of my service I found a classmate of mine dean of the department of pharmacy, Dr. Schlatterbeck. He had the high ideals possessed by his predecessor.

I wish to say in forceful terms, if I can—and I know that my friend from New Jersey will echo my sentiments—that the men engaged in pharmacy, graduates of reputable, high-standing institutions, and practicing in every State in the Union, including New Jersey, are just as upright and just as ethical as is any doctor in the entire country.

Mr. President, if a doctor in New Jersey wishes to prescribe iodine of the standard strength, if he wishes to prescribe cascara sagrada prepared in accordance with the regulations of the board in charge of the pharmacopoeia, if he desires to prescribe Fowler's solution of arsenic prepared in accordance with the pharmacopoeia he can do it—how? I hope the Senator will take back word to the medical profession of New Jersey how it may be done. All he has to do is write on his prescription "Iodine, U. S. P.", or "Cascara sagrada, U. S. P.", or "Fowler's solution, U. S. P.", and the doctor in New Jersey may depend upon the ethical standards of the pharmacist filling that prescription that when it is filled it will be "iodine, U. S. P.", or "cascara sagrada, U. S. P.", or "Fowler's solution, U. S. P."

Mr. MOORE. That may all be true enough. He might write that on his prescription, and he might also tell the druggist how he wishes him to prepare it. However, that does not alter the fact that the bill provides that no drug below the standard represented by the pharmacopœia and the other standards is adulterated if on the container the adulteration is made manifest. The Senator was a good doctor and had a large practice, and when he wrote his prescriptions he had to write all these things on them. Suppose one doctor should leave it off the prescription he wrote and a patient should die. It would not mean much to some people, but after all there is the chance.

Mr. COPELAND. Fortunately, the drugs in question would not cause the death of anybody, whether U. S. P. or the standard possible under the terms set forth here. The bill does not say that it is "below strength"; it says, "If it differs from the standard."

Referring once more to my practice, the Senator was good enough to say it was large, and I wish it had been larger, but one reason why it was large, if it really was large, was because I insisted on giving pure drugs. When I wrote a prescription I wrote thereon "U. S. P." Every drug store in this country is presided over, not by a drug clerk, but by the proprietor who must be a graduate pharmacist. Let the doctors in New Jersey write "U. S. P." upon their prescriptions and the honest, upright, fine pharmacists of New Jersey will supply exactly the things desired.

Mr. MOORE. Why not write "U. S. P." in the bill and say that is the standard and that the drugs used in prescription filling must come up to that standard, and then there will be no mistake?

Mr. COPELAND. I shall refer to that in a moment.

The reason why the original container must be labeled is that the honest pharmacist may know that the contents are not "U. S. P.", but are prepared by someone filling the bottle.

Mr. MOORE. I admit that the pharmacists are honest, and I know that no pharmacist in New Jersey would do anything wrong in this connection. All the manufacturers who can tomatoes or peaches, the farmers who put tomatoes or peaches in their baskets, are honest as well, are they not?

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, yes.

Mr. MOORE. If everybody were honest, we would not need such a law as is contemplated.

Mr. COPELAND. We do not need a law to protect the honesty of the pharmacists of New Jersey.

I wish to call attention to the provision at the bottom of page 5 of the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey. This section would permit commercial organizations to fix standards, and it is provided, in line 23, as follows:

(d) Such section 8 is further amended by inserting after the words "First. In the case of mixtures or compounds which may be now or from time to time hereafter known as articles of food, under their own distinctive names, and not an imitation of or offered for sale under the distinctive name of another article" a comma and the following: "or under a name or picture or other representation on the label or in the package which may deceive or mislead the purchaser."

The effect of this amendment is debatable. It appears certain, however, that it does not eliminate the evils of the "distinctive name" joker. One's initial impression is, since the language is incorporated in an exempting proviso, that a food sold under a name or picture or other representation which deceives or misleads the purchaser, is to be exempted from all the inhibitions of the bill against false or misleading labeling, thus fortifying rather than mitigating the evil of the "distinctive name" joker.

Mr. President, I wish the RECORD to show that the amendment or substitute submitted by the Senator from New Jersey has been properly and fully considered by the committee and by the Senate. I also wish to have the RECORD show, in order that those who read it may know, that if the amendment proposed were adopted it would omit the following important provisions:

First. Control of false advertising.

Second. Prohibition of addition of poisons to food, except where such addition is required or cannot be avoided in production; authorization to limit to point of safety added poisons that are required or cannot be avoided.

Third. Authorization of emergency license control of food that may be dangerous because of contamination of microorganisms.

Fourth. Prohibition against traffic in confectionary containing metallic trinkets or other inedible substances.

Many deaths of little children have taken place in the United States as a result of the use of candy which contained or had embedded in it a little elephant or donkey or some other device. It has been swallowed and, instead of going into the stomach, has gone into the child's lung. Many deaths have occurred in that way. If we were to accept the substitute presented by the Senator from New Jersey, there would be no such prohibition as is contemplated by the pending bill. I know the Senator's kind heart and that he would not wish this to be the case.

Fifth. Requirement for fully informative labeling of infant and invalid food.

Sixth. Requirement that unstandardized food be labeled to disclose the ingredients by name, thus protecting allergic individuals. That is provided for in our bill.

Seventh. Requirements for labeling of deteriorating drugs.

Eighth. Definition of nonofficial drugs as illegal if the strength is greater than that declared on the label.

Ninth. Requirement that antiseptics possess germicidal power.

Tenth. Requirement for declaration on the label of the names of ingredients of nonofficial drugs.

Eleventh. Prohibition against the use of poisonous containers for food, drugs, and cosmetics.

Twelfth. Requirement that food, drugs, and cosmetics be prepared and handled under conditions of reasonable cleanliness.

Thirteenth. Prohibition against the use of uncertified and impure coal-tar colors in food, drugs, and cosmetics.

Fourteenth. Prohibition of slack filling and the use of deceptive containers for food and drugs.

Fifteenth. Authorization for factory inspection and the procurement of records needed to prove Federal jurisdiction.

Sixteenth. Authorization of the Federal courts to enjoin repetitious violations.

Mr. President, I have gone at length into this matter because of my great friendship for the Senator from New Jersey, and also that the Senate may be fully informed that the adoption of his substitute would result in destroying all the work which we have undertaken. It would not afford the public the protection against the evils of food, drug, and cosmetic abuses which we have provided in the bill.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that I appreciate all the Senator from New York has said. I shall not detain the Senate any longer, except to say that I am thoroughly convinced of the accuracy of my statements and reiterate them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment, in the nature of a substitute, was rejected.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and I hope the Senator from New York will accept it. The amendment seems to me to be a very proper one if the Senator will let me call his attention to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend paragraph (f) of section 17, on page 31, line 15, by adding the following after the word "Secretary":

Such subdivision (2) shall not, except the requirements as to alcohol and those drugs required to be declared by such subdivision, apply to any drug the ingredients of which are fully and correctly disclosed to the Secretary.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, paragraph (g) of section 17 requires—

(1) Adequate restrictions for use, and (2) adequate warnings against use in those pathological conditions or by children where its use may be dangerous to health, or against unsafe dosage or methods or duration of administration or application.

Subdivision (2) of this paragraph is unnecessary, since the first subdivision requires adequate directions for use. If a manufacturer is distributing a preparation that should not be consumed by a child, and he fails so to state in his label, then the directions would not be considered adequate directions.

This subdivision is further made unnecessary by paragraph (b) of the same section, which reads:

If it is dangerous to health when used in the dosage, or with the frequency or duration, prescribed or recommended in the labeling or advertisement thereof.

The fact that the provision is already in the bill seems to me to make it unnecessary to be repeated at this point. I hope the Senator from New York will accept the amendment and take it to conference, at any rate, so that the bill may be rounded out, because in a way the language to which I refer is really surplusage.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I wish I might accept the amendment on behalf of the committee; but I cannot do so, and I wish to state my reason. The provision in question requires adequate warning on the label of a drug "against use in those pathological conditions or by children where its use may be dangerous to health, or against unsafe dosage or methods or duration of administration or application." The first part of the section defines a drug as misbranded "if it is dangerous to health when used in the dosage, or with the frequency or duration, prescribed or recommended in the labeling or advertisement thereof."

The criticism which the Senator has made is a natural one, but I think his criticism or his suggestion of an amendment is due to a misapprehension as to the purpose of this language.

As a matter of fact the second part covers an entirely different field from that covered by the first subdivision. It is to the possible misuse of drugs that the second subdivision of the paragraph is directed.

I will give an example.

If one has ever seen a person suffering from asthma, he knows how severe the paroxysms are and how great is his misery. A rather common prescription for those cases is iodide of potash. That drug will relieve the paroxysms of asthma in some cases; in general its use is perfectly safe; but, unfortunately, if a tubercular person has asthma and takes iodide of potash, it is very likely to cause the latent disease to flare up, and, in consequence, the person's death might follow. The kind-hearted Senator from Tennessee is the last man in the world to aid in any way in bringing about such a result.

Medical literature is full of pathetic instances of death from certain pain relievers. The directions may be entirely adequate, and the drugs when taken in accordance with them may not be dangerous to health. But there is always a temptation on the part of a human being to think, "If a little medicine will help me a good deal, more will help me still more"; so many times these pain-relieving drugs, useful when given in appropriate dosage, if given in excessive dosage may cause death.

I can sympathize with any criticism of this provision on the ground that difficulty may arise in its application.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, it seems to me that is the real trouble. I do not see how the provision can be practically applied; and it struck me—and I hope the Senator will consider the suggestion—that if he were to accept this amendment and take it to conference, a practical provision might be worked out. As the provision stands, I do not think it is worked out so as to have a practical application.

Mr. COPELAND. It may well be that the language as we have it here will be open to the possibility of further study, because I have no idea at all that the House bill will be anything like our bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. But if the House should agree to the language of the Senate bill, the conferees would be precluded from amending it in conference. If, however, this amendment should be adopted, I am quite sure that in conference an amendment could be worked out that would be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. COPELAND. I am so convinced that the Senate ought not to take that position that I could not for myself consider yielding in conference on the subject.

Let me finish my statement.

What warning should there be against (a) use, (b) use in pathological conditions or by children; (c) unsafe dosage; (d) unsafe methods of administration or application; and (e) use for prolonged periods of time? What constitutes adequate warning in these instances? These questions are emphasized with variations within each class of drug, variations in the quantity of the potent ingredient, variations in the chemical combinations of that ingredient, and variations in the substances accompanying them.

Mr. President, in the name of the safety of sick persons and particularly sick children in this country, I hope this amendment will be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk, and which I hope the Senator from New York will accept.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 31, line 17, after the word "use", it is proposed to strike out all of line 17 and down to the word "Provided" in line 21, in the following words:

And (2) adequate warnings against use in those pathological conditions or by children where its use may be dangerous to health, or against unsafe dosage or methods or duration of administration or application.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator will see that in line 17 the language of the original bill was "or", and the committee has stricken out that word and inserted the word "and." My first amendment is to strike out the language from the word "use" down to the word "Provided" in line 21. That is a repetition of the language already in the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, nothing could be better than to repeat certain things over and over in order to make sure that there is going to be due warning of the possibilities of taking this, that, or the other drug. I hope the Senate will defeat the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in line 17, page 31, the committee amendment to strike out the word "or" and to insert the word "and" was agreed to, and I ask that the amendment be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is reconsidered.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I now urge the Senate to reject the committee amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the same argument applies. To agree to the Senator's suggestion would defeat the very purpose we have in view.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I move to recommit the bill to the committee for further consideration, in order to give the objectors to whom I have referred a chance to be heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Jersey.

The motion was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any further amendment to be offered? If not, the Secretary, without objection, will be authorized to make the necessary clerical changes in the sections and subdivisions.

The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 5) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COPELAND subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask that there be inserted in the RECORD immediately following the passage of the food and drug bill a statement which has been prepared by a group of women representing several organizations. These women have been most kind in their comments upon the measure. They recognize that all legislation is by compromise. They are disappointed that certain more rigid requirements have not been included in the bill.

I think it is right that the RECORD should show that there are many consumers who would like to have a more rigid law. The inclusion of this statement in the RECORD will make clear to the House of Representatives, when it comes to consider the subject, that while we passed the bill in the Senate, and while it is reasonably satisfactory, and perhaps in its totality entirely satisfactory, yet there are weaknesses in it which these women would like to have corrected.

Of course, if I had my way, I would make the measure a more rigid one; but my experience this morning has taught me that it is sometimes very difficult to get all we have already agreed upon by compromise in the committee.

I ask unanimous consent that the statement be printed in the body of the RECORD following the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OBJECTIONS TO S. 5, FOOD, DRUG, AND COSMETIC BILL

Although the undersigned organizations recognize that S. 5 as reported on March 8 would improve food and drug regulation in numerous ways, we consider that the bill contains serious weaknesses. We recognize the fact that the bill contains certain improvements in regulation, such as more effective safeguards to health, more informative labeling, extension of regulation to cosmetics, therapeutic devices, and certain classes of drugs heretofore not covered.

We agree with the report of the Committee on Commerce that new food, drug, and cosmetic legislation should be "prepared with three basic principles in mind." The report states: "First, it must not weaken the existing laws; second, it must strengthen and extend that law's protection of the consumer; and third, it must impose on honest industrial enterprise no hardship which is unnecessary or unjustified in the public interest." In our opinion, however, the bill as reported fails to meet the first two principles as laid down in the report. First, it does weaken the seizure provisions of the present law; and second, it does not "strengthen and extend the law's protection of the consumer" as far as possible in all consistency with the third principle—fairness to legitimate industry.

S. 5 weakens the seizure provisions of the present law

The present law allows for unlimited seizure of both adulterated and misbranded products. The bill as reported limits to a single seizure the action that can be taken at any one time against misbranded products, unless the misbranding (1) has been subject to a prior judgment in favor of the United States, or (2) the misbranding renders the product actually dangerous to health, or is, in a material respect, false and fraudulent, or is labeled or advertised as cure or remedy for certain diseases (p. 14, sec. 6a, lines 6–22).

The possibility that products will be removed from the market by multiple seizure has not only been the greatest deterrent to violations of the present law but has also extended the greatest protection to the public by authorizing the arrest and detention of the adulterated and misbranded goods in process of distribution. Failure to allow more than one seizure at any one time for misbranded products except in the instances mentioned destroys the deterring effect of the present law and its protection against consumption of such products.

The provision in S. 5 as reported limits the possibility of more than one seizure of misbranded products. Labels can be changed so easily and still remain false in character, and composition of articles altered so readily that it is extremely unlikely that the Government would have occasion to proceed against a product on the same misbranding grounds on which it has previously won a judgment. Therefore the "prior judgment" exception amounts to nothing.

The substitution of the word "actually" for the word "imminently" before "dangerous to health" in this bill is an improvement over the bill as reported on February 15.

The addition of the words "in a material respect false and fraudulent" simply transfers to the seizure provision of the bill the fraud joker of the present act, which applies only to false therapeutic claims for patent medicines. One of the principal reasons for seeking new legislation in this field is to eliminate this joker which requires proof of intent to deceive as well as actual deception. Putting this language into the seizure provision will necessitate proof of intent to deceive in misbranding of food products and all misbranding of drug products before more than one seizure can be made.

In our opinion, the language allowing more than one seizure for products which are "labeled or advertised as a cure or remedy for * * *" does not in any way strengthen the consumer protection under this section of the bill. Since there is no definition of misbranding in the seizure section and advertising is not considered misbranding under other provisions of the bill, products which were so advertised would not be subject to seizure in any event.

The greatest limitation on the right of seizure which could be accepted as being fair to consumers is the one which was in S. 5 prior to the committee amendment. The bill then provided unlimited seizure for adulterated products and for misbranded products which had been the subject of a prior judgment in favor of the Government, or when so misbranded as to be dangerous to health or in a material respect false, grossly misleading, or fraudulent. Such a limitation in the bill would have corresponded to a self-imposed limitation which the Food and Drug Administration has followed for years, and so would not have been a serious modification.

The bill should be amended to restore the seizure provisions of the bill as introduced.

S. 5 does not extend the law's protection of the consumer to the extent possible in consistency with fairness to legitimate industry

1. Advertising: We recognize as consumers that advertising is a much more effective sales agent of products than statements on the label. We realize also that effective work of the Food and Drug Administration in clearing up false statements on the label has been largely nullified by its inability to enforce equally truthful statements in advertising. We agree with the committee report on the bill that advertising is an extension of the label and that control of advertising regulations should be in the hands of the same agency which administers the law's provisions regarding truthfulness of the label statements.

We are convinced, however, that provisions for advertising control in S. 5 are so inadequate as to make control of advertising virtually a farce. We have advocated the use of injunction as an additional enforcement tool for the adulteration and misbranding provisions of the act as well as for advertising. We believe, however, that it is fallacious to reason that injunction alone will be an effective enforcement weapon against false advertising. A manufacturer or distributor is faced with a severe economic loss through the prevention of the sale of his product by the process of injunction against a product which is adulterated or misbranded. This is not true in the case of false advertising of that product. Injunction in the latter instance simply means that that particular advertisement could no longer be used, but the manufacturer could still continue to sell his product. He can continue making false claims with sales-getting appeal in his advertising as long as he doesn't violate the specific terms of the injunction.

An injunction will not stop false advertising of a product but will simply prevent a particular false statement from being repeated. Not until a number of injunctions have been issued against specific kinds of false advertising of a product would the manufacturer be forced to abandon misleading statements. Even then he would not be stopped if he changed the composition of the product and thus gave it a different identity. Effective regulation of advertising has been sought by that element of the advertising profession which is eager to restore the confidence of the public in advertising and by those members of the trade affected by this bill that could be classified under the terms of the report as "honest industrial enterprise." The open opposition to effective control has not come from such groups.

An advertising provision with teeth in it is necessary if consumers are to be protected from that element of the industry which has been unscrupulous in its advertising policy.

Weak as the injunction is as an enforcement tool against false advertising, it was made even weaker by the committee amendment to S. 5 which gives the court discretion to deny injunction if, in its opinion, the offense is not likely to be repeated (p. 9, sec. 4a, line 24; p. 10, lines 1–2). A judge would be able to make such a decision in the face of protestations of reform only if the offender has been a repeated violator of the law. Most advertisers would thus suffer no penalty until they had repeated the offense several times. In the meantime the consumer would be afforded no protection. In our opinion, such an advertising provision will do no more than delude the consumer temporarily into believing that false advertising will be controlled.

2. Variation of drugs: One of the major points which led to the realization of the need for new legislation in this field was the ineffectiveness of the drug-variation clause in the present act. This provision of the present act allows complete freedom in variation of the formula of a drug bearing an official name without indicating on the label, in words which the consumer can understand, how it differs from the standard established. It seems reasonable to expect that a drug bearing an official name, such as iodine, should meet the standards set for that drug, or that the label of the drug bear a statement showing exactly how it differs from that standard. For this reason, physicians, pharmacists, and consumers have urged a change in the so-called drug-variation clause of the present law as one of the major weaknesses warranting new legislation in this field. However, the bill as introduced and reported to the Senate has the same provision as the present law (p. 28, sec. 16b, lines 15–19).

Adequate protection of the public demands that any variation be in strength only, and that the label of the product should state exactly the extent in which the drug varies from the standard. If it is only half as strong, the label should state, "half strength." In repeating the language of the present law, S. 5 fails to meet one of the essential requirements of new legislation.

3. Other weaknesses: In several other ways the bill does not provide the degree of consumer protection that is needed while not imposing any unfair or arbitrary regulation on legitimate industry.

(a) The elimination of the comma after the word "contaminating" on page 26, line 14, seriously weakens the protection given consumers against added poisons to foods. What is a contaminating poison? Since the word "contaminating" as an adjective carries the idea of inadvertency and is so used in other portions of the bill, in our opinion the protection of the consumer against excessive amounts of all poisons would not be possible.

(b) Although the bill makes a substantial improvement over the present act by providing for the listing on the label of the active ingredients of drugs not recognized in an official compendium and for proprietary foods, it does not require that the amount of each ingredient be given. The requirement that proprietary foods be exempted from listing ingredients on the label when such listing would "result in deception or unfair competition" is a loophole through which many proprietary foods can escape disclosing ingredients. The very products the composition of which consumers most need to know are most likely to be the ones to claim exemption. (P. 23, lines 18–19.) Consumers, therefore, will still not have information to which,

in our opinion, they are entitled (p. 30, sec. 17f, lines 25–26; p. 31, lines 1–15; p. 23, sec. 121, lines 9–20).

(c) The bill does not require that the ingredients of cosmetics be listed on the label. We recognize the great improvement in having the regulation of cosmetics included in this type of legislation, but also recognize that consumer protection would not be adequate for those with allergic tendencies unless the bill requires a label declaration of ingredients.

(d) Coal-tar hair dyes are exempted from the cosmetic provisions of the bill. (P. 34, sec. 20a, lines 1–7.) Hair dyes containing coal-tar colors are among the most dangerous of cosmetic products. The bill as reported to the Senate contains a provision making it possible for hair dyes containing harmful coal-tar colors to be used and sold, provided that the label bears a warning that they may cause "skin irritation." Harmful coal-tar colors are forbidden for all other products covered by the bill, and we believe should also be forbidden for hair dyes.

(e) The exemption of all fresh fruits and vegetables with the exception of fresh citrus fruit from the provisions relating to the establishment of a standard of identity and a standard of quality deprives the consumer of protection against unripe and immature fruits and vegetables, such as melons and tomatoes (p. 19, sec. 10, lines 20 and 21).

The bill, as reported, does not include provision for the establishment of multiple quality standards for foods. Again we recognize the advances made in this bill over the present law in respect to food regulation, but see no satisfactory reason why this additional step cannot be taken now.

(f) The provision making it mandatory for the Secretary to go through the whole process of public hearings, etc., whenever an industry is dissatisfied with a regulation seems to us completely unjustified and likely to hamper the administration in its enforcement activities since it is conceivable that a large proportion of the time of its staff could be consumed under this provision in needless review of regulations. The bill provides adequate opportunity for hearing prior to the adoption of a regulation, and the only purpose to be served by such a provision would be to delay and hamper administration (p. 37, lines 21–23).

The bill provides for court review and injunction of the regulations issued by the Administration (p. 43, sec. 30, lines 18–24; p. 44, lines 1–17). Such a review and injunction is possible without this provision under established equity law. The provision in this bill might prove extremely troublesome to effective enforcement, particularly since the language included in this section differs materially from the principles of present equity law. The wording of the bill provides that injunction can be used to prevent enforcement of the regulations of the Department if it is found that "the petitioner may suffer substantial damage by reason of its enforcement" (p. 44, sec. 30, line 9). At present, the Court holds an injunction can be granted if it can be proved that the petitioner will suffer irreparable damage.

SUMMARY

The undersigned organizations do not accept S. 5 as reported by the Committee on Commerce on March 8 as giving adequate protection to consumers because:

1. It limits the number of seizures possible for misbranded products and in this respect is weaker than the present law.

2. It does not provide the degree of consumer protection possible without being unfair to legitimate business, since it—

(a) Provides ineffective control of false advertising.

(b) Does not provide that the label of a drug, using an official name and differing from the standard set for that drug, show how it differs in strength.

(c) Does not give adequate protection against added poisons.

(d) Does not require that the label state the amount of each active ingredient of drugs for which an official standard has not been set or the amount of each ingredient in proprietary foods. Further, it allows a loophole for proprietary foods to escape listing ingredients.

(e) Does not require that ingredients of cosmetics be stated on the label.

(f) Exempts coal-tar hair dyes from cosmetic regulation.

(g) Does not authorize the establishment of multiple quality standards for foods and exempts fresh fruits and vegetables from even a single standard.

(h) Provides court review of the regulations under new equity principles which probably will weaken their effect and provides unnecessary administrative review of regulations.

We request that S. 5 be amended to provide multiple seizure for misbranded products to conform to the present practice of the Food and Drug Administration, to strengthen the enforcement provisions for advertising, and to provide the additional provisions suggested to strengthen consumer protection. These provisions, we are convinced, will benefit rather than be burdensome to honest industry.

NATIONAL GALLERY OF ART

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 73, a measure providing for the acceptance by the Government of the Mellon art contribution. I have consulted the acting leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], and I do not believe there is any objection by any Senator.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] raised some objection in regard to the joint resolution.

Mr. CONNALLY. Permit me to say to the Senator that while I have not personally conferred with the Senator from Wisconsin, my information is that upon investigation he withdrew his objection. I am not prepared to say whether or not that is true, but that is my information. I do not desire to take advantage of any Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 73) providing for the construction and maintenance of a National Gallery of Art, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, on page 5, line 21, to strike out the words "exhibited in" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "included in the permanent collection of", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the area bounded by Seventh Street, Constitution Avenue, Fourth Street, and North Mall Drive NW., in the District of Columbia, is hereby appropriated to the Smithsonian Institution as a site for a National Gallery of Art. The Smithsonian Institution is authorized to permit the A. W. Mellon Educational and Charitable Trust (hereinafter referred to as the donor) to construct on said site for the Smithsonian Institute a building to be designated the National Gallery of Art, and to remove any existing structure and landscape the grounds within said area. The adjoining area bounded by Fourth Street, Pennsylvania Avenue, Third Street, and North Mall Drive NW., in the District of Columbia, is hereby reserved as a site for future additions to the National Gallery of Art. The project shall be in accordance with plans and specifications approved by the Commission of Fine Arts.

SEC. 2. (a) There is hereby established in the Smithsonian Institution a bureau, which shall be directed by a board to be known as the Trustees of the National Gallery of Art, whose duty it shall be to maintain and administer the National Gallery of Art and site thereof and to execute such other functions as are vested in the board by this act. The board shall be composed as follows: The Chief Justice of the United States, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, ex officio; and five general trustees who shall be citizens of the United States, to be chosen as hereinafter provided. No officer or employee of the Federal Government shall be eligible to be chosen as a general trustee.

(b) The general trustees first taking office shall be chosen by the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, subject to the approval of the donor, and shall have terms expiring one each on July 1 of 1939, 1941, 1943, 1945, and 1947, as designated by the Board of Regents. A successor shall be chosen by a majority vote of the general trustees and shall have a term expiring 10 years from the date of the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was chosen, except that a successor chosen to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of such term shall be chosen only for the remainder of such term.

SEC. 3. Upon completion of the National Gallery of Art, the board shall accept for the Smithsonian Institution as a gift from the donor a collection of works of art, which shall be housed and exhibited in the National Gallery of Art.

SEC. 4. (a) The faith of the United States is pledged that, on completion of the National Gallery of Art by the donor in accordance with the terms of this act and the acquisition from the donor of the collection of works of art, the United States will provide such funds as may be necessary for the upkeep of the National Gallery of Art and the administrative expenses and cost of operation thereof, including the protection and care of works of art acquired by the board, so that the National Gallery of Art shall be at all times properly maintained and the works of art contained therein shall be exhibited regularly to the general public. For these purposes there are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary.

(b) The board is authorized to accept for the Smithsonian Institution and to hold and administer gifts, bequests, or devises of money, securities, or other property of whatsoever character for the benefit of the National Gallery of Art. Unless otherwise restricted by the terms of the gift, bequest, or devise, the board is authorized to sell or exchange and to invest or reinvest in such investments as it may determine from time to time, the moneys, securities, or other property composing trust funds given, bequeathed, or devised to or for the benefit of the National Gallery of Art. The income as and when collected shall be placed in such depositaries as the board shall determine and shall be subject to expenditure by the board.

(c) The board shall appoint and fix the compensation and duties of a director, an assistant director, a secretary, and a chief curator of the National Gallery of Art, and of such other officers and employees of the National Gallery of Art as may be necessary for the efficient administration of the functions of the board. Such director, assistant director, secretary, and chief curator shall be compensated from trust funds available to the board for the purpose, and their appointment and salaries shall not be subject to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. The director, assistant director, secretary, and chief curator shall be well qualified by experience and training to perform the duties of their office and the original appointment to each such office shall be subject to the approval of the donor.

(d) The actions of the board, including any payment made or directed to be made by it from any trust funds, shall not be subject to review by any officer or agency other than a court of law.

SEC. 5. (a) The board is authorized to adopt an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed, and to make such bylaws, rules, and regulations as it deems necessary for the administration of its functions under this act, including among other matters bylaws, rules, and regulations relating to the acquisition, exhibition, and loan of works of art, the administration of its trust funds, and the organization and procedure of the board. The board may function notwithstanding vacancies, and three members of the board shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

(b) In order that the collection of the National Gallery of Art shall always be maintained at a high standard, and in order to prevent the introduction therein of inferior works of art, no work of art shall be included in the permanent collection of the National Gallery of Art unless they are of similar high standard of quality to those in the collection acquired from the donor.

(c) The board shall have all the usual powers and obligations of a trustee in respect of all trust funds administered by it and all works of art acquired by it.

(d) The board shall submit to the Smithsonian Institution an annual report of its operations under this act, including a detailed statement of all acquisitions and loans of works of art and of all public and private moneys received and disbursed.

SEC. 6. (a) The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to close Sixth Street NW. within the boundaries of the site for the National Gallery of Art. The National Capital Park and Planning Commission shall determine the building lines and approve the plan of approaches for said gallery, and shall also make recommendations for the widening and adjustment of Third, Seventh, Ninth, and such other streets in the vicinity as may be necessary and desirable to provide for the traffic which would otherwise use Sixth Street.

(b) Section 10 of the Public Building Act approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. L. 881), relating to the George Washington Memorial Building, and all provisions of law amendatory thereof, are hereby repealed.

(c) The existing bureau of the Smithsonian Institution now designated as a national gallery of art shall hereafter be known as the National Collection of Fine Arts.

(d) The fifth paragraph under the heading "Smithsonian Institution" in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1924, approved February 13, 1923 (42 Stat. L. 1235), relating to the erection of a national gallery of art, is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have just entered the Chamber. On two former occasions, I recall, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] objected to the consideration of the pending measure. I think that in deference to him no action should be taken making it the unfinished business or considering it until he may be notified.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am willing to accede to the suggestion of the Senator. I do not wish to call up a measure if any Senator who is not present desires to object.

Mr. McNARY. I do not know what objection the Senator from Wisconsin has, but on one occasion I objected for him, and on another occasion the Senator from Nebraska objected. In complete fairness to the Senator from Wisconsin I think he should have an opportunity to be heard. The Senator from Texas always expects that privilege and extends that courtesy, and I suggest that we wait until the Senator from Wisconsin may be present.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Oregon was not in the Chamber a moment ago when I made the statement that, while I had no personal assurance from the Senator from Wisconsin himself, I had understood that he had investigated the matter and withdrawn his objection. However, I am so desirous of complying with the wishes of the Senator from Oregon that I ask that the order of the Senate taking the bill up for consideration be vacated.

Mr. McNARY. If the very able Senator from Texas has been advised that the Senator from Wisconsin has withdrawn his objection, I have no objection to the consideration of the joint resolution. I am very much in accord with the views of the Senator from Texas that we should pass the joint resolution. I am only asking that the rights of the Senator from Wisconsin be protected.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, rather than run any risk whatever in the matter, I prefer to let the joint resolution be withdrawn, because I cannot say that the Senator from Wisconsin has withdrawn his objection. My information that he has withdrawn the objection is only hearsay. Under the circumstances I ask that the action making the joint resolution the unfinished business be vacated, and that the measure remain on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the action of the Senate in agreeing to the amendment is reconsidered, and the action making the bill the unfinished business is vacated.

REPORT OF CENTRAL STATISTICAL BOARD

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to the provisions of section 5 (f) of the act of Congress approved July 25, 1935, I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the Second Annual Report of the Central Statistical Board for the period from January 1, 1935, to June 30, 1936.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 9, 1937.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICES AND POST ROADS

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the calendar is in order.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Perceval S. Rossiter to be Surgeon General and Chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery.

Mr. WALSH. I move that the nomination be confirmed.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Allyn C. Breed, of Illinois, to be assistant chief inspector of locomotive boilers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the nominations in the Army will be confirmed en bloc. The Chair hears no objection, and the nominations are confirmed en bloc. That concludes the nominations on the calendar.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate stand adjourned until 12 o'clock noon Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, March 11, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MARCH 9, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

As we wait in this place of prayer, our Father, we trust that our grateful emotions are too deep for adequate expression. We give thanks to Thee, blessed Lord God, for Thou dost remember us on our low estate; Thou givest grace and glory and withholdeth no good thing. Oh, may Thy praise be continually in our hearts. We pray that Thy thoughts may be our thoughts and Thy ways our ways. Grant that we may be potent factors in the extension of Thy kingdom, and hasten the time when men shall understand that "to be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." Encompass us with that heavenly charity which recognizes in our brethren the good, and darken the eyes that see nothing but imperfection and failure. Unveil the cross and may we behold Him, and help us to live in the spirit of adoring wonder, praise, and consecration. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

On March 1, 1937:

H. R. 824. An act for the relief of James Luker, Sr.;

H. R. 2518. An act to provide for retirement of Justices of the Supreme Court; and

H. J. Res. 96. Joint resolution to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

On March 5, 1937:

H. R. 4609. An act to authorize the purchase and distribution of products of the fishing industry.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 252. Joint resolution to aid in defraying the expenses of the International Labor Office incident to holding its Technical Tripartite Textile Conference.

UNITED STATES-PHILIPPINE TRADE

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, I present a privileged resolution (H. Res. 145), and I ask unanimous consent that the resolution and the accompanying report be read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 145

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to report to the House of Representatives, for its information, if not incompatible with public interests, all of the facts within the knowledge of the Tariff Commission relating to (1) the expenses involved in gathering information, data, statistics, etc., in the Philippine Islands for the recently issued Tariff Commission publication—"United States-Philippine Trade", identified as report 118, second series; (2) whether any part of the expenses involved in gathering information contained in said report was paid in whole or part by any person, firm, corporation, or organization other than the Tariff Commission and if funds for any part of said report were furnished by any other source than the Tariff Commisison that the source of such funds be stated together with the amount of financial assistance contributed; (3) the names of those participating in the gathering of the information contained in said report whether in the employ of the Tariff Commission or in the employ of a firm, corporation, or organization, and the names of those voluntarily participating; (4) whether public hearings were held at which interested parties in the United States as well as in the Philippine Islands had an opportunity to present factual information and testimony upon which the conclusions set forth in the report may have been based.

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the resolution (H. Res. 145) to request the President of the United States to furnish the House of Representatives information within the knowledge of the Tariff Commission relating to expense, and names of those participating in gathering information involved in the publication by the Tariff Commission entitled "United States-Philippine Trade", having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House and recommend that the resolution do not pass.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address by Hon. JOHN E. RANKIN, of Mississippi, delivered at the National Conference of the Lawyers' Guild in Washington, D. C.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

SEED LOANS TO FARMERS

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this morning has been set aside for the consideration of the coal bill. I will not object to this request, but I must object to any further ones.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. This is only a short letter that I want to read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I want to read a letter that I received from the Chamber of Commerce of Lincoln, Nebr., on yesterday. It is so pathetic and so important that I think every Member of the House should hear it. It is addressed to me:

LINCOLN, March 4, 1937.

Hon. HENRY C. LUCKEY,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LUCKEY: The Lincoln Chamber of Commerce is seriously concerned over the acute distress which now exists on thousands of Nebraska farms, and which is causing an exodus from the farms to the cities and towns. Without doubt, the situation is more serious than it has been at any previous time in the present century.

The time for beginning spring work and sowing small grain is almost here. Thousands of farmers do not have seed, feed, money, or credit. They cannot carry on and put out a crop without financial assistance. There is an urgent need for liberalizing the Farm Credit Administration loan requirements.

Many farmers not only have no seed, feed, money, or credit, but do not have sufficient horses for farm use. The feed shortage of the past few years has forced farmers to reduce their work stock to the lowest possible number. Under such conditions the loss of one or two horses from old age, poor feed, or other causes is a serious matter. Without money or credit the horse cannot be replaced. Most of the men have exhausted their credit during the series of short crop years that Nebraska has experienced. Money must be made available for standard rehabilitation loans or some similar refinancing program to enable farmers to continue operations in 1937.

We hope that you will use your best efforts to secure some relief for the drought-stricken farmers of Nebraska. Unless help is forthcoming to enable these men to continue farming, their only recourse is to move to the towns and cities, where they will swell the relief rolls. If they can be given some aid where they are, they will be self-supporting as soon as they produce a crop.

Very sincerely yours,

AGRICULTURAL COMMITTEE, LINCOLN CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
H. C. FILLEY, Chairman.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I thought this administration had done more for the farmers than any previous administration, and that the farmers were in good shape. At least that is what this administration claims. Evidently it is not the case.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. The difficulty is in the liberalization of the regulations. Some of these people cannot give security. They have no other assets, and it is impossible under present regulations for them to get loans.

Mr. RICH. We are making P. W. A. grants and all kinds of grants to the farmers and others. I thought the farmers were in pretty good shape. The gentleman evidently thinks they are not?

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. No; they are not.

Mr. RICH. I think from Mr. Green's statement of the number of people unemployed, things are getting worse; and if you will look at the statement of the Treasury, you will find that we are $16,000,000,000 more in debt than when this administration came into office.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. We want these farmers to carry on on their farms. In order to do that we must liberalize the rules under which these loans are made.

Mr. RICH. In other words, the gentleman wants more gratuities given?

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. No; not gratuities.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

REGULATION OF BITUMINOUS COAL IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 146 and ask for its immediate consideration; and, pending that, I yield one-half the time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 146

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 4985, a bill to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 4 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, this rule provides for the consideration of a bill to regulate bituminous coal in interstate trade. It provides for 4 hours of general debate, and is an open rule, providing for amendments and discussion. This rule is to take up a bill which is similar to one that was previously passed by the Congress, sometimes known as the Guffey coal bill. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON], of the Committee on Ways and Means, is the author of the present bill in the House. The former bill, which was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, provided for the regulation of hours and wages and working conditions with reference to the laborers in the mines.

The Supreme Court found objection to this particular feature of the bill, and the bill was declared unconstitutional. The Supreme Court also found that the question relative to the production of coal, at least as it was regulated under that bill, was a question of local or State control. The committee in this bill has eliminated the features with reference to labor. There is no attempt to regulate wages or hours. We, therefore, think that the objections raised by the Supreme Court have been eliminated from the bill.

Another feature of the present bill, which I think strengthens it, is that it sets up a commission, in which any operator or producer of coal may make a showing that the production from his mine is consumed locally and does not enter the channels of interstate commerce. When such operator or producer makes such a showing, he can be exempted from the provisions of the bill. A municipal light plant or a water plant that owns a mine and consumes all of its own production could be exempted under this bill, or a small local neighborhood mine that could make the proper showing that their production was not in any way a burden on the interstate traffic of coal could likewise be exempted. I think this provision greatly strengthens the bill. If it should come to the Supreme Court, they would at once observe from the bill that the Congress has attempted to draw a line between intrastate production and interstate production. I believe, therefore, that the present bill is upon a much superior ground from the standpoint of constitutionality than the previous bill.

The previous bill was in operation long enough for both the producers or the employers, as well as the employees, to discover that it had a great contributing influence on stabilizing the production of coal; and, so far as I have been able to learn—there may have been exceptions—the operators' and the miners' organizations both will favor the bill.

The bill does provide that the commission may set up maximum and minimum prices and provide for codes dealing with fair competition. The bill defines 13 unfair trade practices to be considered in formulating fair-trade relations. One of the troubles with the coal business, as I have observed it, is that during the war there was an overdevelopment, as there was in many other lines of business, and following the war and continuing on down to the present time there have been cutthroat methods of competition which have demoralized the business, driven many operators entirely out of production, and in other instances the competition has been so strong they do not attempt to pay a standard or living wage. Mining such coal at a reduced wage, they send it in to the market into competition with coal that does pay a standard or a living wage. So the whole business has lacked stability and has been demoralized. Both the operators and the miners have suffered.

The fixing of the maximum price will also protect the consumer. The fixing of the minimum price by the commission will protect the operator who wants to pay a decent, living wage to the miner. The coal miners and the operators do not have such a great amount of trouble in getting together where the business is stabilized and the producer knows that he can enter into a long-term contract for production. The United Mine Workers, in dealing with operators on time-basis contracts, have always been known to keep their contracts and to hold their local unions in line under the contract; and the business goes along with harmony existing between the operators and the miners. One of the greatest losses to industry today is where there is a lack of cooperation in fixing wage scales and working conditions and hours, for often in desperation labor calls a strike and both sides lose a great deal financially because of these labor disturbances. I think, as far as possible, it is the duty of Congress to undertake to assist in all such controversies as this between capital and labor. This bill will help in this cooperative understanding in the mining and sale of bituminous coal.

Coal occupies a little different position as a commodity from many of the commodities that we dealt with under the N. R. A. We all understand that codes were formed under the National Recovery Act which attempted to deal with small local businesses. This was the weakness of that law. Sometimes I think we made a mistake in writing that law when we did not put certain limitations on it to confine its operation to, say, the larger industries, the output of which was consumed all over the Nation; and this may be the reason why it fell in the decision before the Supreme Court. But I want the House to get this slant concerning coal. It is different from many of the commodities and businesses that were dealt with under the National Recovery Act. In the first place, coal is a great national resource found in many different sections of the United States. It is a commodity that is needed for the maintenance of industry and for transportation. It is consumed Nation-wide. It produces the motive power for many of the locomotives that haul the trains in interstate commerce. It is the fuel for a vast number of the power plants that send electric current over interstate lines. These features mark this commodity as one that might be considered of a national character. If the Congress of the United States has the power to regulate any industry under the commerce clause of the Constitution, it certainly must have the power to do what this bill does in helping to regulate the production and distribution of coal which is consumed nationally, and which is a national product used for transportation by locomotives and for the generation of electric power that is transmitted over interstate lines.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Another feature of the coal industry that probably has more to do with bringing it into the class of interstate commerce is the fact that it not only furnishes the motor power for the vast system of railroads in about 33 different States of the Union, but it employs some 450,000 men in its production and more than that in its transportation on the railroads.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. The industry is so vast, so widespread, so great a necessity in business, transportation, and power that it seems to me it is stamped with an interstate character; and I am very hopeful in believing that the Supreme Court will find that this bill comes within the delegated powers of the Constitution giving Congress power under the commerce clause.

There are many features of the bill I would rather some member of the Ways and Means Committee more familiar with it than I explained to you in the debate on the bill. The bill sets up a commission and divides the country into areas—areas that are on a competitive basis. It sets up local boards to consider in detail the matters of price and of stabilization.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. DIMOND. In the Territory of Alaska are several small coal mines, the production of which is consumed in the Territory. Not a pound of it enters into interstate commerce. Am I correct in inferring that under the conditions there existing these mines may be eliminated from the operation of this bill?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I may say to the Delegate from Alaska that from his explanation it would appear that their production is not a burden on interstate traffic. If, however, any of that coal were loaded on vessels, the gentleman can readily see that his position would not prevail. I think it would rather depend upon each separate producer making a showing that production from his mine is entirely consumed locally.

If the product of some mines were not consumed locally, but beyond the territorial limits of Alaska, then it might constitute a burden on interstate traffic and would not be exempt.

Mr. LAMNECK. Will the gentleman yield.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LAMNECK. Is it not a fact that practically all intrastate coal will come under this bill? I think our discussions in the Ways and Means Committee showed that to be absolutely the fact. Any coal that is mined which affects interstate commerce directly or indirectly comes under this bill. Now, you cannot find a mine that is not affected directly or indirectly by this bill.

Mr. GREENWOOD. As I understand it, this bill does not go that far.

Mr. LAMNECK. Well, it does, in my judgment.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Whether it constitutes a burden on interstate traffic would be a question for the commission to decide from the facts presented in each case.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. In my State are located certain bituminous coal mines, and the product thereof is used entirely within the State of Michigan. Would the producers of those mines be compelled to come under the provisions of this bill or might they be exempted by the commission which will be set up?

Mr. GEENWOOD. I think the answer to the gentleman's question is the same as I made to the question asked by the Delegate from Alaska. If the product of any mine went beyond State lines it would not be exempted. But whether the mine whose product was used within the State is exempted would be a case for the commission to decide in the case of each separate producer when he presented his case.

Mr. DONDERO. Would that mine be compelled to pay a tax on the production of its coal? I notice a penalty is here provided.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I think there is a small tax charged against all production; but the large tax for enforcement purposes would not be levied, as I understand it, against a mine that is exempted under the law.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. If a certain mine at the present time was shipping intrastate and decided it did not want to come under this act, and confined the sale of its coal to the State of Pennsylvania, for example—and I will speak of a Pennsylvania mine—and they decided to keep their coal within the State of Pennsylvania, would they fall under the provisions of this act?

Mr. GREENWOOD. The gentleman is asking me to give a full interpretation of this law and what the commission would decide on the facts in each case. I can see where the volume of the production of a mine was so great that it was sold even near a State line the commission might rule it would be a burden on interstate traffic.

Mr. RICH. Then we will have to take solely the decisions rendered by that commission?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Certainly. That is what the commission is set up for. Each man will have to present his case. The gentleman perhaps will recall the famous Louisiana case, where it was ruled that intrastate railroad rates were governed by State law only; but the Interstate Commerce Commission held that where intrastate rates affected interstate rates on interstate traffic the intrastate rates came under the jurisdiction of the I. C. C. and should be regulated by that Commission. We would have to depend upon the volume of production of a mine. Take the case of trucks coming there and getting coal, we would have to decide or determine where the trucks took the coal.

Mr. RICH. Will the commission regulate all districts alike?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I assume that the commission, being national in character, will lay down certain regulations which will apply alike all over the United States.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I think it would be proper for the gentleman to add to his statement this fact. The gentleman from Pennsylvania referred to a Pennsylvania operator. If that operator is not satisfied with the decision of the commission, he still has the courts open to him. He can resist the collection of the tax and test the question out as to whether he is engaged in intrastate or interstate commerce.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. In my State there are a lot of mines, and trucks come to these mines from Louisville, Cincinnati, and St. Louis. These trucks carry 8 or 10 tons of coal. They buy this coal from the mines and drive off. It may be that the producer selling this coal does not know where it is going. When a case like that comes before the commission there would have to be a showing where the production went and that the operator knew it was being consumed within the borders of that State. If this coal were sold to trucks and hauled off in interstate commerce, certainly his business would be a burden on interstate traffic. Therefore each case will have to be heard on its own facts.

Mr. RICH. This tax will increase the price of coal?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I would not say that at this time. Experience shows that under the former coal bill there was not a fluctuation of more than 25 cents a ton on the average and there was a reduction in as many instances as where there were increases.

Mr. RICH. I am thinking now particularly of the miners. If it does increase the price of coal, necessarily they are going to have greater competition from oil, will they not?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I suppose there is always that competition to contend with. They will have to take care of that themselves as against a stiff competition from oil and electricity.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. There is something here I do not understand very clearly. It is the gentleman's contention that in order to affect a mine the mine must produce coal that is a burden on interstate commerce. Now, let us take the district represented by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF], there are some coal mines located in that district. If I recall correctly, all of that coal is used within that district and within the State. If that is true, the gentleman states that mine would not come under this law?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I said it would be my impression that would be a case where they would be exempt, but if the volume of production was so great it went in competition with interstate coal at some of the large centers and was used industrially in those centers, I am not able to say at this time whether the commission would rule it was a burden or not. The commission must decide that on the evidence in each case.

Mr. MICHENER. No; that is not my question. Like the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAMNECK], I want it made clear whether coal that indirectly comes into competition with coal shipped in interstate commerce will come under this law.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Can you find any place in the law, let me ask, where they have that language, directly or indirectly?

Mr. MICHENER. I wanted the RECORD to show clearly the intent of Congress.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I may say right here and now that "indirect effect" does not bring it under this bill. This bill is bottomed upon the Supreme Court decision in respect of interstate commerce, that which is interstate commerce or transactions which directly affect interstate commerce. That is the constitutional limitation, and we are standing foursquare upon the foundation rocks of the Constitution.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman agrees with me, then, that we both have in mind the Schechter case?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Having in mind the Schechter case and the Carter case, the Coal case, and the "indirect effect" does not bring it within the purview of this act, and it is so stated in the bill.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOEHNE). The gentleman from Indiana has 9 minutes remaining.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCLEAN].

Mr. MCLEAN. Mr. Speaker, it hardly seems necessary to consider this rule. We could take a vote right now and determine the matter just as intelligently as we will be able to 5 hours from now, because it has been decreed that this bill shall pass, and it is all ready to pass. Any consideration we give it is wasted time. In other words, it has been decreed that the bill must pass, and it is going to pass.

Let us not be deceived about the bill. Its purpose is to control the soft-coal industry of the United States. Any explanation that may be made to the contrary, any fine lines that may be drawn or hairs that may be split about affecting, directly or indirectly, interstate commerce, are also wasted energy, because when this commission is established, its purpose will be to control that industry.

There are two methods whereby industry may be controlled or regulated. The method provided in the pending bill is calculated to defeat the law of supply and demand and control by Government agency the production, distribution, and price of soft coal. It is the popular method at the moment with administration forces. It puts the soft-coal industry under the domination and control of a governmental bureaucracy.

The other method is that which has developed since the N. R. A. was invalidated, and seems to me to be more sensible. Since the N. R. A. was set aside nearly every industry has been operating under what are known as voluntary codes. The principle upon which this method is predicated is contained in the bill which was introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY].

If you are going to consider the coal situation at this time, why not do it fairly, and why not give all the Members of the House full opportunity to consider the various methods whereby industries can be regulated or controlled?

The bill of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY] was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. It is there and has been there for a long time in a state of innocuous desuetude. Despite the effort of the gentleman from Massachusetts to get a hearing, no hearing has been held.

When the application by the Committee on Ways and Means was made to the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY] appeared and outlined this alternative for the method proposed in the pending bill—a more useful method whereby this whole matter could be satisfactorily handled. He has been denied a hearing before the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and he has not been accorded a hearing before the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEAN. No; I cannot. My time is limited.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman certainly does not mean to say that the bill has ever been referred to the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. McLEAN. I said it was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Then you said that the Ways and Means Committee refused a hearing.

Mr. McLEAN. Did the Ways and Means Committee take the bill up for consideration?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It was not referred to our committee.

Mr. McLEAN. Did your committee consider the merits of the Casey bill?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That bill was not referred to our committee, and certainly we did not exceed our jurisdiction.

Would the gentleman support the Casey bill if it were reported?

Mr. McLEAN. Yes; and I would support any bill which had for its object and purpose giving the businessmen of this country the right to conduct their own business under voluntary codes——

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. In face of the Schechter case?

Mr. McLEAN. If it were a universal law applying to all businesses and giving every business an opportunity to regulate its own affairs within the limitations as outlined in the Sugar Institute case recently decided (297 U. S. 553).

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEAN. I yield.

Mr. KENNEY. I may say to the gentleman, as a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, that I endeavored to get a hearing for the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY]; but it was only about a week and a half ago that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY] appeared before the committee, and since that time the chairman has been called to California to attend the funeral of one of our colleagues, and for this reason consideration of the bill has been held up, as I understand.

Mr. McLEAN. Then why press the pending bill at this time? Why not, in a spirit of cooperation, defer consideration of all the methods whereby a proposition of this sort may be approached? Why the haste and speed to press this matter? Why not wait until the principles involved in the Casey bill can be brought before the House in an orderly way, with or without the recommendation of a legislative committee, and have the consideration they deserve?

Under the procedure about to be adopted we are limited to the consideration of the pending Vinson bill, and must either take it or leave it. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I have no soft-coal mines in my district. I was not present when the original Guffey bill came up in the Congress, but if I had been here that day I would have voted against it on constitutional grounds, because it was clearly unconstitutional.

It seems to me, however, we now face a different situation and that this bill is not only constitutional but an improvement on the Vinson-Guffey bill that passed the House last June. We are confronted with a condition and not a theory. Many coal operators, miners, and even the public have asked for relief from certain intolerable aspects in the coal industry. They have sent to the Congress a Macedonian cry of "Come over and help", and are we to turn our backs upon these deplorable conditions in the soft-coal mines of Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and other States? Are we to wash our hands like Pontius Pilate and say, "Oh, the Congress is powerless to act; we cannot do anything for you."

Everyone knows the demoralized condition of these miners. We all know that the soft-coal industry has been stricken, stricken nigh unto death for many years past. We all know that not so very many years ago there were strikes, riots, and bloodshed in the bituminous-coal industry. We all know the poverty, the squalor, and the miserable working conditions existing in some of these mines, and yet are we to say we are powerless that we cannot do anything because the Constitution intervenes?

The committee has now brought out a new bill. I do not believe the bill is perfect, far from perfect, but it is the only bill that is before the Congress. If we want to amend it, let us offer perfecting amendments that we think are wise, but why vote against the only proposition that is presented to relieve the situation for the benefit of the operators, miners, and the American public?

Chief Justice Hughes said that the Congress has the right to fix prices on interstate commodities. This is what the bill does. I do not particularly like fixing prices on anything, but I understand this is a situation that has to be faced and the pending bill offers a partial solution. It certainly is constitutional under the wording of the bill and in accordance with the views expressed by the Chief Justice.

Before I go any further, let me go back a moment because this bill is merely a part of the old N. R. A. I said years ago when the N. R. A. was up that it went too far, that it would fail and collapse because you could not regulate 800 different businesses through bureaucracies at Washington. I suggested at the time that if the Administration applied the N. R. A. codes to four or five basic industries involving natural resources, such as coal, oil, and lumber, we might get a different result; at least, that was the way to try it out as a noble experiment.

The Republicans did not block the N. R. A. Most of the Republicans voted for it. We had parades all over New York State, the Republicans joining in support of the N. R. A. as a temporary proposition to relieve unemployment and do away with unfair practices. The N. R. A. failed, not because it was hampered or undermined by the Republicans, but because it was utterly impossible to regulate 800 different businesses through bureaucratic edicts and confusing codes at Washington. It had collapsed of its own weight long before the Supreme Court held it unconstitutional, and it was held unconstitutional by a unanimous vote of the Supreme Court, the liberals and the conservatives voting together. As a result of this unanimous decision by the Supreme Court we now have the vindictive attacks of the President upon the judiciary to destroy the independence of the highest tribunal in order to control it and put through a new N. R. A.

There is no question about the motive of the President. Ninety-nine percent of it is because the Supreme Court, by a unanimous vote, held the N. R. A. unconstitutional. The President should have submitted a constitutional amendment to the people 2 years ago and it would have been ratified by now if the people wanted it. Referring to the bill, there is no reason why the Congress should not face the demoralized condition of the coal industry and try to legislate along constitutional lines. For one I believe this is constitutional legislation. It is more or less of an experiment, but it is an experiment for the benefit of a great industry that is stricken, employing 400,000 American wage earners and at times as many as 800,000. They have asked for our help. The Congress tried to put through the original Guffey bill, and that was declared unconstitutional and rightly so. Now, we present another bill, a partial bill to stabilize the soft coal industry, to do away with cutthroat competition, to stop the sale of coal at less than the cost of production, and provide indirectly a decent wage scale for the employment of these 400,000 American wage earners, and as one who believes in social and industrial justice and a square deal for labor within our American system and under the Constitution of the United States I propose to vote for this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4985) to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 4985, with Mr. MAY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration, H. R. 4895, is offered as the administration's substitute for the Bituminous Coal Conservation Act of 1935, which was invalidated by the Supreme Court May 18, 1936.

This bill is the culmination of many years study and investigation. Since 1913 there have been approximately 25 different congressional studies on the bituminous-coal question. Committees of the House and the Senate, joint committees thereof, and a special coal commission have given months and months study to problems of an industry that now employs 476,276 people with 2,300,000 more depending upon it for their living and representing well over a billion dollars investment. The area affected is the length and breadth of our country. Thirty-two States produce bituminous coal—the consumers in all the 48 States of the Nation are concerned that there be a fair price for such coal.

The provisions of the Bituminous Coal Conservation Act of 1935, which sought the stabilization of the prices of bituminous coal moving in interstate commerce and the regulations of the unfair methods of competition therein, were not directly passed upon by the majority in the Supreme Court's decision. The entire act was invalidated, as the prevailing opinion states, because of its inability to separate the labor provisions of said act from the regulation of prices and unfair methods of competition. The majority opinion held that even though Congress segregated the distinct problems under separate headings, part I dealing with organization and production; part II, marketing; part III, labor relations; and part IV, district areas, and further separated these parts into sections and then subdivided the sections into paragraphs and, where necessary, subdivided the paragraphs under appropriate lettering. In addition to this there was the usual separability clause and again a second separability clause. The Court in the prevailing opinion substantially said that Congress did not show to their satisfaction that the stabilization of the industry through regulation of prices and of unfair methods of competition as it affected bituminous coal in interstate commerce was separate and apart from the labor provisions thereof; that holding invalid the labor provisions as beyond Federal power the stabilization features secured by regulation of prices and removal of unfair trade practices would likewise fall. For the first time in our observation of the Supreme Court's history did we wince at the failure of this great tribunal to measure up to its responsibility and pass upon a truly vital issue to our economic life.

It is stated in the minority report that the prevailing opinion of the Supreme Court did not pass upon the price-fixing features of the old act or upon the regulation of unfair methods of competition section of the old act. That is true, but in the proximity to the Court which we occupy is there anyone who would care to say that, with the temper of the Supreme Court as it is, with the known divisions that obtain in that Court today, if there had been five votes to strike down the sections of the bill pertaining to the regulation of prices and of unfair methods of competition that they would have strained themselves to hide behind the inseparability of the labor-relations features to invalidate the whole act? I say that if five votes could have been secured they would have invalidated the regulation of prices and of unfair methods of competition sections of the bill. Then there would have been no reason for them to have ignored the two specific separability clauses of the Congress contained in the bill. Some might say they would gladly have done it.

Ah, we are in respectable company when we say that Congress has the power to regulate interstate commerce, and in so doing the power to fix prices, unless they are arbitrary, discriminatory, and in violation of the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. We are in respectable company when we say Congress has the power to pass this piece of legislation. Chief Justice Hughes stands there with a lucid opinion saying that Congress has that power. Three other Justices—Mr. Justice Brandeis, Mr. Justice Cardozo, and Mr. Justice Stone—say that Congress has that power. So I say to you that all of the Justices who spoke upon this subject said Congress had the power. The majority opinion is silent upon that proposition.

Unless the Taft philosophy set forth in the cases of Hill against Wallace, Chicago Board of Trade against Olsen, Stafford against Wallace, and the Coronado cases were followed, it was admitted by proponents of the measure that the labor sections in said act were subject to attack; but even if stricken down, the proponents urged the stabilization features through price regulations and the removal of unfair competition methods.

Sometimes it is said by those who are not particularly informed that with the labor provisions stricken from the bill it is of no practical benefit to the mine workers and those who depend upon work in and around the mines for a livelihood. If you are acquainted with the conditions that exist in the coal country, you will recognize the force of my statement that stabilization of the industry is necessary for the men who work in it to secure a reasonable living wage. In any reduction in the price of coal necessary to be made, the wages paid to the workers is the most vulnerable spot at which to cut. The operator cannot reduce certain other costs. He is unable to secure reduction in transportation charges; he cannot secure a reduction in supplies and machinery necessary to produce the coal. The first place that he cuts is in the wages of his employees.

In fact, the general counsel of the United Mine Workers of America, Hon. Henry Warrum, made such statement very clearly in the hearings before the House committee preceding the enactment of the legislation. Mr. Justice Cardozo very clearly pointed out this frank statement by this learned lawyer and splendid gentleman. We quote from the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Cardozo:

At a hearing before a subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, on H. R. 8479, counsel for the United Mine Workers of America, who had cooperated in the drafting of the act, said (p. 35):

"We have, as can be well understood, a provision of this code dealing with labor relations at the mines. We think that is justified; we think it is impossible to conceive of any regulation of this industry that does not provide for regulations at the mines. I realize that while it may be contested, yet I feel that it is going to be sustained.

"Also, there is a provision in this act that if this act, or any part of it, is declared to be invalid as affecting any person or persons, the rest of it will be valid, and if the other provisions of this act still stand and the labor provisions are struck down, we still want the act, because it stabilizes the industry and enables us to negotiate with them on a basis which will at least be different from what we have been confronted with since April, and that is a disinclination to even negotiate a labor wage scale, because they claim they are losing money.

"If the labor provisions go down we still want the industry stabilized so that our union my negotiate with them on the basis of a living American wage standard."

To back up the attitude of the United Mine Workers of America toward the 1935 act, they stand here today in that same fair attitude toward this proposed legislation, asking for its passage as a means of stabilizing the industry. It is their position that unless the industry is stabilized, the old cutthroat competition methods relegated to the scrap heap under N. R. A. and the Coal Conservation Act, will be revived and they will have great difficulty in securing a reasonable wage for the dangerous and arduous service rendered. We read from a letter written by Hon. John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, dated March 8, 1937:

UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA,
Washington, D. C., March 8, 1937.

Hon. FRED M. VINSON,
Member of Committee on Ways and Means,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The United Mine Workers of America advocated before Congress the passage of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1935, not merely because of the labor provisions it contained, but because its marketing provisions fixed a floor level of production cost for the interstate marketing of coal. The decision of the Supreme Court, in the Carter case, invalidated the act because the regulations relating to labor were held beyond the power of Congress and were considered to be so interwoven with the marketing provisions as to invalidate them. In the hearings before your committee upon the legislation of 1935 our representative made it plain that if the labor provisions should fail that they were still interested as wage earners in the marketing provisions of the act.

By the decision in this case the bituminous mine workers are thrown back upon their own resources and ability to organize and collectively bargain for their wages. But, however, they may be able to meet this problem unsheltered by the law, they are still helpless to secure a living wage from an industry whose products has for years been marketed in a senseless cutthroat competition which finds its opportunity particularly in a competitive cutting of wages.

It is for this reason that the United Mine Workers of America are again asking Congress to reenact this legislation with the labor regulation deleted. The price provisions provide a minimum base, which, after all, is a limitation upon the meanest manifestation of unfair practices in the interstate commerce of bituminous coal—practices which are wasting the coal resources of the Nation and which depend primarily upon a free hand with the wages and working conditions of mine labor.

Very truly yours,

JOHN L. LEWIS.

THE NEW BILL H. R. 4895

In the last Congress H. R. 12800 was passed by the House in the last days of the session by a vote of 161 to 90, but it was the subject of filibuster in the Senate and did not come to a vote in that body. Upon the first day of this session H. R. 2015 was introduced by me in the House, and a similar bill was introduced by Senator GUFFEY in the Senate; they were identic bills. Much study was given to the problem during the interim between the adjournment of last Congress and the beginning of this one. There are a number of changes strengthening the bill from a legal viewpoint. Much of the work was done by the Honorable John Dickinson, then Assistant Attorney General, and his associates. Mr. Dickinson is the gentleman who argued the Carter case before the Supreme Court. The Ways and Means had before it H. R. 2015 for consideration, and by a vote of 15 to 6 the committee determined to proceed to its consideration without public hearings. It took this position because of the many hearings that had been held upon coal problems together with the hearings that had been held in the House and Senate upon the predecessors of this bill. The hearings 2 years ago covered 660 pages. The fact that there were no public hearings upon this bill, however, cannot be argued by those who are acquainted with Chairman DOUGHTON and the personnel of his committee that no consideration was given to the measure. The Ways and Means Committee spent 9 days working morning and afternoon in executive session on H. R. 2015. Every word was read; every portion thereof considered. The legality of the measure together with protection of the consumer were most carefully considered by the committee. The protection of the weaker sectors of the industry was always kept in mind. The question of high-cost production to preserve its competitive position certainly was in the minds of the committee. We had the benefit of information and counsel from members of the Coal Commission, its consumers' counsel, and representatives from the Attorney General's office. The Solicitor General, Hon. Stanley Reed, appeared before the committee and went into detail with respect of the legality of the measure. We had representatives from the legislative counsel, Messrs. Beman and O'Brien, who are the tops in legislative drafting.

At the request of the committee, the Attorney General gave the committee a statement relative to the bill and the reasons for not giving a written opinion as to the validity of the measure. I incorporate at the conclusion of my remarks this letter in full. It is quite apparent that the Department of Justice has not and will not render opinions upon the constitutionality of measures prior to their passage. Their obligation is to the executive branch of the Government in respect of opinions as to the constitutionality of measures which is shown quite completely in the latter. There is also shown an unbroken line of precedents as to the course that is taken. However, I trust that it will not be improper for me to say that the press carried an item immediately after the appearance of Solicitor General Reed before the Ways and Means Committee that he had given as his opinion that the act would stand the test of the courts.

I think that it is fair to state that the work of the committee produced real contributions to the measure, both from a viewpoint of validity and fair results in its workings.

While there are several changes in the bill under consideration, it is substantially in the same form as the act of 1935 in respect of the regulation of prices and unfair methods of competition. No new subjects have been added, and no new method of regulation has been adopted. The bill is confined to the regulation of interstate commerce in bituminous coal and to matters and transactions in or directly affecting such commerce. We think that this bill more clearly sets out this purpose. The penalty tax is presented in direct approach. The draw-back in the 1935 act is eliminated. There is a levy of a tax of one-half of 1 percent on the sale of or the disposal of bituminous coal by any producer. There is another tax of 19½ percent on the sale of or the disposal of bituminous coal to which the code would apply when the producer thereof is not a code member. In the Carter case there were objections made relative to the delegation of legislative power to persons outside the Government. This referred to fixing the minimum price of coal. Under the old act the minimum prices were fixed by the district boards which, with the exception of one member, were elected by the coal industry in the respective districts. There is an important change here authorizing the commission to fix prices upon proposed prices from the district boards. The power to fix the prices is lodged in a governmental agency, the Coal Commission. The powers of the Consumers' Counsel have been very much strengthened in this bill, particularly with respect to the initiation of proceedings by him in the interest of the consumer. He has more independence in that he reports directly to Congress his acts and recommendations.

THE TAX FEATURES

I am going to undertake a difficult task. It is the task of dealing with certain law points in the bill. This character of speech is generally tiresome, and I am certain that my efforts will be no exception to the rule, but, as a Member of this House, I know the genuine respect that my colleagues here have for the law and the courts. I have that same respect. As a lawyer and a Member of this body, I say to you that we have tried to square the language of this bill with the decisions of the Supreme Court. I desire to discuss with you the authority in law for the penalty tax, the regulation of prices and unfair trade practices and the intrastate commerce which is affected by this bill. Our efforts have not been to circumvent any opinion of our highest Court, but we have worked in a bona-fide attempt to meet the law laid down by them in a proper, legal, constitutional manner.

Direct approach is had in respect of taxing features of this bill, both as to the tax upon all coal mined and the tax which is levied for the purpose of enforcement. The drawback method, while in my opinion is equally as valid, was thought by some to be a more novel way of doing the job than the direct levy. Of course, the advantage of the manner in which the tax was levied under the 1935 act is that the members of the industry would show compliance with the code before the drawback was allowed. However, we grant that the direct approach is more easily understood, and we have governed ourselves accordingly in the new tax provisions. In the bill under consideration, we provide for an excise tax of one-half of 1 percent on the sale of or other disposal of bituminous coal by every producer; and a tax of 19½ percent upon the sale of or other disposal of bituminous coal to which the code would apply when the producer thereof is not a code member.

The tax under the 1935 act was 1½ percent of such sale price. The purpose of levying this tax was to relieve the Treasury from any financial responsibility for the administration of the act. However, in 1936 there were 400,000,000 tons of coal produced. At an average price at the mine of approximately $2 per ton you would have a value of such production of $800,000,000; 1½ percent thereof would be $12,000,000—one-half of 1 percent, of course, is $4,000,000. This is much more than adequate to cover the administrative costs of the bill.

The tax of 19½ percent is in lieu of the 13½ percent imposed under the 1935 act. It is thought that this will be a more effective means of enforcement than the old rate, particularly as it applies to small mines with high production costs which are in competition with strip mines. The increase was particularly desired by what might be called the isolated or outlying coal districts. Undoubtedly it will be a much stronger means of compliance, which means a sounder stabilization of the industry.

More questions are raised about this penalty section than most any other section of the bill. A person who reads the opinion feels that the tax was invalidated and that, consequently, we have no right to levy a tax of this kind. However, upon further consideration of the opinion, it is very apparent that while the majority held that the act could not be upheld in virtue of the taxing power, yet we find no basis for fear that the penalty tax cannot be properly levied to enforce the regulation of interstate commerce if such regulation is within the commerce clause of the Constitution. The commerce clause of the Constitution is the foundation rocks for this legislation. The Government took the position before the Supreme Court in the Carter case that the power relied upon was the commerce clause. I quote from the majority opinion in the Carter case:

> The position of the Government, as we understand it, is that the validity of the exaction does not rest upon the taxing power but upon the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce; and that if the act in respect of the labor and price-fixing provisions be not upheld, the "tax" must fall with them. With that position we agree. * * *

I also quote from Mr. Chief Justice Hughes' opinion in this same case:

> I agree * * * that the so-called tax is not a real tax but a penalty; that the constitutional power of the Federal Government to impose this penalty must rest upon the commerce clause, as the Government concedes.

There may be an argument made that the taxing power is a support of the regulatory provisions, but, in the face of the Carter case, we do not take such position. We rely upon the power to regulate interstate commerce and transactions in or directly affecting interstate commerce. The levy of the taxes involved is an incident to and an aid in the enforcement of another constitutional power properly exercised. Of course, if there is no power under the commerce clause to uphold the substantive regulations, the act collapses. The Supreme Court in a number of cases has expressed the view that Congress might impose a penalty tax to enforce other constitutional powers. I do not think that anyone can successfully contradict such statement.

This is not a novel position. Congress has done it many times. I will refer to several Supreme Court cases upholding it.

STATE BANK-NOTE CASES

Congress under its constitutional power to establish a currency system sought to prohibit the use of State bank notes. It imposed a tax of 10 percent on such notes. Undoubtedly this was a prohibitory tax—it certainly was a penalty tax. The Supreme Court in the case of Veazie Bank v. Fenno (8 Wall. 533) held this tax to be constitutional, since Congress had the power to establish a currency system. It said (p. 549):

> Having thus, in the exercise of undisputed constitutional powers, undertaken to provide a currency for the whole country, it cannot be questioned that Congress may, constitutionally, secure the benefit of it to the people by appropriate legislation.

So far as we know, there has been no income derived from this penalty tax at all. It served its purpose of regulating the currency system and was upheld by the Supreme Court because it was incident to the enforcement of an undisputed constitutional power.

HEAD MONEY CASES (112 U. S. 580)

Congress imposed a tax on every alien brought into the country. It was argued that the tax was invalid because not uniform throughout the United States and because not for the general welfare. But the Court said:

> But the true answer to all these objections is that the power exercised in this instance is not the taxing power. The burden imposed on the shipowner by this statute is a mere incident of the regulation of commerce (p. 595).
> If this is an expedient regulation of commerce by Congress, and the end to be attained is one falling within that power, the act is not void, because, within a loose and more extended sense than was used in the Constitution, it is called a tax (p. 596).

UNITED STATES v. BUTLER (297 U. S. 1)

In holding unconstitutional the A. A. A. processing taxes, the Court, after holding that the tax was not a true tax, went on to say (p. 61):

> It does not follow that as the act is not an exertion of the taxing power and the exaction not a true tax, the statute is void or the exaction uncollectible. For, to paraphrase what was said in the Head Money cases (supra), p. 596, if this is an expedient regulation by Congress, of a subject within one of its granted powers, "and the end to be attained is one falling within that power, the act is not void, because, within a loose and more extended sense than was used in the Constitution" the exaction is called a tax.

CARTER v. CARTER COAL CO. (298 U. S. 238)

In holding the Bituminous Coal Conservation Act invalid under the commerce power the Court said (p. 289):

> That the "tax" is in fact a penalty is not seriously in dispute. The position of the Government, as we understand it, is that the validity of the exaction does not rest upon the taxing power but upon the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce; and that if the act in respect of the labor and price-fixing provisions be not upheld, the "tax" must fall with them. With that position we agree and confine our consideration accordingly.

We do not think that there could be any serious contention that the levy of the tax of 19½ percent to further the regulation of interstate commerce is not within the constitutional power of Congress.

REGULATION OF PRICES

There is no decision of the Supreme Court which denies the existence of Federal power to regulate prices in interstate commerce. However, there are three significant lines of authority supporting the existence of this power.

STATE LEGISLATION FIXING PRICES FOR INTERSTATE COMMERCE SALES

It is clear that the States have no power to fix the price of a commodity sold within the State for shipment to another State. Such a sale is a transaction in interstate commerce which may not be regulated by the States.

Dahnke-Walker Milling Co. v. Bondurant (257 U. S. 282): A Kentucky corporation statute which operated to prevent suit for breach of contract was held not to be constitutionally applicable to a sale of wheat in Kentucky for shipment to a mill in Tennessee. The Court said that "where goods are purchased in one State for transportation to another the commerce includes the purchase quite as much as it does the transportation" (p. 290).

Flanagan v. Federal Coal Co. (267 U. S. 222): A Tennessee statute which operated to prevent suit for breach of contract for the sale of coal f. o. b. mine was held not to be constitutionally applicable where it was understood between the parties that the dealings "were steps in sending coal from the mine to purchasers in other States" (p. 225).

Lemke v. Farmers Grain Co. (258 U. S. 50): A North Dakota statute regulated the business of purchasing grain within the State, including a provision for fixing the price by a State officer. The grain was sold to elevator operators who took delivery within the State and stored it there. Most of this grain was subsequently shipped outside the State after its purchase. The Court held that the State legislation was an unconstitutional burden upon interstate commerce.

The above cases show conclusively that the States have no power over sales in interstate commerce. The Supreme Court has held that where a State statute is invalid as an unconstitutional burden on interstate commerce, such a holding implies that Federal regulation of the same subject matter would be constitutional. Thus in the Head Money cases (112 U. S. 580), the Court in holding that a Federal statute regulating immigration was a valid exercise of the commerce power, reached its decision on the basis of prior decisions holding State regulation of the same subject matter unconstitutional. It was said (p. 593):

> It cannot be said that these cases do not govern the present, though there was not then before us any act of Congress whose validity was in question, for the decisions rest upon the ground that the State statutes were void only because Congress, and not the States, was authorized by the Constitution to pass them, and for the reason that Congress could enact such laws, and for that reason alone were the acts of the State held void. It was, therefore, of the essence of the decision which held the State statutes invalid that a similar statute by Congress would be valid.

In consequence of this principle the Supreme Court has in several cases involving State legislation expressly pointed out that the Federal Government has power to regulate prices in interstate commerce.

Lemke v. Farmers Grain Co. (258 U. S. 50): This case is discussed above. In the course of its opinion, the Court said (pp. 60–61):

> It is alleged that such legislation is in the interest of the grain growers and essential to protect them from fraudulent purchases, and to secure payment to them of fair prices for the grain actually sold. This may be true, but Congress is amply authorized to pass measures to protect interstate commerce if legislation of that character is needed. The supposed inconvenience and wrongs are not to be redressed by sustaining the constitutionality of laws which clearly encroach upon the field of interstate commerce placed by the Constitution under Federal control.

Public Utilities Commission v. Attleboro Steam & Electric Co. (273 U. S. 83): The Court held that the rates of electricity produced within one State and sold within that State for transmission to another State are not subject to regulation by the State of production. Both the majority and minority opinions state clearly that the power to regulate the rates resides in the Federal Government. In the majority opinion it was said (p. 90):

> The rate is therefore not subject to regulation by either of the two States in the guise of protection to their respective local interests; but if such regulation is required, it can only be attained by the exercise of the power vested in Congress.

In the dissenting opinion it was said (p. 91):

> If the Commission lacks the power exercised, it is solely because the electricity is delivered for use in another State. That fact makes the transaction interstate commerce, and Congress has power to legislate on the subject.

Baldwin v. Seelig (294 U. S. 511): The New York Milk Control Act prohibited all sales of milk brought in from other States at a price less than that permissible in New York. This provision was held to be an invalid burden on interstate commerce. The Court said (p. 522):

> If New York, in order to promote the economic welfare of her farmers, may guard them against competition with the cheaper prices of Vermont, the door has been opened to rivalries and reprisals that were meant to be averted by subjecting commerce between the States to the power of the Nation.

CONGRESSIONAL LEGISLATION DEALING WITH THE PRICE TERM OF CONTRACTS

Congress has on a number of occasions legislated with respect to the price term of contracts. The most striking example is section 2 of the Clayton Act, which prohibits discriminations in prices to different purchasers. This is a direct regulation of the price term of the contract. Its constitutionality has never been doubted. Congress has also legislated with respect to intrastate practices which affect interstate price in the Grain Futures Act. This act was upheld in Chicago Board of Trade v. Olsen (262 U. S. 1). The Court there made the significant statement that "the question of price dominates trade between the States" (p. 40). It upheld the regulation of the manipulation of futures which Congress had found to have the effect of unduly depressing prices of grain in interstate commerce on the ground that Congress could constitutionally regulate intrastate activity which directly affected interstate price. Since Congress may regulate local activity which merely affects interstate price, it would seem that it could a fortiori regulate the interstate price itself.

CONGRESSIONAL REGULATION OF THE RATES AND CHARGES OF INSTRUMENTALITIES OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE

There is, of course, no doubt that Congress has power under the commerce clause to regulate the rates of instrumentalities of interstate commerce, such as railways and telegraph companies. In the Packers and Stockyards Act, Congress has also regulated the charges made by stockyards and also the charges of commission men operating the stockyards. The validity of the Stockyards Act was upheld in Stafford against Wallace and very recently in St. Joseph Stock Yards Co. v. United States (298 U. S. 38). The validity of regulating the charges of commission men was upheld in Tagg Bros. & Moorhead v. United States (280 U. S. 420), and very recently in Acker v. United States (298 U. S. 427). Attention should also be called to the case of Wilson v. New (243 U. S. 322), in which the Court upheld congressional legislation of the wages paid to railway employees. On principle there is no distinction as far as the question of congressional power is concerned between these instances of Federal legislation and Federal regulation of prices in interstate sales. It is true that the cases just mentioned were concerned with public utilities, but that fact is significant only on the issue of due process. If Congress has power to regulate the rates charged by a railroad, which is a mere instrumentality of commerce, it certainly has the power to regulate buying and selling, which is commerce itself and not merely an agency of commerce. It is well known that when the Constitution was adopted the primary application of the commerce clause was thought to be on transactions of purchase and sale. It was only in Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat. 1) that Chief Justice Marshall first laid down the principle that interstate transportation was also subject to congressional regulation.

The latest case with respect to Federal price fixing is Carter v. Carter Coal Co. (298 U. S. 238). The majority of the Court did not undertake to pass upon the validity of Federal regulation of sales of coal. Four members of the Court, including the Chief Justice, expressed their opinion that Federal regulation of sales of coal in interstate commerce was constitutional. The Chief Justice said:

> * * * The act also provides for the regulation of the prices of bituminous coal sold in interstate commerce and prohibits unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce. Undoubtedly transactions in carrying on interstate commerce are subject to the Federal power to regulate that commerce and the control of charges and the protection of fair competition in that commerce are familiar illustrations of the exercise of the power, as the Interstate Commerce Act, the Packers and Stockyards Act, and the antitrust acts abundantly show. The Court has repeatedly stated that the power to regulate interstate commerce among the several States is supreme and plenary (Minnesota Rate cases (230 U. S. 398)). It is "complete in itself, and may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations, other than are prescribed in the Constitution" (Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat. 1, 196)). We are not at liberty to deny to the Congress, with respect to interstate commerce, a power commensurate with that enjoyed by the States in the regulation of their internal commerce. See Nebbia v. New York (291 U. S. 502).
> Whether the policy of fixing prices of commodities sold in interstate commerce is a sound policy is not for our consideration. The question of that policy, and of its particular applications, is for Congress.

THE DUE-PROCESS CLAUSE

If the existence of Federal power to regulate the prices of sales in interstate commerce is established, the next question is whether the particular regulation is consistent with the due-process clause of the fifth amendment. This question depends upon the particular commodity involved and upon the particular circumstances. The latest expression of the Court with respect to the validity of price-fixing legislation under the due-process clause is Nebbia v. New York (291 U. S. 502), in which the Court upheld the validity of fixing of the price of milk sold in the State of New York. Of course, this case related to State legislation, but, as the Court made perfectly clear in that case, the due-process clause imposes no greater restriction upon the Federal Government than it does upon the States. Consequently, if the existence of Federal power over the subject matter be granted, under the authorities discussed previously, it follows that the Nebbia case is strong authority for the validity of Federal price regulation with respect to a commodity and an industry which present the same characteristics as in the case of milk. In Carter against Carter Coal Co., the lower court made a series of findings with respect to coal which present a strong parallel the facts relating to the milk industry on which the Supreme Court had based its opinion in the Nebbia case. The parallel is set forth on page 162 of the brief for the Government in the Carter case. It is also to be noted that the Chief Justice in the Carter case accepted this parallel and cited the Nebbia case as authority in the excerpt from his opinion, quoted above.

INTRASTATE TRANSACTIONS

I want it plainly understood that our purpose in this bill is the regulation of interstate commerce in bituminous coal and to matters and transactions in or directly affecting interstate commerce in bituminous coal. We are relying upon the commerce clause in the Constitution. We rely upon its entire power—we claim nothing beyond that power. That which is interstate commerce in bituminous coal and transactions in or directly affecting interstate commerce in bituminous coal are the subject matters upon which we are legislating. That which comes within that category is in the bill. That which does not come within that category is without the bill. We confine ourselves only within the limits of the commerce clause of the Constitution.

The power of Congress to regulate intrastate activity which directly affects interstate commerce is well established. Thus Congress may regulate the local activity of trading in futures on the grain exchange which such activity directly affects the interstate price of grain (Chicago Board of Trade v. Olsen, 262 U. S. 1). It may regulate the activities of stockyards operators which directly affect interstate commerce in livestock (Stafford v. Wallace, 258 U. S. 495). It may punish the issuance of a fraudulent bill of lading which is not commerce at all where the effect of such issuance is to directly affect interstate commerce (United States v. Ferger, 250 U. S. 199).

Direct analogy for the validity of the regulation of intrastate sales of coal is to be found in the regulation of intrastate railroad rates which affect interstate rates. The principle that Congress may constitutionally regulate these intrastate rates was first laid down in the Minnesota Rate cases (230 U. S. 352), in which the Court said (p. 399):

> There is no room in our scheme of government for the assertion of State power in hostility to the authorized exercise of Federal power. The authority of Congress extends to every part of interstate commerce, and to every instrumentality or agency by which it is carried on; and the full control by Congress of the subject committed to its regulations is not to be denied or thwarted by commingling of interstate and intrastate operations. This is not to say that the Nation may deal with the internal concerns of the State, as such, but that the execution by Congress of its constitutional power to regulate interstate commerce is not limited by the fact that intrastate transactions may have become so interwoven therewith that the effective government of the former incidentally controls the latter. This conclusion necessarily results from the supremacy of the national power within its appointed sphere.

The principles were applied in the Shreveport case (234 U. S. 342), in which the Court said (p. 351):

> Wherever the interstate and intrastate transactions of carriers are so related that the government of one involves the control of the other, it is Congress, and not the State, that is entitled to prescribe the final and dominant rule, for otherwise Congress would be denied the exercise of its constitutional authority and the State, and not the Nation, would be supreme within the national field.

Numerous examples of the exercise of this power occur in the reports of the Supreme Court. See particularly Wisconsin Railroad Commission v. Chicago, B. & Q. Railroad Co. (257 U. S. 563); Florida v. United States (292 U. S. 1); and Ohio v. United States (272 U. S. 498).

This analogy of the control of intrastate rates was accepted in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Cardozo in the Carter case. The majority of the Court did not find it necessary to express any opinion on this point. The language of Mr. Justice Cardozo is as follows (298 U. S. 327, 328–329):

> Regulation of prices being an exercise of the commerce power in respect of interstate transactions, the question remains whether it comes within that power as applied to intrastate sales where interstate prices are directly or intimately affected.
>
> One of the most common and typical instances of a relation characterized as direct has been that between interstate and intrastate rates for carriers by rail where the local rates are so low as to divert business unreasonably from interstate competitors. In such circumstances Congress has the power to protect the business of its carriers against disintegrating encroachments (Shreveport case, 234 U. S. 342, 351, 352; Wisconsin Railroad Comm. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 257 U. S. 563, 588; United States v. Louisiana, 290 U. S. 70, 75; Florida v. United States, 292 U. S. 1). To be sure, the relation even then may be characterized as indirect if one is nice or overliteral in the choice of words. Strictly speaking, the intrastate rates have a primary effect upon the intrastate traffic and not upon any other, though the repercussions of the competitive system may lead to secondary consequences affecting interstate traffic also (Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Florida, 295 U. S. 301, 306). What the cases really mean is that the casual relation in such circumstances is so close and intimate and obvious as to permit it to be called direct without subjecting the word to an unfair or excessive strain. There is a like immediacy here. Within rulings the most orthodox the prices for intrastate sales of coal have so inescapable a relation to those for interstate sales that a system of regulation for transactions of the one class is necessary to give adequate protection to the system of regulation adopted for the other.

I desire to quote section 4–A in full herein. This is new language, and I think that it is quite helpful language, both in respect of the enforcement of the act and in clarifying the relationship between intrastate sales and interstate sales. Assuming that Congress has power to regulate interstate commerce, then there seems to be little doubt that it has power to regulate intrastate sales which directly effect interstate commerce.

> SEC. 4–A. Whenever the commission upon investigation instituted upon its own motion or upon petition of any code member, district board, State or political subdivision thereof, or the consumers' counsel, after hearing finds that the prices of coal sold by producers in transactions in intrastate commerce cause any undue or unreasonable advantage, preference, or prejudice as between persons and localities in such commerce on the one hand and interstate commerce on the other hand, or any undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination against interstate commerce, the commission shall by order so declare, and thereafter coal sold in such intrastate commerce shall be subject to the provisions of section 4 relating to prices.

Any producer believing that any commerce in coal is not subject to the provisions of section 4 or to the provisions of the first paragraph of this section may file with the commission an application, verified by oath or affirmation for exemption, setting forth the facts upon which such claim is based. The filing of such application in good faith shall exempt the applicant, beginning with the third day following the filing of the application, from any obligation, duty, or liability imposed by section 4 with respect to the commerce covered by the application until such time as the commission shall act upon the application. If the commission has reason to believe that such exemption during the period prior to action upon the application is likely to permit evasion of the act with respect to commerce in coal properly subject to the provisions of section 4 or of the first paragraph of this section, it may suspend the exemption for a period not to exceed 10 days. Within a reasonable time after the receipt of any application for exemption the commission shall enter an order granting, or, after notice and opportunity for hearing, denying or otherwise disposing of such application. As a condition to the entry of and as a part of any order granting such application, the commission may require the applicant to apply periodically for renewals of such order and to file such periodic reports as the commission may find necessary or appropriate to enable it to determine whether the conditions supporting the exemption continue to exist. Any applicant aggrieved by an order denying or otherwise disposing of an application for exemption by the commission may obtain a review of such order in the manner provided in subsection (b) of section 6.

I desire to refute the idea that in section 4–A we seek to enlarge upon the constitutional power in respect of interstate commerce. We certainly do not intend to do it in 4–A, neither do we intend to limit the power to regulate interstate commerce as expressed in the Constitution. We have no purpose of using section 4–A as an enlargement of section 4. Section 4 has everything in it that is contained in section 4–A. What we tried to do was to stand upon the commerce clause as it has been interpreted by the Supreme Court in the Minnesota rate cases and in the Shreveport cases, as well as other cases.

We have attempted to set up simple machinery whereby a man may ascertain whether or not the thing that he does is such an intrastate transaction as not to be under the power of Congress and therefore not within the act. We set up this machinery in order that the small operator who may be engaged in an intrastate transaction that would not have a direct effect on interstate commerce may ascertain such fact. As we see it, if you have the power to regulate interstate commerce, you have the power to regulate those intrastate transactions that directly affect the interstate commerce.

THE PRICE OF COAL

It is argued that this bill will increase the price of coal to the consuming public. Fear always creeps in, and particularly when the effort is made to benefit people by legislation. The history is such that this argument can be successfully refuted unless there will be those who desire to purchase coal below the cost of production to the inevitable destruction of the industry itself and to an inevitable suffering on the part of the men and their families who produce it from the ground.

Before the enactment of the National Industrial Recovery Act the coal industry was prostrate and paralyzed. Cutthroat competition had reduced coal prices in many instances to as much as 75 cents per ton below cost of production. Then you had the stabilizing influence of voluntary action under the N. R. A. coal codes on the part of the coal producers. There was a lot of chiseling, to be sure, and a breaking down of the codes toward the end of their administration; but there was a definite stabilization of the industry, which benefited not only the operators but gave a living wage to the miners.

The facts are that the average realization per ton for the coal produced under N. R. A. was only 3 cents a ton more than the average production costs, and yet for the first time in years did the coal country make any money.

We insert herein a retail bituminous-coal price for prepared sizes in selected cities, per ton of 2,000 pounds, running from November 15, 1933, through September 15, 1936. This report was prepared by the bituminous coal commission.

We call particular attention to the price of coal for the winter of 1935–36. Certainly it was the most severe winter that we have had in many, many years. In days gone by the coal-consuming public paid a much greater price for their coal in such a winter or in anticipation of a severe winter. I feel certain that the Coal Conservation Act then on the books had something to do with the stabilization of coal prices and was quite decisive in the absence of any gouging of the coal consumers.

It is a surprising statement for one to make that this legislation will not bring about any appreciable increase, if increase at all, in the price of coal f. o. b. mines. For years the smaller sizes of coal that are used for industrial purposes have been sold below cost of production, which make it necessary for the prepared sizes, used for domestic purposes, to bring a price higher than it otherwise would if the industrial coal were not sold below cost of production. Thus it is apparent that the domestic consumer has been compelled to carry the burden of unduly cheap industrial coal. It must be remembered that about 70 percent of the total coal produced is used for industrial and railroad purposes and about 30 percent is used in the prepared sizes for domestic purposes. It is quite apparent that a small increase per ton in the industrial coal price would permit of a much larger reduction in the price per ton for domestic coal.

Under the Coal Act of 1935 the district boards in coordinating the prices slightly increased the price of industrial coal and were thus able to reduce materially the price of domestic coal. The spread between the price of domestic and industrial coal was reduced by 16.9 cents in the New England all-rail market; by 16.3 cents in the tidewater market; by 37.7 cents in the North Atlantic States; by 6.3 cents in the Illinois market outside of Chicago. The actual changes proposed by the district boards amounted in the North Atlantic States to an increase per ton of 7 cents—from $1.868 to $1.938—in the price of industrial coal, and a reduction in the price of lump coal of 30.7 cents per ton—from $2.251 to $1.944.

We have heard no one maintain that the domestic consumer should carry the burden occasioned by the industrial consumers beating down their price below cost of production. There are many factors which have compelled, under the common practice of the industry, the coal operator to sell his industrial coal below cost of production, and in many instances materially below cost of production. I feel certain that this will be fully developed in debate by others.

Yet there are those who will say "that immediately this act passes there will be a tremendous increase in the price of coal, and particularly to the domestic consumer, and certainly the consumers' interests should be looked after." We say to you that it has been looked after. In this act we provide a consumers' counsel, who not only can sit in and participate in hearings before the commission where the interest of the consuming public is involved, but he has the power to initiate action for the consumers' benefit.

We would again recall that there has been some experience in stabilization of the coal industry. Under N. R. A., with its stabilizing effects, for the first time did we see the operator and the miner at peace with each other. For the first time in our experience the miner received a fair price for his work. For the first time in some 15 years the coal operator received a reasonable profit upon his investment. For the first time in approximately 15 years he was out of the red. With reference to the consumer, I ask this question: Was any community in the United States gouged by increase in coal prices during the operation of N. R. A.?

When the Snyder-Guffey bill was under consideration in 1935 statements were made on the floor that the price of coal would immediately jump a dollar a ton. In that debate we stood here in the well and said that it would not. It did not. The bill was passed. The prices were not promulgated, but because of the fact that we had a Coal Conservation Act and a Coal Commission empowered to act, the miners were enabled to enter into a wage contract that has certainly benefited their position. The operator was enabled to avoid cutthroat competition, and the strange thing about it, coal prices to the consumers, particularly to the domestic consumer, saw no particular increase.

We again repeat that the coordinated prices that were just about ready for promulgation saw a fair increase in industrial coal and a consequent reduction in domestic price. I would call your attention to the fact that the cost of coal production that can be fairly allocated to labor is a small portion of the price to the consumer. Assume an average around $2 per ton, f. o. b. mine. This is inclusive of all costs. When we pay here, or elsewhere, $9 or $10 a ton for that same coal it is evident that the cost of transportation and the costs of distribution, including the profits of those who touch it on the way to the consumer's bin must be included.

I desire to repeat one particular statement. The actual changes proposed by the district boards under the old act in the North Atlantic cities amounted to an increase in the price of industrial coal of 7 cents a ton, from $1.86 to $1.93, and a reduction in the price of lump coal of 30.7 cents, from $2.25 to $1.94.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. I call attention to the fact that the price of coal to the purchaser at the mine is f. o. b. The price to the consumer is the price of the coal f. o. b. mine plus the freight rate and distributing costs. The freight rate constitutes from 46 to 63 or 65 percent of the cost to the ultimate consumer.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes. In many instances it is more than 100 percent of the cost at the mine. Take Boston, for instance. My recollection is that the transportation cost by tidewater amounts to $5 per ton. If you bought the coal at the mine for $2.50, the transportation charges laid down on the dock at Boston would be 200 percent of the cost of the coal at the mine.

FURTHER DISCUSSION OF THE CARTER CASE

We again remind that the majority decision in the Carter case did not hold invalid those sections of the 1935 act which look toward the regulation of price and unfair methods of competition. Their opinion is silent upon these questions; but, as stated, the minority opinions of Mr. Chief Justice Hughes and Associate Justices Brandeis, Stone, and Cardozo very definitely upheld the right to regulate prices and unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce and transactions in or affecting interstate commerce. We quote from Mr. Chief Justice Hughes' opinion:

> But that is not the whole case. The act also provides for the regulation of the prices of bituminous coal sold in interstate commerce and prohibits unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce. Undoubtedly transactions in carrying on interstate commerce are subject to the Federal power to regulate that commerce and the control of charges and the protection of fair competition in that commerce are familiar illustrations of the exercise of the power, as the Interstate Commerce Act, the Packers and Stockyards Act, and the Anti-Trust Acts abundantly show. The Court has repeatedly stated that the power to regulate interstate commerce among the several States is supreme and plenary (Minnesota Rate Case, 230 U. S. 352, 398). It is "complete in itself, and may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations, other than are prescribed in the Constitution" (Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 196). We are not at liberty to deny to the Congress with respect to interstate commerce, a power commensurate with that enjoyed by the States in the regulation of their internal commerce. (See Nebbia v. New York, 291 U. S. 502.)
> Whether the policy of fixing prices of commodities sold in interstate commerce is a sound policy is not for our consideration. The question of that policy, and of its particular applications, is for Congress. The exercise of the power of regulation is subject to the constitutional restriction of the due process clause, and if in fixing rates, prices, or conditions of competition, that requirement is transgressed, the judicial power may be invoked to the end that the constitutional limitation may be maintained (Interstate Commerce Commission v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 222 U. S. 541, 547; St. Joseph Stock Yards Co. v. United States, decided Apr. 27, 1936).
> In the legislation before us, Congress has set up elaborate machinery for the fixing of prices of bituminous coal sold in interstate commerce. That provision is attacked in limine. Prices have not yet been fixed. If fixed, they may not be contested. If contested, the act provides for review of the administrative ruling. If in fixing prices, due process is violated by arbitrary, capricious, or confiscatory action, judicial remedy is available. If an attempt is made to fix prices for sales in intrastate commerce, that attempt will also be subject to attack by appropriate action. In that relation it should be noted that in the Carter cases, the court below found that substantially all the coal mined by the Carter Coal Co. is sold f. o. b. mines and is transported into States other than those in which it is produced for the purpose of filling orders obtained from purchasers in such States. Such transactions are in interstate commerce (Savage v. Jones, 225 U. S. 501, 520). The court below also found that "the interstate distribution and sale and the intrastate distribution and sale" of the coal are so "intimately and inextricably connected" that "the regulation of interstate transactions of distribution and sale cannot be accomplished effectively without discrimination against interstate commerce unless transactions of intrastate distribution and sale be regulated." Substantially the same situation is disclosed in the Kentucky cases. In that relation, the Government invokes the analogy of transportation rates (The Shreveport case, 234 U. S. 342; Wisconsin Railroad Commission v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R. Co., 257 U. S. 563). The question will be the subject of consideration when it arises in any particular application of the act.

Upon what ground, then, can it be said that this plan for the regulation of transactions in interstate commerce in coal is beyond the constitutional power of Congress? The Court reaches that conclusion in the view that the invalidity of the labor provisions requires us to condemn the act in its entirety. I am unable to concur in that opinion. I think that the express provisions of the act preclude such a finding of inseparability.

This is admittedly a question of statutory construction; and hence we must search for the intent of Congress. And in seeking that intent we should not fail to give full weight to what Congress itself has said upon the very point. The act provides (sec. 15):

"If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby."

That is a flat declaration against treating the provisions of the act as inseparable. It is a declaration which Congress was competent to make. It is a declaration which reverses the presumption of indivisibility and creates an opposite presumption. (Utah Power & Light Co. v. Pfost, 286 U. S. 165, 184.)

I quote from the minority opinion of Mr. Justice Cardozo, in which Mr. Justice Brandeis and Mr. Justice Stone concur:

First: I am satisfied that the act is within the power of the Central Government insofar as it provides for minimum and maximum prices upon sales of bituminous coal in the transactions of interstate commerce and in those of intrastate commerce where interstate commerce is directly or intimately affected. Whether it is valid also in other provisions that have been considered and condemned in the opinion of the Court, I do not find it necessary to determine at this time. Silence must not be taken as importing acquiescence. Much would have to be written if the subject, even as thus restricted, were to be explored through all its implications, historical and economic, as well as strictly legal. The fact that the prevailing opinion leaves the price provisions open for consideration in the future makes it appropriate to forego a fullness of elaboration that might otherwise be necessary. As a system of price fixing, the act is challenged upon three grounds: (1) Because the governance of prices is not within the commerce clause; (2) because it is a denial of due process forbidden by the fifth amendment; and (3) because the standards for administrative action are indefinite, with the result that there has been an unlawful delegation of legislative power.

(1) With reference to the first objection, the obvious and sufficient answer is, so far as the act is directed to interstate transactions, that sales made in such conditions constitute interstate commerce and do not merely "affect" it (Dahnke-Walker Milling Co. v. Bondurant, 257 U. S. 282, 290; Flanagan v. Federal Coal Co., 267 U. S. 222, 225; Lemke v. Farmers Grain Co., 258 U. S. 50, 60; Public Utilities Commission v. Attleboro Steam & Electric Co., 273 U. S. 83, 90; Federal Trade Commission v. Pacific States Paper Trade Association, 273 U. S. 52, 64). To regulate the price for such transactions is to regulate commerce itself, and not alone its antecedent conditions or its ultimate consequences. The very act of sale is limited and governed. Prices in interstate transactions may not be regulated by the States (Baldwin v. Seelig, 294 U. S. 511). They must therefore be subject to the power of the Nation unless they are to be withdrawn altogether from governmental supervision (Cf. The Head Money Cases, 112 U. S. 580, 593; Story, Commentaries on the Constitution, sec. 1082). If such a vacuum were permitted, many a public evil incidental to interstate transactions would be left without a remedy. This does not mean, of course, that prices may be fixed for arbitrary reasons or in an arbitrary way. The commerce power of the Nation is subject to the requirement of due process like the police power of the States (Hamilton v. Kentucky Distilleries Co., 251 U. S. 146, 156; cf. Brooks v. United States, 267 U. S. 432, 436, 437; Nebbia v. New York, 291 U. S. 502, 524). Heed must be given to similar considerations of social benefit or detriment in marking the division between reason and oppression. The evidence is overwhelmingly that Congress did not ignore those considerations in the adoption of this act.

* * * * * * *

(2) The commerce clause being accepted as a sufficient source of power, the next inquiry must be whether the power has been exercised consistently with the fifth amendment. In the pursuit of that inquiry, Nebbia v. New York (291 U. S. 502) lays down the applicable principle. There a statute of New York prescribing a minimum price for milk was upheld against the objection that price fixing was forbidden by the fourteenth amendment. We found it a sufficient reason to uphold the challenged system that "the conditions or practices in an industry make unrestricted competition an inadequate safeguard of the consumer's interests, produce waste harmful to the public, threaten ultimately to cut off the supply of a commodity needed by the public, or portend the destruction of the industry itself" (291 U. S. at p. 538).

All this may be said, and with equal, if not greater force, of the conditions and practices in the bituminous coal industry, not only at the enactment of this statute in August 1935, but for many years before. Overproduction was at a point where free competition had been degraded into anarchy. Prices had been cut so low that profit had become impossible for all except a lucky handful. Wages came down along with prices and with profits. There were strikes, at times Nation-wide in extent, at other times spreading over broad areas and many mines, with the accompaniment of violence and bloodshed and misery and bitter feeling. The sordid tale is unfolded in many a document and treatise. During the 23 years between 1913 and 1935, there were 19 investigations or hearings by Congress or by specially created commissions with reference to conditions in the coal mines. The hope of betterment was faint unless the industry could be subjected to the compulsion of a code. In the weeks immediately preceding the passage of this act the country was threatened once more with a strike of ominous proportions. The plight of the industry was not merely a menace to owners and to mine workers: it was and had long been a menace to the public, deeply concerned in a steady and uniform supply of a fuel so vital to the national economy.

Congress was not condemned to inaction in the face of price wars and wage wars so pregnant with disaster. Commerce had been choked and burdened; its normal flow had been diverted from one State to another; there had been bankruptcy and waste and ruin alike for capital and for labor. The liberty protected by the fifth amendment does not include the right to persist in this anarchic riot. "When industry is grievously hurt, when producing concerns fail, when unemployment mounts and communities dependent upon profitable production are prostrated, the wells of commerce go dry" (Appalachian Coals, Inc., v. United States, 288 U. S. 344, 372). The free competition so often figured as a social good imports order and moderation and decent regard for the welfare of the group. Cf. The Sugar Institute, Inc., v. United States, — U. S. —, March 30, 1936. There is testimony in these records, testimony even by the assailants of the statute, that only through a system of regulated prices can the industry be stabilized and set upon the road of orderly and peaceful progress. If further facts are looked for, they are narrated in the findings as well as in congressional reports and a mass of public records. After making every allowance for difference of opinion as to the most efficient cure, the student of the subject is confronted with the indisputable truth that there were ills to be corrected, and ills that had a direct relation to the maintenance of commerce among the States without friction or diversion. An evil existing, and also the power to correct it, the lawmakers were at liberty to use their own discretion in the selection of the means.

(3) Finally, and in answer to the third objection to the statute in its price-fixing provisions, there has been no excessive delegation of legislative power. The prices to be fixed by the District Boards and the Commission must conform to the following standards: They must be just and equitable; they must take account of the weighted average cost of production for each minimum price area; they must not be unduly prejudicial or preferential as between districts or as between producers within a district; and they must reflect as nearly as possible the relative market value of the various kinds, qualities, and sizes of coal, at points of delivery in each common consuming market area, to the end of affording the producers in the several districts substantially the same opportunity to dispose of their coals on a competitive basis as has heretofore existed. The minimum for any district shall yield a return, per net ton, not less than the weighted average of the total costs per net ton of the tonnage of the minimum price area; the maximum for any mine, if a maximum is fixed, shall yield a return not less than cost plus a reasonable profit. Reasonable prices can as easily be ascertained for coal as for the carriage of passengers or property under the Interstate Commerce Act, or for the services of brokers in the stockyards (Tagg Bros. & Moorhead v. United States, 280 U. S. 420), or for the use of dwellings under the Emergency Rent Laws (Block v. Hirsh, 256 U. S. 135, 157; Marcus Brown Co. v. Feldman, 256 U. S. 170; Levy Leasing Co. v. Siegel, 258 U. S. 242), adopted at a time of excessive scarcity, when the laws of supply and demand no longer gave a measure for the ascertainment of the reasonable. The standards established by this act are quite as definite as others that have had the approval of this Court (New York Central Securities Corporation v. United States, 287 U. S. 12, 24; Federal Radio Commission v. Nelson Bros. Bond & Mortgage Co., 289 U. S. 266, 286; Tagg Bros. & Moorhead v. United States, supra; Mahler v. Eby, 264 U. S. 32). Certainly a bench of judges, not experts in the coal business, cannot say with assurance that members of a commission will be unable, when advised and informed by others experienced in the industry, to make the standards workable, or to overcome through the development of an administrative technique many obstacles and difficulties that might be baffling or confusing to inexperience or ignorance.

The price provisions of the act are contained in a chapter known as part II. The final subdivisions of that part enumerate certain forms of conduct which are denounced as "unfair methods of competition." For the most part the prohibitions are ancillary to the fixing of a minimum price. The power to fix a price carries with it the subsidiary power to forbid and prevent evasion. (Cf. United States v. Ferger, 250 U. S. 199.) The few prohibitions that may be viewed as separate are directed to situations that may never be realized in practice. None of the complainants threatens or expresses the desire to do these forbidden acts. As to those phases of the statute the suits are premature.

THE NEBBIA CASE

A late expression of the Supreme Court is the Nebbia case, in which the opinion is written by Justice Roberts, one of the five gentlemen comprising the majority in the Carter case. Immediately it is said that the Nebbia case involved a State statute, which is certainly true. It did involve a State statute, but in writing that voluminous, and I may say as well "illuminous", opinion Justice Roberts dealt with the power of the sovereign to the fixed prices.

In the Nebbia case certain facts were found to show the conditions which existed and the necessity for the legislation. That was paralleled by Mr. Justice Cardozo in the coal case in respect of the coal trade. He pointed out that more than 19 separate distinct hearings had been held since 1913, either by committees or subcommittees, by joint committees of Congress, or by a special coal commission. Someone who wants to throw a little pebble at the bill said, "You did not have any public hearings on this bill." If anybody is interested in public hearings, they can get a wagonload of hearings which have been held during the years from 1913 to this hour. Two years ago we had 660 pages of hearings upon the coal act then under consideration. May I again say that the Ways and Means Committee took the bill originally introduced by me on the first day of this session (H. R. 2015) and considered every word and every line of it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 15 additional minutes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, this bill came out of committee in its present completed form. It was stronger, I may say, from a legal viewpoint as well as from a practical viewpoint.

Getting back to the Nebbia case, which was handed down March 5, 1934, by the Court as it is presently constituted: The opinion was rendered by Mr. Justice Roberts—a very comprehensive opinion, covering 24 printed pages, resulting in the Supreme Court upholding a price-fixing statute enacted in New York which involved the price of milk, which was a matter of internal commerce. The Court discussed the investigation of this subject, the necessity of milk as an item of diet, the necessity of safeguarding its production and handling for human consumption which greatly increased its price. It dealt with the amount of investment and the economic loss to the people of the State through the curtailment or destruction of the dairy institution. It treated of the prevalence of unfair and destructive trade practices leading to the demoralization of prices in the metropolitan area and other markets. It showed beyond question that, for the benefit of industry, for the benefit of the consumer, stabilization of this industry was needed.

The retail price fixed by the Milk Control Board was 9 cents a quart. Nebbia, a proprietor, sold 2 quarts of milk and a 5-cent loaf of bread for 18 cents. He was convicted for violating the Milk Control Board's orders. The Supreme Court confirmed his conviction. Mr. Justice Roberts stated in that opinion:

> Under our form of Government the use of property and the making of contracts are normally matters of private and not of public concern. The general rule is that both shall be free of governmental interference. But neither property rights nor contract rights are absolute; for Government cannot exist if the citizen may at will use his property to the detriment of his fellows, or exercise his freedom of contract to work them harm. Equally fundamental with the private right is that of the public to regulate it in the common interest.
> The Court has repeatedly sustained curtailment of enjoyment of private property in the public interest. The owner's rights may be subordinated to the needs of other private owners whose pursuits are vital to the paramount interests of the community.
>
>
> Laws passed for the suppression of immorality, in the interest of health, to secure fair trade practices, and to safeguard the interests of depositors in banks, have been found consistent with due process. These measures not only affected the use of private property, but also interfered with the right of private contract. Other instances are numerous where valid regulation has restricted the right of contract, while less directly affecting property rights.
> The Constitution does not guarantee the unrestricted privilege to engage in a business or to conduct it as one pleases. Certain kinds of business may be prohibited; and the right to conduct a business, or to pursue a calling, may be conditioned. Regulation of a business to prevent waste of the State's resources may be justified. And statutes prescribing the terms upon which those conducting certain businesses may contract, or imposing terms if they do enter into agreements, are within the State's competency.
> Legislation concerning sales of goods, and incidentally affecting prices, has repeatedly been held valid. In this class fall laws forbidding unfair competition by the charging of lower prices in one locality than those exacted in another by giving trade inducements to purchasers and by other forms of price discrimination. The public policy, with respect to free competition, has engendered State and Federal statutes forbidding monopolies, which have been upheld. On the other hand, where the policy of the State dictated that a monopoly be granted, statutes having that effect have been held inoffensive to the constitutional guarantees. Moreover, the State or a municipality may itself enter into business in competition with private proprietors, and thus effectively, although indirectly, control the prices charged by them.
>
> In the light of the facts, the order appears not to be unreasonable or arbitrary, or without relation to the purpose to prevent ruthless competition from destroying the wholesale price structure on which the farmer depends for his livelihood, and the community for an assured supply of milk.
>
> But we are told that because the law essays to control prices it denies due process. Notwithstanding the admitted power to correct existing economic ills by appropriate regulation of business, even though an indirect result may be restriction of the freedom of contract or a modification of charges for services or the price of commodities, the appellant urges that direct fixation of prices is a type of regulation absolutely forbidden. His position is that the fourteenth amendment requires us to hold the challenged statute void for this reason alone. The argument runs that the public control of rates or prices is per se unreasonable and unconstitutional, save as applied to businesses affected with public interest; that a business so affected is one in which property is devoted to an enterprise of a sort which the public itself might appropriately undertake, or one whose owner relies on a public grant or franchise for the right to conduct the business, or in which he is bound to serve all who apply; in short, such as is commonly called a public utility; or a business in its nature a monopoly. The milk industry, it is said, possesses none of these characteristics, and, therefore, not being affected with a public interest, its charges may not be controlled by the State. Upon the soundness of this contention the appellant's case against the statute depends.
> We may as well say at once that the dairy industry is not in the accepted sense of the phrase a public utility. We think the appellant is also right in asserting that there is in this case no suggestion of any monopoly or monopolistic practice. It goes without saying that those engaged in the business are in no way dependent upon public grants or franchises for the privilege of conducting their activities. But if, as must be conceded, the industry is subject to regulation in the public interest, what constitutional principle bars the State from correcting existing maladjustments by legislation touching prices?
> We think there is no such principle. The due process clause makes no mention of sales or of prices any more than it speaks of business or contracts or buildings or other incidents of property. The thought seems nevertheless to have persisted that there is something peculiarly sacrosanct about the price one may charge for what he makes or sells, and that, however able to regulate other elements of manufacture or trade, with incidental effect upon price, the State is incapable of directly controlling the price itself. This view was negatived many years ago (Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113).
>
> • • • • • • •
> Many other decisions show that the private character of a business does not necessarily remove it from the realm of regulation of charges or prices. The usury laws fix the price which may be exacted for the use of money, although no business more essentially private in character can be imagined than that of loaning one's personal funds (Griffith v. Connecticut, 218 U. S. 563). Insurance agents' compensation may be regulated, though their contracts are private, because the business of insurance is considered one properly subject to public control (O'Gorman & Young v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 282 U. S. 251). Statutes prescribing in the public interest the amounts to be charged by attorneys for prosecuting certain claims, a matter ordinarily one of personal and private nature, are not a deprivation of due process (Frisbie v. United States, 157 U. S. 160; Capital Trust Co. v. Calhoun, 250 U. S. 208; Calhoun v. Massie, 253 U. S. 170; Newman v. Moyers, 253 U. S. 182; Yeiser v. Dysart, 267 U. S. 540; Margolin v. United States, 269 U. S. 93). A stockyards corporation while not a common carrier, nor engaged in any distinctly public employment, is doing a work in which the public has an interest, and its charges may be controlled (Cotting v. Kansas City Stockyards Co., 183 U. S. 79, 85). Private contract carriers, who do not operate under a franchise, and have no monopoly of the carriage of goods or passengers, may, since they use the highways to compete with railroads, be compelled to charge rates not lower than those of public carriers for corresponding services, if the State, in pursuance of public policy to protect the latter, so determines (Stephenson v. Binford, 287 U. S. 251, 274).

It is clear that there is no closed class or category of business affected with a public interest, and the function of courts in the application of the fifth and fourteenth amendments is to determine in each case whether circumstances vindicate the challenged regulation as a reasonable exertion of governmental authority or condemn it as arbitrary or discriminatory. The phrase "affected with a public interest" can, in the nature of things, mean no more than that an industry, for adequate reason, is subject to control for the public good. In several of the decisions of this court wherein the expressions "affected with a public interest", and "clothed with a public use", have been brought forward as the criteria of the validity of price control, it has been admitted that they are not susceptible of definition and form an unsatisfactory test of the constitutionality of legislation directed at business practices or prices. These decisions must rest finally, upon the basis that the requirements of due process were not met, because the laws were found arbitrary in their operation and effect. But there can be no doubt that upon proper occasion and by appropriate measures the State may regulate a business in any of its aspects, including the prices to be charged for the products or commodities it sells.

* * * * * * *

Where the public interest was deemed to require the fixing of minimum prices that expedient has been sustained. If the lawmaking body within its sphere of government concludes that conditions or practices in an industry make unrestricted competition an inadequate safeguard of the consumer's interest, produce waste harmful to the public, threaten ultimately to cut off the supply of a commodity needed by the public, or portend the destruction of the industry itself, appropriate statutes passed in an honest effort to correct the threatened consequences may not be set aside because the regulation adopted fixes prices reasonably deemed by the legislature to be fair to those engaged in the industry and to the consuming public. And this is especially so where, as here, the economic maladjustment is one of price, which threatens harm to the producer at one end of the series and the consumer at the other. The Constitution does not secure to anyone liberty to conduct his business in such fashion as to inflict injury upon the public at large or upon any substantial group of the people. Price control, like any other form of regulation, is unconstitutional only if arbitrary, discriminatory, or demonstrably irrelevant to the policy the legislature is free to adopt, and, hence, an unnecessary and unwarranted interference with individual liberty.

Tested by these considerations we find no basis in the due-process clause of the fourteenth amendment for condemning the provisions of the agriculture and markets law here drawn into question.

We have quoted at length from the Nebbia case dealing with the question of sovereign power to regulate price of matters within its jurisdiction, but we do not rely upon this case alone. We have set forth in some length the other decisions of the Supreme Court upon which we rely, but we emphasize the Nebbia case with the lengthy quotation therefrom, because Mr. Justice Roberts wrote this opinion about a year before the Carter case. If he had any change in mind relative to the power of Congress to regulate prices and unfair methods of competition within its sphere, it would have been an easy matter to have invalidated those points of the statute.

OTHER PROVISIONS

There are many other provisions which we would like to discuss in detail, but time does not permit. We would call specific attention to the report of the Ways and Means Committee in regard to the commission, consumer's counsel, organization, marketing, minimum prices and marketing rules and regulations, maximum prices, changes on complaint, prohibited sales and contracts, captive coal, and the labor provisions. Anyone interested can find a short succinct statement in regard to these items as well as others referred to therein.

CONCLUSION

We have endeavored to meet the court decisions. For instance, in the Coal Act of 1935 we empowered the district boards to establish prices. This was a delegation of congressional power to the industry to fix prices, because the district boards were composed of members of the industry with the exception of one man representing labor. You find no such provision in this bill. If the Supreme Court has held anything, it has held that Congress cannot delegate to persons outside of the Government legislative authority. Congress has not that power. It makes no difference how well intentioned one may be, it just cannot be done. If we wanted to delegate the power to them we could not do it, because the Supreme Court said in the N. R. A. case and in the coal case that Congress cannot delegate legislative authority to persons outside the Government. So, instead of authorizing these boards to fix the minimum prices, in this bill we authorize them to propose the prices, and the minimum prices are established by a Federal agency, the bituminous coal commission.

My best information is that there is just a small minority that is not favoring this bill in its present form today. Last Monday week, March 1, I believe it was, there was a meeting of the opponents in New York. It is no secret who was present.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Kentucky 5 additional minutes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I understand that representatives of the Pittsburgh Coal Co. were present. They are in this small group opposing this legislation and any other legislation that will stand up in court. I understand Mr. James Walter Carter, who took the coal case to the Supreme Court, was there. And, lo and behold, this gentleman who financed the fight against the original coal bill, today, I understand, wants a bill now passed that will delegate the power to him and other operators to fix the price, something which he railed against successfully in the Court as an unconstitutional delegation of power. I think that when you come to the end of the rope you will find some thirty or forty million tonnage that is against this bill, whereas in 1936 there were 400,000,000 tons of bituminous coal produced and used in this country.

There is very little coal in my district. There are a very few small mines. I do not have the interest of a Representative of a coal-producing district, but that does not mean that I have any less interest in legislation that will stabilize this great industry. As a boy and as a young man I traveled through the Kentucky coal fields and through the West Virginia coal fields. You might not believe it unless you were here during the days when we had the congressional ball games, but I used to play a little baseball. I played ball in their coal camps, upon their ball teams. I mixed and mingled with them. I became familiar with the manner in which they lived. Houses on stilts, 2 to 10 in a family, working 1 or 2 days a week. Hard going.

I hope there is no spot in our fair land where it exists now, but in the old days the coal operator used to go out and bring men in on transportation, as they called it. They would round up men and their families and herd them into trains. They had armed guards at the doors of the cars to prevent them from getting off the train until they took them up in the hollow. They had mine guards at the mouth of the hollow to keep them from coming out until they paid for their transportation and other amounts owing the company. The prices that were charged at commissaries were exorbitant. It was almost impossible to get even, and therefore almost impossible to get out of the hollow. It was the nearest approach to peonage that I ever observed. In most of our country those things are history.

When you come to consider this bill, please understand that what we desire is stabilization of the industry that will permit a fair return upon the investment to be made under the control of a Federal agency, so that there will be an opportunity for a fair wage to be paid to men who take their lives in their hands when they go down into the bowels of the earth to produce this necessity.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Is it not a fact also that by the tax imposed there will be no additional financial responsibility for the administration of the act?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is correct. The tax raises $4,000,000, and the cost of administration will be considerably less.

I close with a request that you join with us and pass this bill, which means so much to the folks affected. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, under leave to extend, I insert the letter of the Attorney General previously referred to in my speech:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 17, 1937.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In response to your request of yesterday on behalf of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives for an opinion of the Attorney General as to the constitutional validity of H. R. 2015, a bill to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal, and for other purposes, may I respectfully call to the attention of the committee the reasons which impel me to refrain from compliance with your suggestion.

The Department of Justice was created by Congress with power to its officers to represent the Government in litigation and to advise the President and the heads of departments in the execution of their duties. There is nothing in the legislation relating to the powers of the Department which authorizes the Attorney General to give such an opinion as you request, and, so far as I am advised, no such opinion has ever been given. It seems clear that embarrassment in administration would result if numerous requests of this character were complied with or if the Department was called upon to enforce acts previously stated to be invalid by an Attorney General.

The attitude of the Department of Justice has been consistent upon the propriety of acceding to requests for opinions by the legislative branch of the Government. A concise summary covering this attitude appears in a memorandum printed in the proceedings of the Senate of March 26, 1936, volume 80, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 4379, reading as follows:

"IN RE SENATE RESOLUTION 228

"The authority of the Attorney General to render opinions is contained in sections 303 and 304 of title 5 of the United States Code. These sections read as follows:

"'303. Opinions and advice of Attorney General; to President. The Attorney General shall give his advice and opinion upon questions of law, whenever requested by the President' (R. S., sec. 354; Feb. 27, 1877, ch. 69, sec. 1, 19 Stat. 241).

"'304. Same to heads of executive departments. The head of any executive department may request the opinion of the Attorney General on any questions of law arising in the administration of his department' (R. S., sec. 356).

In accordance with these provisions, which authorize the rendering of opinions to the President and the heads of departments only, it has been a well-recognized custom from the beginning that the Attorney General will refrain from giving opinions requested by other branches of the Government. The subject was treated comprehensively by Attorney General Mitchell in April 1932 in response to a request of the Senate for an opinion with respect to certain railroad mergers. The response of the Attorney General to that request emphasized the fact that Congress has not required, nor indeed authorized, the Attorney General to render opinions to Congress or either House, and that for over a hundred years the Attorneys General have deemed themselves precluded from giving such opinions. Attorney General Mitchell cited a number of instances of this kind dating back to an early statement of Attorney General Wirt in 1820 in response to a request of the House of Representatives. Continuing, Attorney General Mitchell stated:

"Under date of February 14, 1929, my immediate predecessor declined the request of the House Committee on Expenditures in the executive departments for an opinion, and on June 3, 1930, I felt obliged to decline an opinion requested by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

"Congress has accepted this long-standing interpretation of the law and has never attempted by law to enlarge the powers or duties of the Attorney General so as to require him to give opinions to either House of Congress or to committees thereof. Having in mind the constitutional separation of the functions of the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of the Government, there has always been a serious question whether the principle of that separation would be violated by a statute attempting to make the Attorney General a legal adviser of the legislative branch, and as a matter of governmental policy the wisdom of constituting as legal adviser of either House of Congress an official of the executive department, who sits in the President's Cabinet and acts as his legal adviser, has always been open to doubt.

"When pending legislation affecting the Department of Justice has been referred to Attorneys General for comment or suggestion, it has been their practice to suggest such legal points as are pertinent and which ought to receive consideration by committees, but that practice has never properly involved any formal legal opinions from Attorneys General and has no resemblance to a request for an opinion as to the effect of an existing statute" (36 Op. Atty. Gen. 532).

Reasons of policy support this recognized practice. Except where required for administrative conduct, it would be inadvisable and inappropriate for the Attorney General, who is charged with the conduct of litigation for the Government, to render official opinions in a quasi-judicial capacity on matters which may become the subject of litigation.

INSTANCES ILLUSTRATING THE CONSISTENT VIEW OF ATTORNEYS GENERAL THAT THEY HAVE NO POWER TO RENDER OPINIONS TO EITHER HOUSE OF CONGRESS

Attorney General Wirt (1 Op. 335): "The Attorney General may give his advice and opinion upon questions of law only when required by the President or requested by the heads of the departments. It is not his duty to give official opinions to the House of Representatives."

Attorney General Brewster (18 Op. 87): "The authority of the Attorney General to give his official opinion is limited by the laws which create and define his office and will not permit him to give advice at the call of either House of Congress, or of Congress itself, but only to the President or the head of an executive department." This was said in response to a request for the opinion of the Attorney General made by a resolution of the House of Representatives.

Attorney General Crittenden (5 Op. 561): The Attorney General declined to advise a committee of Congress as to the validity of a claim pending before the committee because "to answer the questions you have been pleased to propose does not fall within the limits of the duty, or legal power, of the Attorney General but would be a wide departure from his appointed sphere of action."

Attorney General Evarts (12 Op. 544): In a communication to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs the Attorney General declined to give his opinion on a joint resolution pending before the committee. He said that "it has been uniformly considered that the powers and duties of the Attorney General were limited and defined by the statutes passed by Congress on the subject and that any exercise of official action beyond the statutory authority conferred upon him was an unwarrantable assumption on his part * * *." That "it was not competent for the Attorney General to give opinions concerning any matters pending in Congress upon the request of either of the Houses or of any committee."

Attorney General Mitchell (36 Op. 532): "The Attorney General (Apr. 25, 1932) felt obliged to decline to give an opinion in response to a Senate resolution on legal phases of the subject matter of the resolution, and cites an unbroken line of authority for more than a hundred years in support of his position."

In considering the bill in question, the committee may find helpful a discussion of the regulation of prices presented to the Supreme Court in the litigation over the Bituminous Coal Conservation Act of 1935. In that act the Congress undertook the "stabilization of the industry through the regulation of labor and the regulation of prices." The Department's argument, supporting the validity of the regulation of prices, is set out at length in the Government's brief in the Carter case at pages 102 to 196. Several copies of this brief accompany this letter. In this brief your committee will find a discussion of the constitutional issues in similar form to that contained in the memorandum on the social security bill, to which you have made reference.

The regulation of prices, proposed in H. R. 2015, is bottomed upon the same grant of power which supported similar regulations in the act of 1935. There are no subsequent or additional precedents known to me which would affect the position taken by the Department in presenting the Carter case.

I feel sure your committee will appreciate the reasons which have led to the long-continued practice of the Department as to such requests and which, in my opinion, require me to follow the precedents referred to in this letter.

Very respectfully yours,

STANLEY REED,
Acting Attorney General.

HON. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON,
Chairman, Ways and Means Committee,
House of Representatives.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, we have just listened to one of the most convincing and most exhaustive speeches I have ever heard in this Congress. The reason I feel more or less qualified to pass this compliment on this speech is that I have made a very exhaustive study of this subject myself and I find it would be surplusage if I were to attempt to say many of the things I had expected to say in view of the comprehensive and complete manner in which my colleague, Mr. VINSON of Kentucky, has handled this subject.

For years I have been in favor of doing what we hope this bill will do. Long before the first Vinson-Guffey bill was ever introduced I was in favor of lending aid to this failing industry. I did a great deal of work in that direction in the hope that I could formulate a plan that would have a tendency to stabilize this industry.

I voted for the first Guffey coal bill. I voted for it because of what it attempted to do and not so much for the method in which it attempted to do it. In other words, when the Supreme Court found that the Guffey bill was unconstitutional I agreed with the Supreme Court. I had no inclination to abuse the Supreme Court or to fall out with it because of its decision.

It might not be amiss at this time to review the steps through which this bill has taken its devious course.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD], in his opening statement on the rule, went into that rather in detail. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] has done likewise. To understand the history of legislation is often to understand its merits. I find in the consideration of any bill there are only two or three cardinal principles, there are only two or three objectives, there are only two or three points of difference; and a review of the tedious course this bill has taken may refresh the recollection of some of us and may help someone to come to a conclusion as to how he should vote, or it may clear up some things for him.

The first bill provided and sought to do two things: It sought to fix prices and to regulate wages. The Supreme Court held that it could not regulate wages. It further held that these two provisions were so bound together that they were inseparable. It has been said on the floor of the House in times gone by that the decision of the Supreme Court against the original Guffey bill was a 5-to-4 decision. That is not the case. The decision on the Guffey bill was a very comprehensive decision and it was also very, very complex. You may take it as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] did from one angle, and the vote may appear to show one trend, or you may take it from another angle and be justified in concluding that the vote of the Supreme Court was unanimous in another direction. Let me explain. Five members held the act unconstitutional by claiming that the labor provisions were unconstitutional and that they were inseparable. They declined to decide whether the price-fixing provision was constitutional if separated. Chief Justice Hughes decided that the provisions were separable and that the labor provisions were unconstitutional, but that the price fixing under the Nebbia case was constitutional. This would make the decision at least a 6-to-3 decision on the labor provisions. Justice Cardozo, speaking for himself and two others, held that the provisions were separable and the price-fixing provision was constitutional. This would make the decision stand as a decision of four clearly for the constitutionality of the price-fixing provision, with five not speaking definitely as to how they would stand if the provisions were separated. Thus it is perfectly possible that if the provisions were separated the full Court of nine might be favorable to holding the labor provisions unconstitutional and holding the price-fixing provision constitutional.

What does this bill do? This bill is very similar to the bill we passed last year and which failed to be considered in the Senate before adjournment. Last year's bill sought to do what? It sought to provide a means whereby the coal industry could be stabilized by the regulation of prices. If anybody asks you if price fixing is in this bill you must say that it is; it is a price-fixing bill; there is no question about that.

Is price fixing constitutional? What does the Supreme Court say in the cases as to whether price fixing is constitutional? Probably the most logical way to consider the subject is to consider what provision of the Constitution does this bill depend upon for its authority. There is no question but that it depends upon the commerce clause. This is the clause I refer to:

> Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes.

The power "to regulate commerce" is a complete power and may be exercised to the utmost extent. In the exercise of this power Congress owes no obligation whatever to State legislatures and is restricted only by the limitations prescribed by the Constitution with reference to due process. In other words, Congress can regulate interstate commerce, to all practical purposes, so long as it does not work confiscation.

Early in the history of the country the power of Congress to regulate commerce reached the Supreme Court through the case of Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheaton, 1, 96). That was a case where Robert Fulton and others were by virtue of a New York statute claiming exclusive right to navigate all waters in New York. Ogden, holding under Fulton and relying upon the New York statute, sought to prevent Gibbons, who had a license from the United States Government, to operate on the navigable waters of the United States. The Court held the New York statute to be unconstitutional and further said in connection with the power of Congress to regulate commerce:

> This power, like all other vested in Congress, is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the Constitution.

This case of Gibbons against Ogden is a star case on this subject. It has been supported many times. Another great case on this subject and which supports Gibbons against Ogden in the case known as the Minnesota Rate case (230 U. S. 399). In this decision the following language appears:

> There is no room in our scheme of government for the assertion of State power in hostility to the authorized exercise of Federal power. The authority of Congress extends to every part of interstate commerce, and to every instrumentality or agency by which it is carried on; and the full control by Congress of the subjects committed to its regulation is not to be denied or thwarted by the commingling of interstate and intrastate operations.

Another later case which shows the extent to which Congress may go in its control of commerce is the case of Houston Railway Company v. United States (234 U. S. 343). The syllabus of this case contains the following language:

> While Congress does not possess authority to regulate the internal commerce of a State, as such, it does possess power to foster and protect interstate commerce, although in taking necessary measures so to do it may be necessary to control intrastate transactions of interstate carriers.
> The use by the State of an instrument of interstate commerce in a discriminatory manner so as to inflict injury on any part of that commerce is a ground for Federal intervention; nor can a State authorize a carrier to do that which Congress may forbid and has forbidden.

The above cases are sufficient to prove that Congress has individual power to regulate interstate commerce. The question yet remains whether Congress has the power to fix prices.

There is an abundance of authority to prove that Congress has the power to regulate railroad rates. To do this Congress set up the Interstate Commerce Commission, which has been operating for many years. The work of this Commission has been gradually expanding until it is now one of the great departments of Government. It fixes rates by reason of a decree by Congress to it of the right to fix rates.

Is rate fixing entirely analogous to price fixing? If, so, there is no question as to the constitutionality of this coal bill. The fixing of railroad rates is a very prominent factor in the fixing of the price of any commodity which is carried in railroad transportation. The average price paid by the consumer for coal in the United States is made up largely from transportation charges. In many cases the cost of production of the coal is less than one-fourth of the total cost to the consumer. In many cases the cost of transportation is twice and three times the price of the cost of the coal. If the Interstate Commerce Commission can fix the price of transportation, its power over the price to the consumer will be much more than the power of the bituminous coal commission over the price to the consumer, as provided in this bill.

The Supreme Court, in the case of the Appalachian Coal v. United States (288 U. S., p. 344), upheld a selling agreement in which companies representing 73 percent of the total coal production of the United States had entered into—a selling agreement the purpose of which was to stabilize the price of coal.

The Supreme Court, in the case of Tag v. U. S. (280 U. S., p. 420), held that laws passed by Congress regulating fees charged by "market agencies" rendering stockyard service in interstate-commerce matters are constitutional. In my rather cursory search I have not been able to find a case directly in point to what is attempted to be done by way of price fixing in the present bill, but great confidence is expressed by the Attorney General's Department and others who vouch for the constitutionality of this bill in the case of Nebbia v. New York (291 U. S., p. 502), to which I shall refer later.

Some advocates of this bill lay great stress on the statement made by Justice Hughes in his opinion heretofore referred to in the original Guffey Coal Act case, where he says:

> We are not at liberty to deny to Congress, with respect to interstate commerce, a power commensurate with that enjoyed by the States in the regulation of their internal commerce.

Justice Hughes makes this statement, and cites Nebbia against New York as the basis of such a statement. If Chief Justice Hughes is correct in his assumption that because of the decision in the Nebbia case, which holds conclusively that a State has a right to fix prices in its control of intrastate commerce, that then, and by the same reasoning, Congress would have a right to fix prices for interstate commerce, then there can be no question about the constitutionality of this bill. Let me state it in another way: Under the terms of the Constitution the States gave the Federal Government the full authority and right and power to control interstate commerce. They did this because their experience under the Articles of Confederation had shown that this question of commerce between them and among them was prolific of more disturbance than any other question. They were glad to get rid of it, and turned it over to the Federal Government under the Constitution. They, by the same token, retained the full right, authority, and power to control intrastate commerce. In the Nebbia case the Supreme Court has decided that a State under State law has the right to fix the price of milk. Then, without any decision on the point, can it be considered that the Federal Government has the same right with reference to interstate commerce? Since the Nebbia case is generally looked upon as furnishing the answer to the question as to whether the price-fixing provisions of this bill are constitutional, I think it apropos to submit a brief of that case.

The New York Legislature passed an act to "fix minimum and maximum * * * retail prices to be charged by * * * stores to consumers for consumption off the premises where sold." The law provided that the minimum price of milk should be 9 cents per quart.

Nebbia sold 2 quarts of milk and a 5-cent loaf of bread for 18 cents and was convicted for violation of the board's order. He appealed on the ground that the statute and order of the board contravenes the equal-protection clause and the due-process clause of the fourteenth amendment.

The real question is whether the Federal Constitution prohibits the State from fixing the selling price of milk.

Extracts from the opinion of Justice Roberts:

> Under our form of government the use of property and the making of contracts are normally matters of private and not of public concern. The general rule is that both shall be free of governmental interference. But neither property rights nor contract rights are absolute; for government cannot exist if the citizen may at will use his property to the detriment of his fellows or exercise his freedom of contract to work them harm. Equally fundamental with the private right is that of the public to regulate it in the common interest. * * *
> Thus has this Court from the early days affirmed that the power to promote the general welfare is inherent in government. Touching the matters committed to it by the Constitution, the United States possesses the power, as do the States in their sovereign capacity touching all subjects jurisdiction of which is not surrendered to the Federal Government. These correlative rights, that of the citizen to exercise exclusive dominion over property and freely to contract about his affairs, and that of the State to regulate the use of property and the conduct of business, are always in collision. No exercise of the private right can be imagined which will not in some respect, however slight, affect the public; no exercise of the legislative prerogative to regulate the conduct of the citizen which will not to some extent abridge his liberty or affect his property. But subject only to constitutional restraint, the private right must yield to the public need. * * *
>
> And the guaranty of due process, as has often been held, demands only that the law shall not be unreasonable, arbitrary or capricious, and that the means selected shall have a real and substantial relation to the object sought to be attained. * * *
>
> The Court has repeatedly sustained curtailment of enjoyment of private property in the public interest. The owner's rights may be subordinated to the needs of other private owners whose pursuits are vital to the paramount interests of the community. The State may control the use of property in various ways; may prohibit advertising billboards except of a prescribed size and location, or their use for certain kinds of advertising; may in certain circumstances authorize encroachments by party walls in cities; may fix the height of buildings, the character of materials, and methods of construction, the adjoining area which must be left open, and may exclude from residential sections offensive trades, industries, and structures likely injuriously to affect the public health or safety; or may establish zones within which certain types of buildings or businesses are permitted and others excluded * * *.
> Certain kinds of business may be prohibited; and the right to conduct a business, or to pursue a calling, may be conditioned. Regulation of a business to prevent waste of the State's resources may be justified. And statutes prescribing the terms upon which those conducting certain businesses may contract, or imposing terms if they do enter into agreements, are within the State's competency * * *.
> Legislation concerning sales of goods, and incidentally affecting prices, has repeatedly been held valid. In this class fall laws forbidding unfair competition by the charging of lower prices in one locality than those exacted in another, by giving trade inducements to purchasers, and by other forms of price discrimination.

It is not necessary that business be "impressed with a public interest" or be a "monopoly" in order to be subject to price-fixing legislation.

> But if, as must be conceded, the industry is subject to regulation in the public interest, what constitutional principle bars the State from correcting existing maladjustments by legislation touching prices? We think there is no such principle. The due-process clause makes no mention of sales or of prices any more than it speaks of business or contracts or buildings or other incidents of property. The thought seems, nevertheless, to have persisted that there is something peculiarly sacrosanct about the price one may charge for what he makes or sells, and that, however able to regulate other elements of manufacture or trade, with incidental effect upon price, the State is incapable of directly controlling the price itself. This view was negatived many years ago (Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113).
> "Property does become clothed with a public interest when used in a manner to make it of public consequence, and affect the community at large" (p. 126). Thus understood, "affected with a public interest" is the equivalent of "subject to the exercise of the police power"; and it is plain that nothing more was intended by the expression. * * *
> In German Alliance Insurance Co. v. Lewis (233 U. S. 389) a statute fixing the amount of premiums for fire insurance was held not to deny due process. * * *
> Many other decisions show that the private character of a business does not necessarily remove it from the realm of regulation of charges or prices. The usury laws fix the price which may be exacted for the use of money, although no business more essentially private in character can be imagined than that of loaning one's personal funds (Griffith v. Connecticut, 218 U. S. 563).
>
> Insurance agents' compensation may be regulated, though their contracts are private, because the business of insurance is considered one properly subject to public control (O'Gorman & Young v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 282 U. S. 251). * * *
>
> A stockyards corporation, "while not a common carrier, nor engaged in any distinctively public employment, is doing a work in which the public has an interest", and its charges may be controlled (Cotting v. Kansas City Stockyards Co., 183 U. S. 79, 85). * * *
> So far as the requirement of due process is concerned, and in the absence of other constitutional restriction, a state is free to adopt whatever economic policy may reasonably be deemed to promote public welfare, and to enforce that policy by legislation adapted to its purpose. The courts are without authority either to declare such policy, or, when it is declared by the legislature, to override it. * * *
>
> And it is equally clear that if the legislative policy be to curb unrestrained and harmful competition by measures which are not arbitrary or discriminatory it does not lie with the courts to determine that the rule is unwise. * * *
> Price control, like any other form of regulation, is unconstitutional only if arbitrary, discriminatory, or demonstrably irrelevant to the policy the legislature is free to adopt, and hence an unnecessary and unwarranted interference with individual liberty. * * *

Having disposed of the constitutional questions involved in this bill, let me talk to you for a few minutes about the coal industry. The next great question that concerns the American people in the consideration of this bill is: What effect is it going to have on the price of coal? Mr. Chairman, many people have had a misconception of the elements that make up the cost of coal. Many people think that the total cost that they pay for coal goes to the miner and the operator. They have long had a prejudice against both. They do not give the miner the credit that he deserves, and they condemn the operator for things that he has not been guilty of. Some of this comes from the fact that the miners union has assumed and carried more of the burden of the fight that the laboring man has made in his fight upward toward economic freedom than has any other group. For nearly 50 years this organization has fought against great odds for improvements in working conditions. Today the two greatest labor leaders of the world—John L. Lewis and William Green—are products of this organization. They are today representing different views, but the idea for one big union in each plant or industry seems to be in the ascendency and is now the plan which the miners' union has been operating. Many of the battles between the miners and the mine owners could have been averted if the industry had been in such an economic condition as would permit the mine owners to pay better wages and provide better conditions.

The mine owner and the miner do not get one-half of the money the consumer pays for his coal. On the average, the cost at the mine is generally only about one-third of the cost to the consumer, and in many cases it is not one-fourth or even one-sixth of the cost. The mine operator and the miners are not getting ready to gouge anybody. They are not asking for an increased price.

Suppose they did ask for an increase in price? What is the price of coal? While coal is a wonderful commodity and a necessary and basic national commodity, yet the price at the mine averaged last year from $1.75 to $1.90 per ton. If the price is increased 10 percent at the mine, it would only be an increase of 17 cents. Seventeen cents would be a great increase for the miners and operators, but it would be a small increase to the consumer who pays $10 or $12 per ton for the same coal. This small increase of 17 cents would be absorbed several times before the coal reached the consumer if this bill becomes a law and the coal industry is stabilized and a free, steady, all-the-year-around flow of coal is established. I think I have the largest mine in the United States in my district. Whether it is the largest or not, it is one of the largest mines in the country. It will produce 4,000 tons a day. This mine is modern in every way and equipped with every modern safety appliance. But in spite of this I saw 80 dead bodies taken out of this mine and laid in a row around the wall of a little store building. While we are considering the price that we are to pay for coal, why not think for a moment of the price that the miner pays when he mines the coal? Seventy-nine thousand have been carried out dead in the last 30 years. Thousands upon thousands have been injured. Coal is a necessary and useful commodity and we cannot do without it. Since it is produced so cheaply, why not pass this bill whose sole purpose is to stabilize this industry, thereby benefiting all parties concerned, and reviving an industry that should be kept in a thriving condition for the protection of the Nation itself?

I am trying to present this thought to you, and I repeat it: In spite of the fact the mining industry is 100 percent more hazardous than any other industry—and the Government figures will show that—the miners and the operators are not clamoring for an increase in prices. I will be glad to furnish you out of my district every day 1,000 carloads of the finest coal you ever saw. We will roll it out every day. You come and get it and pay us less than $2 a ton and our miners and our operators will be satisfied. The miner will receive his maximum wage and the operator will be satisfied. His taxes will be paid and for the first time since 1922 he will be out of the red.

It is a sad and appalling fact that this great industry, in which 450,000 people are engaged, this great industry upon which so many of you who live in the far North and Northwest depend for your very lives, must be misunderstood by you, when we will furnish you with coal at this ridiculously low price of less than $2 per ton.

What do you pay for coal in Minneapolis? Eight, ten, or twelve dollars a ton. What do you pay for it out yonder beyond Minneapolis and St. Paul? Ten and twelve dollars a ton. But what price do we get for it? We receive an average of about $1.72. That was about the average price of all coal in the United States last year.

You may ask me what is going to be the effect of the passage of this bill on selling prices. Let me give the Government statistics on the price of fuel for the past few years to domestic consumers. Let us take the city of Minneapolis, for instance. What was the price of fuel back in 1927? On an index of 100, it was 100.5. What was it in 1930? It was 101.8. In 1932 it had come down to 97. What was it in 1933, when the industry was flat on its back? It was 91. What was it in 1936? Just 91, exactly the same.

Mr. SIROVICH. How about New York?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. New York will take some time to find. Let me give you the figures for Cincinnati, which is near a coal-producing section. In 1926 it was 106.1; in 1936, 95.4, considerably lower.

Here is New York: 102.2 in 1926 and in 1936, 88.3, a very marked reduction of 14 points. That is the history all over the country. Chicago is the greatest market in the country for bituminous coal. In 1926 the index figure for domestic fuel there was 100. In 1936 it was down to 91. In all seriousness, how can anybody make the claim that it is the intention of those in the industry to gouge the people for an increase in price?

Mr. Chairman, do not get scared of that bugaboo, because I say to you that I know that it is not now in the mind of my people to demand an increase in price.

We are not asking for an increase. Then you ask how do we expect to profit by this act? May I say if this bill does not do certain things it ought to be defeated. If it does not result in stabilization of the industry we should not pass it. We want stabilization of the industry. What do I mean by that? Suppose you live in Minneapolis and you have $1,000,000 invested in a plant. You have the plant all equipped to burn coal. Have you not some right to look to the coal-producing sections of the country to furnish you with coal in a free, easy way? The coal-producing territory is only a small fraction of the total area of our country, more than half of the States do not produce any coal. Many of the States only produce a small amount. Eighty percent of the coal of this country is produced in five States—Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Kentucky, Ohio, and Illinois.

Mr. Chairman, if coal is a necessity, if coal is produced in a very limited, restricted area, if great sections of our country with millions of people and great manufacturing and commercial enterprises are dependent for their very existence upon coal, do you not think coal is impressed with a national interest to such an extent as to recommend it for national protection? That is what our people want. A man living in Minneapolis, instead of having to store his coal, instead of having to provide great expensive bins for his coal which he must buy ahead of time, and put out great quantities of cash capital for it, because he must check against strikes and all kinds of impediments, should have a guaranty of a free and easy flow of coal. That would be a great benefit to him. It would be a great benefit to the industry. That is what I mean by stabilization. This would be beneficial to the consumer and beneficial to the producers. It would also be beneficial to the transportation agencies that move the coal. That the coal industry is in desperate financial straits can be verified by Government statistics which show that ever since 1922 this industry has sold its production below cost, for its story is told in red figures.

Let me tell you what happened in 1936. In 1935 we produced in this country about 385,000,000 tons of coal. In 1936 we produced over 400,000,000 tons of coal. Would you not think that the industry would be better off in 1936 than 1935? Certainly, you would think so, but do you know that the industry was worse off in 1936 than in 1935, even though it produced more coal? Why? Because of cutthroat competition. Why is there so much cutthroat competition? The answer is that an industry that is fighting for its life is imposed upon and sales below cost are often made in order to keep the plant moving and in order to meet immediate needs. I am told that there is a small railroad in this country that has been getting its coal for 26 cents per ton. You know what a man will do when he has his back to the wall or when he is facing bankruptcy.

Let me also tell you about the general price. The general price to the big consumer has always been less than the price to the small consumer. Why? Because he has the capacity and the power to squeeze down the price.

The testimony before our committee shows that the board of education in one of the large cities of this country, because it was a large consumer of coal, got its coal at nearly half the price that was paid by the people in this same city. Why? Because it took advantage of the mine owner and drove a hard bargain. The mine had to have an outflow for its output. The equipment in an idle mine deteriorates more rapidly than in a working mine. It had to keep its men working because it had the responsibility of keeping a pay roll for those men who lived in these houses which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] has described as being built on stilts; and they had to do for them the very best they could. When this industry is stabilized, those who now receive concessions which they do not deserve will pay a reasonable price, and those who have been forced to pay higher prices will profit.

My judgment is that any independent study of this matter will disclose the fact that the people who are likely to be against this bill are the people who have been getting priorities, the people who have been getting rebates or favors because this bill, if properly administered by an honest commission, will result in cheaper coal to the average consumer of the country.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield, gladly.

Mr. EDMISTON. A further reason the coal operator in the past was chiseled down on his slack coal, which is commercial coal, was because of the fact that a high percentage of slack had to be produced to produce the lump and he only had the industrial market in which to sell his slack.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman from West Virginia has brought out a very important point. The coal industry has been at the mercy of everybody else for years, just as the coal industry now is at the mercy of the truckman. I have tried to get the coal industry to organize to meet this competition by delivering its own coal, but here is what the coal-mine owner does now. It rolls out its coal and various trucking groups come from the large cities and they take what they want and transport it just like the railroads and all the big consumers have done. The producer of coal has always sold his product in a buyers' market.

Now, as the gentleman from West Virginia suggests, there are several kinds or grades of coal prepared for shipment. This is another expense that the producer has been compelled to assume. This should not have been necessary for coal is the only great product that is ready for consumption when it is produced. You do not have to treat it like you do iron, and if the mine operator were able to sell his coal just as it comes out of the mine he would be in much better financial shape, but the trade has required him to grade his coal. One grade is run-of-mine. This is simply the coal as it is run. But the trade now is very exacting. Coal-producing plants must have large screens and crushers. Some want the coal graded into lumps of certain sizes and some want the coal pulverized. The ultimate result is that the mine owner finds himself with large quantities of slack and unmarketable coal on his hands which he is forced to sell for what he can get, which generally is practically nothing. The mine owner has been the victim of many a skillful buyer. Unwittingly he is often made to cut his competitor's throat.

Mr. Chairman, summing up this whole matter, I feel that we can reasonably expect the Court to sustain this bill from the standpoint of constitutionality, but if it is not constitutional, we must accept the decision of the Court. We must not challenge the honor or the integrity of the Court. We must prepare another bill and come forward with it. This is a distinctive industry and it admits of and is entitled to such legislative treatment as is necessary to permit this industry to serve the people as it should and as the people have a right to expect. Coal is produced in limited areas, but it is consumed in the widest areas. It is a necessity and the initial price of it is so low as to permit it to be used in plentitude by millions who have been deprived of its warming influence. Then let us not impugn the motives of those who willingly go down into the coal pits of the country, in the most hazardous of all occupations to provide a glowing fireside to the families and children of others all over the country. Let us rather show our appreciation of their efforts by recognizing their importance in the economic welfare of this the greatest industrial country in the world. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, the House of Representatives passed the Bituminous Coal Conservation Act, better known as the Guffey coal bill, in 1935. It will be recalled that it was passed under the compulsion of the President. At the time the bill was in the hands of the subcommittee and serious doubts were entertained by some Members as to congressional power to legally enact such legislation, the President addressed a letter to Chairman Samuel B. Hill, of the subcommittee, urging favorable action on the measure. To keep the record straight, I quote from that letter:

> I hope your committee will not permit doubt as to the constitutionality, however reasonable, to block the suggested legislation.

The original Guffey coal bill went to the Supreme Court, and no amount of criticism hurled at the Justices for upholding the supreme law of the land in accordance with their sworn duty will relieve Representatives from their sworn responsibility to keep within their delegated legislative powers. The Supreme Court in the majority opinion handed down in the Guffey coal bill calls attention to the extent of legislative power and legislative discretion, rules that every reasonable man must recognize as essential to the conduct of orderly government under a limited Constitution. The Court said:

> The ruling and firmly established principle is that the powers which the General Government may exercise are only those specifically enumerated in the Constitution, and such implied powers as are necessary and proper to carry into effect the enumerated powers. Whether the end sought to be attained by an act of Congress is legitimate is wholly a matter of constitutional power and not at all of legislative discretion.
> Legislative, congressional discretion begins with the choice of means and ends with the adoption of methods and details to carry the delegated powers into effect. The distinction between these two things—power and discretion—is not only very plain but very important. For while the powers are rigidly limited to the enumerations of the Constitution, the means which may be employed to carry the powers into effect are not restricted, save that they must be appropriate, plainly adopted to the end, and not prohibited by, but consistent with, the letter and spirit of the Constitution. Thus it may be said that to a constitutional end many ways are open; but to an end not within the terms of the Constitution, all ways are closed.

It was never intended by the framers of the Constitution nor by the people when the Constitution was ratified to vest in the Congress of the United States powers beyond those expressly granted or powers to be implied therefrom. The first duty of a Representative, as I conceive the measure of my legislative responsibility, is to ascertain from the Constitution the extent of the powers entrusted to me.

The Constitution is most specific in granting legislative powers.

Article I, section 1:

> All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States * * *.

Lest this might be misconstrued by those to be trusted with legislative power, even when limited to those expressly "granted", the people insisted as a further inducement to ratification an amendment which would find a safe repository for the powers not granted. I refer to article X:

> The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

There is to be found in the provisions of the Constitution not one word that gives to Congress any legislative power whatever except such powers as are expressly granted.

I have found no utterance from any man who has better phrased the purpose of those who framed the Constitution than the statement made by Thomas Jefferson. He said:

It would be a dangerous delusion if our confidence in the men of our choice should silence our fears for the safety of our rights. Confidence is everywhere the parent of despotism. Free government is founded on jealousy, not in confidence. It is jealousy and not confidence which prescribes limited constitutions to bind down those whom we are obliged to trust with power. Our Constitution has accordingly fixed the limits to which, and no further, our confidence will go. In questions of power, then, let no more be heard of confidence in man, but bind him down from mischief by the chains of the Constitution.

There are those who question the power of the Supreme Court to restrain Congress from exceeding the legislative limits to which it may legally go, thereby preventing legislative encroachments upon the powers not granted, but reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.

This seems to be a live question these days; therefore, I shall trespass upon the time of the House to discuss it to my own satisfaction, if not to the satisfaction of those who disagree with me. On this point it is significant, I believe, that when the people granted legislative power it was in this language—article I, section 1:

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States * * *.

Not full and discretionary power, but only the powers "herein granted" is the specific language used. The voice and will of a sovereign people placed this limitation on the legislative powers of Congress.

This restraint read in connection with the tenth amendment supplemented with the oath of office required of every Representative, "to protect and defend the Constitution", would seem to provide every necessary safeguard to prevent conscientious legislators from encroaching upon the reserved rights of the States and of the people.

But let us look at another provision of the Constitution—article III, section 1—where we find this language:

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time establish * * *.

And further, section 2:

The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States * * *.

It is clear from the language of article III that "the judicial power of the United States" is vested in the courts, and is not limited to the judicial power "herein granted."

But if we are searching for this challenged power of the Supreme Court to pass upon the legality, the constitutionality of acts of Congress, it is well to ascertain what the men who framed the Constitution, and those who ratified the document, had in mind. Now, James Madison tells us that—

As the instrument came from them (the framers), it was nothing more than a draft of a plan, nothing but a dead letter, until life and validity were breathed into it by the voice of the people, speaking through the several State conventions. If we were to look, therefore, for the meaning of the instrument beyond the face of the instrument, we must look for it, not in the general convention which proposed it but in the State conventions which accepted and ratified the Constitution.

This invites the inquiry: Did the people understand, when in convention they ratified the Constitution, that the judiciary would have power to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional? A few excerpts taken from the proceedings of the ratifying conventions ought to furnish a convincing affirmative answer. I quote from the speech made by Oliver Ellsworth before the ratifying convention of the State of Connecticut, who, it will be recalled, was a member of the Constitutional Convention, and author of the Judiciary Act adopted by the new Government. He said:

This Constitution defines the extent of the powers of the General Government. If the General Legislature should at any time overleap their limits, the judicial department is a constitutional check. If the United States go beyond their powers, if they make a law which the Constitution does not authorize, it is void; and the judicial power, the Judges, who to secure their impartiality are to be made independent, will declare it to be void.

With this explanation of the power of the judiciary to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional the people of Connecticut ratified the Constitution.

James Wilson, a member of the Constitutional Convention, advocating ratification in the ratifying convention of Pennsylvania, said:

Under this Constitution the legislature may be restrained and kept within its prescribed bounds by the interpretation of the judicial department. * * * When it (an act) comes to be discussed before the Judges—when they consider its principles and find it to be incompatible with the superior power of the Constitution—it is their duty to pronounce it void; the Judges, independent, and not obliged to look to every session for a continuance of their salaries, will behave with intrepidity and refuse to the act the sanction of judicial authority.

John Marshall, in the ratifying convention of Virginia, said:

If they (Congress) were to make a law not warranted by any of the powers enumerated, it would be considered by the Judges as an infringement of the Constitution which they are to guard. * * * They would declare it void.

I have cited only a few of the statements made by men familiar with the purpose and intent of the provisions of the Federal Constitution, and made to the people of their respective States as an inducement to ratification. It was with a clear understanding on the part of the people who ratified the Constitution that the reserved rights of the States and of the people would be guarded from encroachment on the part of Congress. Such has been the general understanding and the practice of the Government for practically 150 years.

Now let me turn again to James Madison, who said:

And may it not be fairly left to the unbiased judgment of all men of experience and of intelligence to decide which is most to be relied on for a sound and safe test of the meaning of the Constitution, a uniform interpretation by all the successive authorities under it, commencing with its birth and continued for a long period, through the varied state of political contests.

Or the opinion of every new legislature, heated as it may be by the strife of parties, or warped, as often happens, by the pursuit of some favorite object, or carried away, possibly, by the powerful eloquence or captivating address of a few popular statesmen, themselves perhaps influenced by the same misleading causes? If the latter test is to prevail, every new legislative opinion might make a new Constitution, as the foot of every new chancellor would make a new standard of measure.

The Congress has no greater legislative power now than it had when the Court declared the original Guffey Coal Act unconstitutional. It is true the Court did not pass upon the price-fixing provisions of that act, but, as stated in the minority report, the Supreme Court, in its opinion, does say:

The price-fixing provisions of the code are thus disposed of without coming to the question of their constitutionality; but neither this disposition of the matter, nor anything we have said, is to be taken as indicating that the Court is of the opinion that these provisions, if separately enacted, could be sustained.

If it be true, as the sponsors of this new bill contend, that the illegal provisions of the Guffey Coal Act have been eliminated, I am not willing to vote for legislation the chief purpose of which is to coerce compliance with a code that will give a monopoly to large coal producers at the expense and ruin of small producers.

The tax of 19½ percent on all coal produced by non-code members to force compliance is a penalty, and, unless the Court can find that Congress has kept within the limit of its commerce power, it will not and cannot sustain any such tax to achieve an unauthorized end.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman called attention to the fact that a 19½-percent tax on coal produced by non-code members will drive the small independent coal operators out of business, that they cannot afford to pay that price.

Mr. REED of New York. Yes. That is undoubtedly the purpose, and it will create a series of large monopolies. The effect of this bill, if put in operation, will be to raise prices to consumers of bituminous coal. If this were not in contemplation, the bill would not be here. Those who are accessible to fuel oil will shift from coal to oil. This will bring a demand from the coal producers to tax fuel oil from the field of effective competition. There is no end to price-fixing once the Government embarks on such a program. [Applause.]

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes.

Mr. MASON. This is a bill to stabilize a disorganized, helpless industry. In the gentleman's opinion, will it do that?

Mr. REED of New York. I cannot say that it will, because here is what will happen. This bill would not be here unless its sponsors proposed to raise the price of coal, and when they raise the price of coal, the people will shift to oil; then the coal producers are going to come in here and ask us to fix the price of oil. Besides all this, the Government has already engaged in a program for the development of hydroelectric power at the expense of the taxpayers, which, according to the testimony before the committee, has already displaced 200,000,000 tons of coal.

Mr. MASON. Then, in the gentleman's opinion, it would not stabilize the business?

Mr. REED of New York. It would not.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY].

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] said that those who opposed this bill were throwing pebbles at it. I want to go on record now as stating, if he intended to include me in that remark, that no one bearing a name like mine ever threw pebbles, and I reserve my inalienable right to throw bricks. [Laughter.] At this bill I now propose to throw bricks, real bricks.

A great deal has been said about the constitutionality of the bill by the proponents of the bill here upon this floor. It would seem to me that that question is of grave concern to them, and well might it be so. We have the spectacle of a majority of the Committee on Ways and Means predicating as a basis for argument that this bill is constitutional on the authority of the minority decision of the Supreme Court in the Carter case. Of course the majority rules. You have to have five members of that Supreme Court in order to make your bill constitutional, and we have no assurance that these five members will say that this price-fixing proposition in this bill is constitutional. In fact the gentleman from Kentucky said that the majority opinion was silent on price fixing. That is true in part, but not really accurate, because as has been said before, the majority opinion in the Carter case, which was the Guffey case, said specifically as follows:

> The price-fixing provisions of this code are thus disposed of without coming to the question of their constitutionality; but neither this disposition of the matter nor anything we have said, is to be taken as indicating that the Court is of the opinion that these provisions, if separately enacted, could be sustained.

I do not see where the proponents of this bill find a great deal of comfort in that majority opinion. I do not know where they find a great deal of comfort in the Guffey case, but I do feel that when they resort to a dissenting opinion, when they quote dicta as authority for the constitutionality of this bill, then they have a weak basis for its constitutionality. Indeed, the decisions I have read of the Supreme Court show that price fixing in private industry has never been sustained as being constitutional. There is a long list of historical precedents for that. It is a fundamental question that the Federal Government cannot fix the minimum prices in private industry. We have cases on that. The majority of the committee and the proponents of this bill have said: "We have one decision of the Supreme Court upon which we can rest our case with a great deal of confidence, and that is the Nebbia case, in New York, in which the State fixed the price for milk." But that is no authority for saying as a general proposition that this Government can fix minimum prices in private industry. In fact, the Court in that case took it out of the realm of cases in which they said you cannot fix minimum prices by saying that it was in a special category, that it involved grave questions of public health for the inhabitants of the State, and, therefore, that case can be of no value as setting a precedent in determining the power of the Federal Government to fix prices in private industry where no question of public health is concerned. I do not believe anybody seriously contends, in view of that language, that that case was considered by the Court as overruling its historical position that prices in private industry cannot be fixed by the Federal Government. There are other grave doubts as to the constitutionality of this bill.

We heard the author of this bill say "that which is not interstate commerce is without this bill." There must have been a purpose in making that statement. The purpose is this: Intrastate commerce in the bituminous-coal industry comprises 42.6 percent of the bituminous-coal industry. Mark the significance of that. Forty-two and six-tenths percent of the bituminous coal is mined and used within the borders of the same States. It never goes outside of those borders. Obviously, when you are attempting to fix prices, if you only fix interstate prices, with such a large percentage of intrastate coal, you get nowhere. The framers of this bill saw that. They are conscious of it when they make the statement that it does not go beyond the confines of interstate commerce; but let us see whether they make any effort to go beyond the confines of interstate commerce. If you will turn to page 26 of the Vinson bill, I think we can determine whether or not there is any effort in this bill to concern itself with intrastate commerce. You will find there that in effect the bill says whenever prices in intrastate commerce in any locality cause any undue or unreasonable advantage, preference, or prejudice as between persons and localities in such commerce on the one hand, and interstate commerce on the other hand, or any undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination against interstate commerce, such prices in such locality shall be subject to the price-fixing provisions of the bill.

I ask you whether or not that is an effort to go beyond the confines of interstate commerce. I think you will agree that such a test set forth in this bill is contrary, not to any minority opinion but contrary to the unanimous opinion of the Court in the Schechter case, and applied even by the dissenting Justices in the Guffey coal case, the Carter case; and since such regulation of intrastate prices, which is clearly invalid, is an integral and necessary part of the price-fixing plan, the entire statute will fall.

However, I do not believe that merely because this bill is unconstitutional and will be back in our laps again that that is the sole reason for opposing it. What we have here is an attempt to tell us that without hearings on this bill you are to gather here today with 4 hours' debate and you gentlemen are to pass upon an intricate bit of price fixing, and pass upon it with reasonable intelligence. We have statements made as to whether the coal industry wants this or does not want it. I do not know whether they do or not. They have had no opportunity to come to any public hearing on this bill, and in the Vinson bill at the last session they had no opportunity to come before the committee and say, "We want it" or "We do not want it", or point out any flaws or advantages in it; but I do know that I have received a telegram from a man who says that his association represents 100,000,000 tons of coal mined annually in the bituminous coal mines, and he says, "I favor your bill and oppose the Vinson bill."

Some remark has been made that there are 400,000,000 tons of coal produced annually. I want to know from how many million tons of coal the proponents of the Vinson bill have heard? How many actually are in favor of this bill? Because when you get 100,000,000 out of 400,000,000 you have a pretty substantial lot behind your bill. They favor the Casey bill, which you have had no opportunity to pass upon. I do not know, and it has not been asserted, that any such appreciable number favor the Vinson bill.

Let me stress the importance of that. It has been said to you, and truthfully, that there is no attempt in this bill to fix maximum hours and minimum wages, because it was held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. That is true. It has been said to you that the way we are going to help the coal industry is to help the producers. That is what they say to you, in effect. If we help the producers we are going to help labor. I think it is a very pertinent inquiry to ask how may producers whom you say you are helping favor this bill. In other words, you say to them we are going to force this upon you whether you want it or not.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. Would the gentleman be kind enough to explain the difference between his bill and the Vinson bill?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. My bill and the Vinson bill both try to accomplish the same thing; we both see the necessity for legislation. Neither of them has labor provisions, because you cannot get by the Supreme Court with them. We both seek to eliminate cutthroat competition. I seek to do it by allowing the industry to regulate itself, under supervision. The Vinson bill seeks a strict governmental regulation by compulsion. That, I think, is the main distinction.

Mr. SIROVICH. Would the gentleman's act be declared constitutional?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I do not think there is any question about my act being declared constitutional. It does not attempt, for example, to regulate the intrastate coal business. It forms voluntary associations of the producers themselves within given districts, and it offers advantages to those men in the intrastate coal business by saying, "We will give you the advantages of market associations, of advertising, and in some instances exempt you from antitrust laws where you want to make agreements with members of an association."

It does not say to them, "We will force you in by a 19½-percent tax", as that is unconstitutional when you attempt to do that in connection with purely intrastate coal.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. EDMISTON. I cannot speak for the whole bituminous coal-producing area of the country, but, so far as my State, West Virginia, is concerned, the leading bituminous coal-producing State of the Union, every one of our 105,000 miners are in favor of this bill, and 8 out of 10 of our operators are in favor of it. Whenever you get 80 percent of the coal operators for anything, that is the same as unanimity in any other industry.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I may say to the gentleman from West Virginia that I do not doubt that the miners are for this bill, for, of course, the miners are following faithfully and implicitly their leader, and their leader is for this bill. That is why the miners are in favor of the bill. But no opportunity has been afforded them to study my bill. I think they would like my bill. As a matter of fact, miners have come to my office asking me to support the Vinson bill and I have talked with them. They have said they were in favor of the Vinson bill, but have also said that if it were not for the Vinson bill they would be glad to go along with my bill.

I would also call the gentleman's attention to the fact that his State, West Virginia, in the Vinson bill is grouped with Pennsylvania in area no. 1. In other words, there will be a minimum price that will affect both West Virginia and Pennsylvania. In West Virginia there is coal of a superior quality to that produced in Pennsylvania. The gentleman from West Virginia will agree to that, will he not?

Mr. EDMISTON. Only certain portions of West Virginia are included with Pennsylvania in the Vinson bill.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Nevertheless the operators of West Virginia are being put in the same category with the operators of Pennsylvania.

Mr. EDMISTON. Only in the Pittsburgh coal area. The southern producers are grouped with those of Kentucky.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I am glad the gentleman brought out that point.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I may say that the main point that we are both seeking to establish is the elimination of cutthroat competition. Neither of our bills could incorporate the labor provisions which were stricken out by the Supreme Court.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. The difference comes in the method of approach. They talk about costs of production in the Vinson bill, but how are they arrived at? The costs of production in the Vinson bill are arrived at by making an area like area no. 1 a price-fixing area and putting all the producers in one pool, as it were, the high-cost producers with very inefficient operation, with their obsolete machinery, who are on their way out of business and on the verge of bankruptcy are put in with the efficient operators, and a minimum price is made which they all must meet.

I propose to approach this question of elimination of cutthroat competition not by doing that. I am not going to eliminate competition within the industry by setting up minimum prices that are absolutely fixed and rigid, because under the provisions of my bill any individual operator can come before the Coal Commission and say, "I produce coal at a lower cost than your minimum"; he will be allowed to prove it and then be allowed to sell coal at or above his cost of production.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I should like to hear the gentleman discuss the legal phase regarding the power of Congress to vest authority in the operators to fix the price of coal under the Schechter case and under the Carter case.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. It is a matter of voluntary association. They are not bludgeoned in. We offer them attractions to come in, and they fix the prices and regulate themselves.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Is there any control in regard to those prices that are agreed upon by the members of the association?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. There is the control by the association's own rules, which conform to the N. R. A. much more closely than does the Vinson bill, which arbitrarily sets prices.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I am sorry; I have but 2 minutes left; I do not see how I can yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I will try to get the gentleman additional time.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Then I shall be pleased to yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Under the gentleman's bill the majority members of the association fix the price for the minority, do they not?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Suppose there is minority production, whose operators are members of the association; then would you not have the picture of the minority producers fixing the price for the majority?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Oh, no, no. We preserve the American idea that an individual producer should be allowed to produce coal and sell it at or above cost. We intend to let the individual producer do that.

The distinction is this: In that way you eliminate the cutthroat competition which, of course, is formed because the producers are willing to go out and sell coal at lower than their cost of production; and, as the gentleman stated, it is labor that is forced to take it in the neck because any producer who enters into a contract to sell coal below his cost of production will take it out on labor.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. This association to which the gentleman refers fixes the price?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Not arbitrarily.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. They fix whatever price is agreed to?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. They fix a prima-facie price.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. If a minority of the operators are members of the association, I submit then the minority will fix the price for the majority.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Any individual producer may say, "I produce my coal at such and such a cost." You cannot forbid him from selling it at above the cost of production. That is how we eliminate cutthroat competition—not by forming a legal monopoly which sets a price that cannot be varied. Under the Vinson bill, if there were a great demand for coal, if the steel industry, for instance, started to build battleships and needed huge amounts of coal, that would not affect the price. Market values have no effect whatsoever. How can it be said under such a bill, with such a lack of elasticity, with such rigid price-fixing provisions, that the consumers will not suffer? There is no competition under the Vinson bill. There is a legalistic monopoly created.

The farmer will suffer, too. He will get it because he will pay the steel industry more money for the implements which he uses in agriculture, and all on account of this bill. That is due to lack of elasticity in price. It does not take into consideration market values. It merely takes into consideration production.

May I say, Mr. Chairman, as a matter of common sense, without emotion, but speaking rationally, sensibly, and reasonably, that we have here a bill that is unconstitutional. It will be back in our laps. It ought to be defeated not only because it is unconstitutional but because it is a bad bill, and let no one urge upon you haste and the necessity of passing bad legislation. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in the bill which is being considered in the House today. The people who are employed in the mining industry have not been treated in the past as human beings. Like other laboring people, their work is difficult and is not steady. The compensation which they receive for their services is inadequate. People who are employed in the mines and other industries and whose salaries are insufficient to provide them with the necessities of life are, in my opinion, no better off than the slaves were prior to the Civil War. The coal miners and every other class of laboring people are entitled to a job which will provide not only a living wage but a saving wage. It is my intention to vote for this bill, because the miners maintain if it is enacted into law it will benefit them considerably.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I am going to speak on this bill from an angle in which I will attempt to present to the members of the Committee the facts as I have been able to ascertain them in relation to the bituminous-coal industry. These facts have convinced me that a condition exists which requires legislative consideration and action, and they are facts that prompt me to support the pending bill.

I opposed the original Guffey Coal Act because I considered that, as drawn, it was unconstitutional. At that time I frankly stated I opposed it because of the constitutional question involved therein; that I did not oppose the objective sought if it were done in a constitutional manner.

I am supporting this bill because not only do I believe it to be constitutional but because the circumstances surrounding this particular industry should bring any person to the realization that legislative action is necessary to assist this industry and those dependent upon it for a living.

The legislative background of the present bill is a long and an interesting one. The action of Congress resulting in the passage of the act of 1935, and the consideration in committee of this particular bill, came after over 20 years' consideration of the bituminous-coal problem, and of a consequent conviction that the business of supplying the country with this essential source of energy required Federal action and regulation.

From 1913 to 1937, inclusive, there have been 20 investigations or hearings by Congress or by specially created commissions with respect to the conditions in this industry. There have been various causes for these investigations such as "bitterly contested strikes" arising from failure of producers in certain areas to recognize the right of their employees to bargain collectively, such as the investigations in West Virginia in 1913 and in 1920–21—in Colorado in 1914 and 1915—in West Virginia, Ohio, and Pennsylvania between 1925 and 1927. Also some investigations were concerned with "shortages" and with "high prices." The shortage which occurred during the World War showed the public the grave importance of a constantly adequate supply of fuel. For a time lack of coal became a limiting factor in the military program, and after extended hearings Congress authorized the control and distribution of fuel and also the fixing of maximum prices. When the strike of 1919 closed down the mines, wartime powers were again invoked to establish maximum prices and to control distribution. When the maximum prices were removed, prices arose to an all-time peak, and protests from the consumers led to further congressional investigations.

When a tremendous strike in 1922 closed down about 75 percent of the mining capacity of the country, forced industry to close down for lack of coal, and raised prices again to an exorbitant level, Congress once more provided for Federal control of the distribution, and also provided for another investigation. The present bill provides for maximum control.

The investigations after 1923 dealt with "the disastrous effects of the destructive competition in the industry", emphasized by the series of important strikes between 1925 and 1927.

Hearings were held in 1926, 1928, 1929, 1932, 1935, and 1936, in which the plight of the bituminous-coal industry—the surplus capacity, the cutthroat competition, and the wage cutting, the results of the breakdown of the machinery of collective bargaining, the continuous and heavy financial loss, the violence and disorders, were all fully inquired into and revealed.

An examination of the evidence of these hearings and investigations and the existing conditions shows that conditions of poverty have surrounded the worker.

They also show that State action will not meet the situation. This has been impossible, in the main, because of cutthroat competition and the inability of a State to regulate such competition outside of its borders.

Another interesting disclosure is that the average loss in mining in bituminous coal is 35 percent, of which 20 percent is classed as avoidable. In a year of normal production 150,000,000 tons is of avoidable loss, which has been found, in the main, to be due to price cutting, which results in wage cutting.

It has been found that "the causes of the excessive waste attending the mining of our coals are complex, but the great underlying cause is destructive competition." The minimum price, in the opinion of eminent authority, will help to prevent waste of coal in mining. If that is correct, this bill will have a direct bearing on the conservation of our coal deposits, which do not have an unlimited life. State action in this respect can and undoubtedly will supplement the conservation results and provisions of this bill, and probably in other respects.

Testimony is abundant that the life of the Connellsville coking coal would be exhausted in 30 years—Pittsburgh bed in Pennsylvania in 100 years—Pocahontas and New River districts in West Virginia at 1929 production in 85 years.

During the period of 20 years various proposals have been made for remedying the conditions of the industry. This bill fairly covers all of the constructive features of these proposals and embraces the right of collective bargaining. This bill undertakes to protect the industry and the worker, and also the consuming public. In this respect the provisions are stronger than in any other bill ever proposed.

In this respect I may say the committee has been so careful in its desire to protect the consuming public that we have provided in the bill that the consumers' counsel shall make his report direct to Congress. The bituminous coal commission makes its report and its recommendations to the Secretary of the Interior, but so far as the consumers' counsel is concerned, he makes his report and recommendations direct to the Congress.

We have also given the consumers' counsel extraordinary powers in his own right with respect to the summoning of witnesses and in representing the general public in all hearings before the commission, and in initiating hearings wherein, in the opinion of the consumers' counsel, the welfare of the consuming public requires the same.

Proposals have even gone to the extent of declaring coal to be "a public utility", and there is considerable rational thought in support of this proposal. In any bill, the real cause of the disturbed conditions of this industry are not met unless means are provided to control and prevent cutthroat competition. The history of this industry shows that cutthroat competition means cutthroat-wage reductions, and the existence of a condition of poverty to millions of American citizens who only ask some degree of economic security.

The operation of the N. I. R. A. in this industry showed a noteworthy result. Whatever may be the criticism in other directions, in this industry great results occurred. There is a substantial unanimity of opinion that conditions in the bituminous-coal industry greatly improved under the scheme of regulation which the code provided.

In other words, this bill is the result of nearly a quarter of a century of accumulated experience and discussion, with one bill, the act of 1935 being passed upon by the Supreme Court. It includes authorization of marketing agencies under public supervision, the outlawing of unfair-trade practices, the fixing of minimum and maximum prices, protection of the right of employees to bargain collectively, and provision for investigation of resource waste and conservation.

Bituminous coal plays an important part in the life of our country, and of our people. That is an important fact—a matter of common knowledge—but an essential matter of consideration, with other factors, in connection with this particular bill.

It is interesting to note that the method of sale of this coal is for the producer of coal to first obtain orders for coal through selling agencies located in consuming markets, and then to mine the coal to fill the orders. When coal is brought to the surface of the ground it is often separated into sizes by being run over screens, and is then loaded immediately into railroad cars for shipment to the purchaser. It is uneconomical to maintain storage facilities for the storage of coal, and they are not generally maintained. In other words, coal is not ordinarily mined unless there is an assurance that railroad cars will be available to receive it when it comes to the surface. Since the orders frequently specify coal of a certain size, and since coal comes out of the mines in various sizes, it often happens that unsold sizes of coal are produced in the course of mining operation.

Coal in such unsold sizes is also immediately loaded into railroad cars which are held on the tracks at the mine until sold, or until the mine tracks become congested. In the latter event, in order to avoid a suspension of mining operation, such unsold sizes are often consigned to some consuming market in the hope that they may be sold before demurrage charges consume their value. Producers are under heavy pressure to slash prices on such consigned shipments, and the coal so consigned is known as distress coal. This has had a demoralizing effect upon the industry and, with other factors, has resulted in the condition of chaos that has existed in the past, and which now faces the industry.

It is interesting to note that commercially important deposits of bituminous coal are found in 26 States; but the four States of West Virginia, Kentucky, Pennsylvania, and Illinois produce over 70 percent of the total national production. Of the other producing States only Ohio and Indiana produced over 10,000,000 tons in 1934, out of a total national production of 358,000,000 tons in that year.

It is a fact that coal mined in every State competes with coal mined in other States. This is important.

Competition in this industry is necessarily based upon the delivered price to the purchaser, which consists of the f. o. b. mine price plus freight. From 1923 to 1933 the freight charges ranged from 46.9 percent to 63.3 percent of the delivered price. Between this period the average freight charge per ton ranged between $2.36 and $2.20. The average f. o. b. mine price declined from $2.68 in 1923 to $1.31 in 1932. In 1934 it was $1.34.

Wages are another interesting aspect. I have tried to give you the legislative history and some of the important characteristics of this industry, how the sales made by the producers have determined in the main the amount of coal mined, and to give you an idea of what the producers and the workers are confronted with in this particular activity. I now come to the wage side.

Wages in the coal industry constituted in 1929—the most recent year for which figures comparable to other activities are obtainable—over 59 percent of the total value of the product of the mine.

The reason for that is that the cost of the production of coal is practically all labor. Naturally, labor should get a higher percentage of the returns. Furthermore, the difficulty of mining a ton of coal is greater than the difficulty faced by a worker who is employed in industry or some other commodity; the work is more laborious and there are factors in this industry which justify the same.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Massachusetts 15 additional minutes.

Mr. McCORMACK. To illustrate this further, between 1923 and 1929 the computed wage payments in the industry dropped from $851,000,000 to $588,000,000, a decline of 30.9 percent, while other industry was prospering. During the same period coal producers of all kinds incurred substantial losses. The decline of wages was brought about by the drastic wage reductions and by a decrease of the number of persons employed. The number of men employed fell from 705,000 in 1923 to 594,000 in 1926 and in 1927, and to 503,000 in 1929. There was also an accompanying increase in the average number of days worked per man per year from 179 to 219 days.

But during this period wages were falling rapidly. Between the Bureau of Statistics' survey in the winter of 1921–22 and that in the winter of 1929, average hourly earnings for miners and loaders, constituting the largest proportion of underground workers, for the Nation as a whole fell 25.9 percent, from 84.5 cents per hour to 62.6 cents per hour. With the average number of days worked per year increasing, nevertheless average annual earnings for mine workers in the Nation as a whole fell from $1,208 in 1923 to $1,169 in 1929. While the employed miner worked on an average 40 days more per year, an increase of 22 percent, he received less wages at a time when wages in other lines were increasing. Even then the producers continued to lose money.

The effect of the depression has been more alarming. Production dropped from 535,000,000 tons in 1929 to 310,000,000 tons in 1932. Between 1923 and 1929 the average price of coal dropped from $2.68 to $1.78. In 1930 the average sales realization dropped to $1.70, in 1931 to $1.54, in 1932 to $1.31, and in 1933 the average was $1.34. The southern mines, at a greater distance from the consuming public, were forced to cut their prices to an average realization of $1.05 per ton in 1932. During this period, as between 1923–29, the industry as a whole was suffering great losses. In 1930 the deficit reported to the Treasury Department was $42,071,000; in 1931, $47,745,000; in 1932, $51,167,000; and in 1933, $47,549,000.

Wages declined more drastically than prices. The total annual wage payments in 1933, computed on the rate prevailing before the N. R. A., would have been $235,000,000, as contrasted with $588,000,000 in 1929 and $851,000,000 in 1923. Average daily earnings for mine workers in the Nation as a whole declined $3.36 in 1933. Many mines in both Northern and Southern States were paying as low as $1.50 to $2.50 per day. Annual earnings per miner fell even more rapidly, as the average number of days dropped from 219 in 1929 to 160 in 1931, 146 in 1932, and 167 in 1933. To illustrate, between 1929 and 1933 the annual income of the West Virginia leader had been reduced from $1,233 to $557, and that of the Pennsylvania leader from $1,122 to $429. The effect of these wage conditions is apparent.

Bituminous-coal producers, by themselves and in collaboration with Governors of coal-producing States, made various efforts to rescue the industry from economic disaster by voluntary and State action. They have all resulted in failure in absence of Federal action. They were great constructive efforts, but they failed on the shoal of cutthroat competition. Just the same as those that in the past made wage agreements with their employees and failed because of cutthroat competition of those who would not make a wage agreement, voluntary and State action failed because of those who would not voluntarily cooperate.

The record indicates that the only possible solution of an intolerable condition in one of our basic industries is by Federal action.

Underlying every strike, as it appears to me, and I am giving you the results of my analysis of the evidence of the past 25 years, has been the cutthroat competitive price warfare that was carried on between union and nonunion fields. The worker was the one to suffer.

Opinions may honestly differ as to the method to meet this situation, but I cannot see how anyone can take the position that these conditions should be permitted to continue.

As bearing upon the danger of the work which workers in the mines perform, let me call to your attention the fact that the actual chance is that 1 out of 10 men that spend their working lives in the mines will be killed in a mine accident. In 1934 the accident hazards in bituminous mines were two and nine-tenths times as great as the average for all industries, and the accident severity rate was six and seven-tenths times the average for all industries. The severity rate in bituminous mines was higher than in any other industry reporting to the National Safety Council.

Another important piece of evidence as to the living conditions in the mining areas can be obtained from the records of the relief rolls. Even before President Roosevelt took office, and in 1931, former President Hoover recognized the situation by requesting the American Friends Service Committee to undertake child feeding in the coal fields.

Under the Federal emergency-relief program the relief load was exceptionally heavy in the coal fields.

I want you to note this piece of evidence. This is evidence, cold evidence, which I have undertaken to ascertain in order to enable me to make up my own mind as to the manner in which I should vote on this bill.

A recent study by the University of Pennsylvania showed that out of 163 of the leading manufacturing counties in the United States there was 1 county in which 24 percent or more of the population was on relief during the year July 1933 to July 1934. Out of 41 other important urban counties in the United States there was also 1 with more than 24 percent of the population on relief. But out of 88 counties classified as chiefly engaged in mining bituminous coal there were 22 counties in which over 24 percent of the population was on relief.

There is the evidence, extending over nearly a quarter of a century. Today we have this bill before us. If ever there was an industry that required legislative consideration, it is the bituminous-coal industry. If ever there were workers in an industry who have lived under conditions approximating poverty, yes, as my friend from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] well said, "peonage", it is the workers of the bituminous-coal industry. I cannot close my eyes to that record—I refuse to close my eyes to that evidence.

Upon that evidence something should be done. The Ways and Means Committee has considered the present bill carefully. This bill represents the best that we can present to this Congress in the nature of legislation. The Supreme Court must act. That is the way in America, legislative acts and Supreme Court construction.

We need legal engineering or modern legal science in this country to meet the problems of the day. We need to have the legal profession lead the way. Our courts can take judicial notice of the fact that we have changed from a rural Nation into an urban industrial Nation. We must realize that the days when the formative law in America was being made and applied to the then conditions, from the Revolution to the Civil War, have changed, and the rules applying to a distinctly agricultural nation must be made to apply to an urban industrial nation, such as we are today, with well over 50, yes, well over 60 percent of the people of America living in cities of more than 2,500 population.

Time is passing, and as time passes it produces changes, and these changes present to us new social, economic, and political problems. In my opinion, there is a way within the Constitution to meet these problems. I have always been brought up to believe that the Constitution is elastic enough to apply and adjust itself to almost any change that may take place.

This bill, in my opinion, represents a step forward. It is legislation that is necessary. The record, which I have undertaken today to briefly state, of the past 25 years shows the necessity for such legislation. The industry, the workers, and the Nation itself require a stabilized bituminous-coal industry. In my opinion, this bill reasonably meets the problem as it confronts us today. This bill, in my opinion, is constitutional. I hope the measure will pass. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER].

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, if I thought the enactment of this legislation would bring about a cure of the disaster and the evil that is pictured as existing in the bituminous coal industry so eloquently by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] I should be tempted to vote for it, but I do not think it will effectively accomplish this purpose. I rather think this situation as it presents itself is a very clear indication of the necessity of an amendment to the Constitution in order that we may handle these matters. If we cannot do it under the Constitution as presently constructed, I favor the orderly procedure of an amendment in order that we may proceed constitutionally, and stop throwing mud at the Supreme Court.

I call your attention, as has been done several times, to the fact this bill still contains the price-fixing feature and is purely a price-fixing bill. Whether or not this is going to result in bettering the condition of the employees is very questionable.

The Court made this statement, and I think stated it significantly:

> The price-fixing provisions of the code are thus disposed of without going to the question of their constitutionality, but neither this disposition of the matter, nor anything we have said is to be taken as indicating that the Court is of the opinion that these provisions, if separately enacted, could be sustained.

Now, they are still in the bill and they are still open to question. I think the coercive tax or penalty is a problem that should have been given further study, in view of the decisions in the past of the Supreme Court, especially in the Child Labor case, where Chief Justice Taft, in speaking of that tax, stated it had already lost its identity as a tax and had become a penalty; and the 19½-cent tax in this bill is a coercive penalty. The tax is one-half cent a ton on all produced coal and a tax of 19½ cents a ton if the producer does not sign the code on the dotted line. If this is not a coercive penalty, I never heard of one.

I think one of the great dangers attendant upon this legislation is this: Let us say, for argument's sake, that this bill passes and gets by the Supreme Court—and in passing may I say, before I forget it, it seems to me a great deal of commendation is due the majority members of the committee for their very earnest endeavor in the consideration of this bill to discuss very carefully the constitutionality of the various sections while we were preparing the bill. This was in marked contrast to the attitude that has been taken heretofore, except by one or two members of the committee, and in marked contrast to the advice we received from the President to give no consideration to the constitutionality whatever and to resolve all doubts in its favor and report the bill. Let me say that this time the members of the majority gave very earnest consideration to every paragraph and every principle and policy involved as to whether or not it might get by the Supreme Court, and for this they deserve a great deal of credit.

As I said a moment ago, it seems to me if this bill is declared constitutional, why may we not expect to have similar legislation for every existing industry in this country? If we can have one industry set up a commission of its own with price-fixing power to protect it against competition, why may we not expect the electrical industry, the steel industry, the boot and shoe industry, and half a dozen other industries to do the same thing? You will recall the fact that the former Guffey bill was hardly born a year or two ago before we had a similar bill for the control of the textile industry presented to the Congress, and it is just as natural to presume, and it is a logical conclusion to come to, that we are going to have, and will have in the future, legislation of this character, and we shall have a multiplicity of bureaucrats here in Washington with 50 industries, each with a commission of 7 or 350 commissioners, with all the employees they may require. Where are we going? Nobody seems to know particularly either the direction or the destination. Of course, they try to explain to us that this is a special industry. Of course it is. It is an industry that is slowly dying. In the hearings for the extension of the N. R. A., Mr. John L. Lewis admitted to us that power development at Boulder Dam, the T. V. A., and various other places, would displace the use of bituminous coal. The fact is that this administration is just patting the coal miner on the back with a bill of this kind and then, by appropriating $200,000,000 during the past 4 years for hydroelectric development, is giving the same coal miner a kick in the pants at the same time.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. I cannot yield. Mr. Lewis admitted that in the last 10 or 15 years hydroelectric development had reduced the consumption of bituminous coal 200,000,000 tons, which means a displacement of a thousand men to a million tons. So it is truly a dying industry. That does not relieve us of the necessity, if we can do it, of improving these desperate living conditions that exist at the bituminous mines. Mr. Lewis said that—

> The mine workers, the men who work in the mines, have a dread or an apprehension pass over them every time they read in the newspapers about the financing of any water-power electrical development. I presume that is human nature. The displacement of a million tons of bituminous coal roughly will destroy the jobs of a thousand men. It runs at the ratio of a thousand men to a million tons.

And he says further that—

> That does not take into consideration the men engaged in transportation and the distribution of that tonnage.

So that the displacement of labor is still greater. He said further:

> There are those who say that the cheapening of power energy through the widespread infusion of electrical energy produced by water power will in turn create industrial and social activity which will more than make up for the lost manpower in the mining industry, but whether that is true or not one man's opinion is just as good as another's.

He also said:

> That we have not experimented for a sufficient length of time to determine whether or not that promise will ever have any result.

Mr. Chairman, I think that is a fair statement. It is astounding when you realize that in 10 or 15 years the production of bituminous coal necessary for industrial and other uses has been reduced by 200,000,000 tons.

In this bill we are undertaking to establish a new little N. R. A. You cannot describe it in any other way, there is no other conclusion to reach. The first part of the bill provides for a commission of seven, to be composed of two from the miners and two from the operators. It does not say what the other three shall be or prescribe their qualifications. They may have been miners or operators before, but at least the miners and the operators have a 4-to-3 vote in the 7-vote commission. A consumers' counsel is appointed in this bill, and I think so far as the consumers' rights are concerned that is just a humorous gesture. He has no vote, he is added to this commission, he has nothing to say, he can cross-examine witnesses and appear at hearings, but he is the only one that anyone can appeal to. An outsider is limited to his services, he may have no other attorney. It seems to me that very little benefit will redound to the consumers of coal as a result of this consumers' counsel.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. Yes.

Mr. SHORT. Not only will the price of coal to the consumer be increased, but will it not tend to drive out of existence the small-mine operators and producers?

Mr. CROWTHER. I think there is no question about that.

Mr. REED of New York. And will not this be the effect? When they raise the price above a certain point, the consumer will shift to fuel oil and gas and every other substitute?

Mr. CROWTHER. I think that is a fair deduction to make. Of course, you cannot raise the price of bituminous coal too high, because there are too many things competing with it, oil and gas particularly. Everybody realizes that. Of course, it is a worthy objective, this stabilizing the price, but will it benefit the miners?

If you are going to stabilize the industry, 19½ percent is not high enough to keep the fellow out of business who does not want to sign the code on the dotted line. A 19½-percent preferential will not keep him out. You cannot stop him. If you are going to stop him from bootlegging against the law, you will have to raise that 19½ percent, because there is a greater differential than that in a great many cases, as I understood from the evidence given at the previous hearing.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by adding to them a statement entitled "Why the Progressive Miners of America Object to the Guffey Coal Bill." Inasmuch as there were no hearings on this bill, I desire to have their statement appear.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CROWTHER. I think both sides should be heard on a question of such far-reaching importance.

The matter referred to by Mr. CROWTHER is as follows:

WHY THE PROGRESSIVE MINERS OF AMERICA OBJECT TO THE GUFFEY COAL BILL

AN ANALYSIS BY THE DISTRICT EXECUTIVE BOARD, PROGRESSIVE MINERS OF AMERICA

In presenting this analysis of objections to the Guffey coal bill, the Progressive Miners of America wish to maintain that it is not presented on the basis of the effect it might have so far as our own organization is concerned if enacted into law, but rather because of the effects that it will have on the people as a whole from the standpoint of bad legislation.

The pending Guffey coal bill is just as vicious, discriminatory, and dangerous as its predecessor which was enacted into law by the last Congress, and which was killed through the efforts of those who were cognizant of the public dangers which would undoubtedly ensue.

The revised bill is cleverly drawn; full of ambiguous phrases which mean nothing other than a surface reading would indicate, and cover, through inference and clever evasion, the same fields of price fixing, coercion, taxation, and dictatorial bureaucratic control that the first bill incorporated. It carries the same artificial control of industry scheme as its predecessor, and, if enacted into law, would pave the way for the elimination of hundreds of coal mines from operation, and tens of thousands of coal miners from the industry.

We ask your earnest attention and study in the following analysis which we have prepared, and although it is somewhat lengthy we feel that the basic thoughts contained herein are of vital importance to the coal-mining industry, those who work in it, the public in general, and those who create and administer laws.

The preamble of the bill on page 1 says: "That regulation of the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of bituminous coal is imperative for the protection of such commerce; that there exist practices and methods of distribution and marketing of such coal that waste the coal resources of the Nation and disorganize, burden, and obstruct interstate commerce in bituminous coal, with the result that regulation of the prices thereof and of unfair methods of competition therein is necessary to promote interstate commerce in bituminous coal and to remove burdens and obstructions therefrom."

This preamble attempts to bring the production of coal under the interstate-commerce law although the courts have held up to this time that the production of coal is not interstate, but intrastate commerce. Although the preamble of the bill states that it intends only regulation of the "sale and distribution", the content of the bill is so fixed that such regulation involves production directly and definitely. Chief Justice Taft, in the Coronado Coal Co. v. United Mine Workers of America (259 U. S. 407–408) said: "Coal mining is not interstate commerce, and the power of Congress does not extend to its regulation as such." In the case of the Oliver Iron Mining Co. v. Lord (262 U. S. 171–178), the Court said: "Mining is not interstate commerce, but like manufacturing it is a local business, subject to local regulation and taxation." Noel Sargent, eminent economist, said of the regulatory features of the first Guffey bill: "Since bituminous coal is not a 'necessary of life', it is impossible to justify indirect efforts at production control under the guise of control over transportation and rates." In the event that this bill should become a law, and a challenge of constitutionality should be issued, it seems logical, because of the former holdings of the Court, that such challenge would be sustained. In the interests of constitutional legislation, therefore, why should such obvious deviations from constitutional legislation be proposed?

Furthermore; in the preamble the words "that regulation of the prices thereof" promises price pegging which is not in the interests of the buying public, but to the contrary will undoubtedly result in increases in the retail prices of the commodity which are now at a figure nearly out of the financial reach of the consumers. Any legislation which gives the authority to any group, governmental or otherwise, to peg prices cannot be considered good legislation by the consumers of the product. Competition in industry has always been considered by students of economy as the only protection of consumers; again, the effects of pegging the prices of coal will tend to widen the breach of competition with other substitute fuels, such as oil and gas, and electrical energy which are fast supplanting the commodity throughout the United States. To advance the cost of coal to any appreciable degree would be to stifle the industry and throw tens of thousands of miners into the ranks of the unemployed.

BITUMINOUS COAL COMMISSION

The set-up of the bituminous coal commission should earn the undivided attention of the Nation's legislators, for in the creation of the commission the bill proposes that the President shall appoint all seven members of the commission. Four of the seven members are designated members, as having been experienced coal miners and operators; the other three members are unqualified appointees of the President; all seven, however, shall not have a financial interest in the active operation of the industry.

The wording of the provisions for the selection of these seven members of the commission is so cleverly drawn that the entire board might consist of men formerly connected with the industry as "operators", which would, or could, work to the detriment of the workers' interests. It says, page 2, lines 14 to 16: "Two members of the commission shall have been experienced bituminous-coal-mine workers, two shall have had previous experience as producers, * * *." How many coal-mine operators are there who have not, at one time or another, been "experienced coal-mine workers"? This is, as you see, a wide-open chance that the workers may have no men on the commission who are fully cognizant with their interests.

COURT AUTHORITY

Another section of this bill, on page 2, entitled section 2 (a), on lines 7 to 9, gives judicial recognition, or court authority, to this commission. It says: "The commission shall annually designate its chairman, and shall have a seal which will be judicially recognized." This gives court authority into the hands of the commission, which is further broadened on page 3, lines 23 to 25, and extending over to page 4, line 4, which says: "Upon all matters within its jurisdiction coming before it for determination it shall have the power and duty of hearing evidence and finding facts upon which its orders and action may be predicated, and its findings of fact, supported by any substantial evidence, shall be conclusive upon review thereof by any court of the United States." Through this section we find that the findings of this commission are final, and no court of the United States can reverse their findings if there is any substantial evidence to support their decision. The question arises as to how many cases come before any court in which there is no substantial evidence on one side or the other. Ordinarily the court is expected and holds that the preponderance of substantial evidence is that upon which they predicate their review. The way the bill is devised precludes the sustaining of the orders of the commission by the higher court and binds the court to sustain upon the premise of "any substantial evidence."

CIVIL SERVICE SCRAPPED

The Civil Service provisions of the old bill which were attacked from various sources are cleverly evaded in the wording of the revised bill. On page 3, lines 2 to 8, it says: "With the exception of the secretary, a clerk to each commissioner, the attorneys, and such special agents, technical experts, and examiners as the commission may require, all employees of the commission shall be appointed with due regard to the provisions of the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended." What other employees are need by the commission with the exception of those noted above? Possibly a few stenographers, filing clerks, etc., but nowhere in the act is found a provision which fulfills the civil-service statute as it was intended when enacted into law. The appointive power contained in this act, as well as all other proposed acts of the past several years, is diametrically opposed to the provisions of the civil-service statute and tend to bureaucratize the entire structure of government. This is not good, in that it promotes "pork barrel" legislation, designed to remunerate supporters of parties and political candidates.

"GIFT" WORKERS

The sentence found on page 3, lines 10 to 13, wherein it says "the commission is authorized to accept and utilize voluntary and uncompensated services of any person or of any official of a State or political subdivision thereof", opens the way for manufacturers, coal-mine operators, or other interested groups or persons to give the services of as many persons as the commission might require for the use of the commission in any capacity they might designate; in other words, the operators of coal mines might be permitted to send one or more of their henchmen to sit in and assist the commission, and, should they so decide, could be used in investigating charges against his own corporation. His word would be accepted by the commission with regard to any charges he might be sent to investigate; and should they decide on the basis of his report, their findings would, through the aforementioned sections of the bill, become conclusive in any of the courts of the Nation. Again, a labor organization, or organizations, could proffer the services of one or more men, and they could be utilized in investigating cases in which their own organizations were interested; their findings, if accepted by the commission, would became a part of the commission's decisions, thereby creating discriminatory orders against other labor organizations whose men might be refused the privilege of serving the commission in like capacity.

SELF-REGULATING

Page 3, lines 15 to 19, gives the commission the power to make and put into operation their own rules and regulations without any restraint other than the word "reasonable", and nothing in the provision gives Congress the right to prescribe any such rules of practice. The only stipulation whereby Congress becomes a part of the program is that the commission shall file a report of their activities with the Secretary of the Interior, and he shall transmit it to Congress.

THE CONSUMERS' COUNSEL

Section (b) 1, found on page 4 and continuing on pages 5 and 6, provides for the setting up of an office for the consumers' counsel of the national bituminous coal commission, and outlines his duties, powers, and how the personnel of his office are to be selected; these powers, duties, and privileges follow the same trend as those of the commission. The counsel's duties as prescribed in subsection 2 of (b) 1, at the bottom of page 4, states: "It shall be the duty of the counsel to appear in the interest of the consuming public in any proceeding before the commission and to conduct such independent investigation of matters relative to the bituminous-coal industry and the administration of this act as he may deem necessary to enable him properly to represent the consuming public in any proceeding before the commission." In other words, the Guffey coal bill creates a department in itself, and a part of itself, as the only representative of the consumer. The counsel, as it states, shall have as his duty "to appear in the interest of the consuming public." Through the art of omission the proponents of this bill provide that the only counsel for relief from grievance shall be this consumers' counsel, who is himself a part of the administration. It does not provide that other legal counsel shall have the privilege of preferring or pushing charges which might be to the protection of the consumer, but provides, in effect, that the consumers' counsel shall be the only one who may appear before the commission in charges of this kind. There are not many courts of the land who tell a defendant who he may or may not have to represent him in court. They may prescribe the requirements such counsels must have in order to appear before them, but to restrict to a single named counsel is but a short step from dictatorship.

TAX FEATURES

Under the subheading of Tax on Bituminous Coal on page 6, we come to one of the most dangerous features of the bill. In this section we find the coercive influence that was manifested in the old bill, and which makes it possible for the commission to debar thousands of mines, particularly those of small productive capacity, from active operation, and through this medium permit the large, mechanized operator groups to "squeeze" thousands of miners from a livelihood, and place them on the relief rolls of the Nation, or place them on subsistence homesteads, as later provided for investigation in this bill.

Section 3 (a) of this section places an excise tax of 1½ percent on the sale of coal under certain provisions; subsection (b) of the same section provides an additional 13½ percent tax in addition to the first tax imposed in subsection (a), but provides for the exemption of code members from the last-mentioned tax. In other words, 1½ percent of the market value of all coal will be collected as a tax apparently for the administration of the act, and an additional tax of 13½ percent shall be collected from all who do not become code members, or a total of 15 percent. This, as you can plainly see, would place code members in a position of vantage over those who might have objection to becoming members under the law; in fact, the producer is coerced by the amount of the tax to become a code member whether he wishes to or not. This is not the American way of doing business. The Government should never place itself in the position of taxing people out of business, and this bill will most certainly do that.

"FAVORED CUSTOMER" CLAUSE

Under subsection (e) on page 7, we find the "favored customer" clause, which says: "The tax imposed by subsection (a) of this section shall not apply in the case of a sale of bituminous coal for the exclusive use of the United States or any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or any political subdivision of any of them, for use in the performance of governmental functions." It further provides for the refund of the tax paid by any producer on any coal that is resold to either of the above-named agencies upon application by the producer and production of evidence of such resale.

This is typical discriminatory legislation, and it is doubtful that it would stand a test of the courts; taxes, especially, should be universal and without favor to any individual group, sect, or class, and anything to the contrary has been so far held as class legislation, and unconstitutional. (See Bailey v. Drexel Furniture Co., 259 U. S. 20.)

ORGANIZATION AND PRODUCTION

Part 1, found on page 9, takes up the title of organization and production. It determines that 23 district boards shall be organized, comprised of code members from each district. It provides that the number of members on the board shall be not less than 3 nor more than 17, and that the number of producer members shall be even. The proponents of the bill have cleverly protected the interests of the big mining producers in two specific places with regard to the selection of producer members; first, on page 9, lines 10 to 16, the bill provides that the number of producer members on the board shall be determined "by the majority vote of the district tonnage for the calendar year 1936", which naturally gives the big mechanical mines the edge in voting on a tonnage basis; secondly, on page 9, lines 22 to 25, and extending over on page 10, lines 1 and 2, the bill further provides: "One-half of such producer members shall be elected by the majority in number of the code members of the district represented at the aforesaid meeting. The other producer members shall be elected by votes cast in the proportion of the annual tonnage output for the preceding calendar year of the code members in the district." What if a law were proposed which provided in effect that citizens whose incomes exceeded $50,000 per year should determine how many members were to constitute the Congress of the United States, and further provided that one-half of these members should be elected by they themselves? This, in effect, is just what the Guffey coal bill proposes for the coal-mining industry. Can anything be more biased, more dictatorial than these proposals?

LABOR REPRESENTATION

Continuing on page 10, lines 5 to 8, we find that labor is granted one member on each of the 23 district boards, and that this member is selected by the organization of employees "representing the preponderant number of employees in the industry of the district in question." We, as progressive miners, cannot refrain from calling to your attention the fact that under the last national bituminous coal commission set-up we claimed the right to name the employee representative in our district; we appeared before the national coal commission and offered to produce facts and figures proving that we did have the "preponderant number of employees" in our district. The national coal commission, regardless of our presentations, set aside our plea and permitted the appointment of one from an organization that has and still refuses to accept our repeated challenge to an honest and fair referendum designed to once and for all time settle this particular controversy. What guarantee do we have as a majority organization that we will be permitted to name such labor member in the face of the precedent set by the last commission?

Be that as it may, just how much weight do the proponents of this bill think that such an employee representative could carry anyway with as many as 6, 10, or 12 producer members voting against him on all measures where the welfare of his organization is concerned? Why do they provide for such employee representative at all?

Subsection (c) on page 12 provides, in effect, that no suits in equity may be filed against the district board as a whole, nor can any member be held liable for the act of another. This takes the actions, orders, and decisions of the board and board members out of the hands of the courts and gives to them the same protection afforded legislators, holding them liable only, as members, for "his own willful misfeasance or for nonfeasance involving moral turpitude."

MARKETING

Part 2, found on page 13, takes up the title marketing. We should like to charge at the outset in taking up this section of the bill that it is entirely void and of no effect because of its patent unconstitutionality. It violates, in effect, that section of the Constitution which provides that persons shall be safe in their papers and effects. On page 13, lines 4 to 12, the bill provides: "(a) All code members shall, in their respective districts, report spot orders to the statistical bureau hereinafter provided for and shall file with it copies of all credit memoranda, and such other information concerning the preparation, cost, sale, and distribution of coal as the commission may require. All such records shall be held by the statistical bureau as the confidential records of the code member filing such information." Although it states that such material shall be held as confidential, we must remember that where grievance occur the commission shall have the power to investigate, ascertain, and otherwise find facts upon which to base their findings in settlement of the grievance. It would be easier to obtain such information from the statistical bureau than it would to demand such information from the code member, and possibly be forced to sue for the production of the code member's papers and effects in courts of law.

Also included in this section is the provision that "the commission shall have power to prescribe for code members minimum and maximum prices" (p. 13, lines 5 and 6).

MORE PRICE FIXING

The consuming public might be interested in the wording of the bill found on page 16, lines 17 to 23, which says: "The district board shall adjust the average costs so determined, as may be necessary to give effect to any changes in rates, hours of employment, or other factors substantially affecting costs, exclusive of seasonal changes, so as to reflect as accurately as possible any change or changes which may have been established since January 1, 1936." This means that any increase in operating costs, including wages, reduction of hours, etc., which affects the cost of coal shall be taken into consideration by the district board, and such increases shall not be deducted from the profits of the producer, but will be reflected in the minimum and maximum price tables; in other words, on the backs of the consumers. The bill practically guarantees the producer the same rate of profits accrued to him as of January 1, 1936, which year has been heralded as one of the most profitable in many.

Page 16, lines 1 to 16, further agrees that where costs rise to any figure in excess of 2 cents per net ton of 2,000 pounds, the minimum and maximum price tables will be adjusted immediately. No law as yet has been proposed which guarantees to the consumer an increase in wages in the event that prices increase in excess of 2 percent on the dollar.

RIGHT OF CONTRACT CHALLENGED

The right of contract is seriously challenged by the wording of the bill on page 20, lines 3 to 8, which says: "Subject to the exceptions provided in section 12 of this act, a contract for the sale of coal at a price below the minimum or above the maximum therefor established by the commission at the time of making of the contract shall constitute a violation of the code, and such contract shall be invalid and unenforceable." When any agency, governmental or otherwise, can determine the legality of, and right to contract, and assume the power of invalidating contracts, our security in individual rights is in jeopardy.

"DUMPING"

Although "dumping" is prohibited on page 15, lines 5 to 7, we find that on page 21, lines 1 to 4, minimum prices as well as maximum prices do not apply to coal sold outside the domestic market or the continental United States; what, therefore, is to prohibit the producer from shipping surplus coal to the foreign market and dumping it at a lower price, which would, in some cases, pay him by reason of a demand in a "short" market? Transactions outside the United States are easily covered up, and therefore this bill guarantees in no wise that dumping is abolished.

APPELLATE DECISIONS FINAL

On page 28, lines 7 to 12, we find that in forcing compliance of its decisions the commission may ask the order of the circuit court of appeals, which, in effect, denies the right of trial by jury to the defendant. The circuit court of appeals consists of three judges, and they, together with the United States District Court and United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, are charged with the duty of enforcing compliance to the rules and regulations of the commission; of hearing appeals from the decisions of the commission; and determining modifications, if any, of their decisions. On page 32, lines 7 to 13, the act provides: "The judgment and decree of the court, affirming, modifying, and enforcing or setting aside, in whole or in part, any order of the commission shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 346-347)." Now, the Supreme Court, by precedent, has refused to review such cases in certiorari and certification; we point to the case of the United Electric Coal Co. v. Progressive Miners of America, an injunction proceeding which the Supreme Court refused to review. Such statement is, therefore, of no effect, and guarantees no relief from grievance.

UNITED STATES PARTY TO SUITS

Subsection (c), page 32, down to line 7, on page 33, makes the United States a party to a suit against code members to enforce compliance with the rules and regulations of the commission. Particularly is this found in line 25, page 32, and lines 1 to 4, on page 33, which says: "Upon such filing" by the commission "of the application and transcript the court shall cause notice thereof to be served upon such code member and thereupon shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein"; then we find the protection for the commission's findings in the same old phrase on lines 7 to 9, "the findings of the Commission as to facts, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive." In other words, the United States is made a party to the suit, and the court is bound by "substantial evidence" to sustain the commission.

RIGHT TO ORGANIZE

Section 9, on page 36, lines 18 to 25, says: "Sec. 9. (A) It is hereby declared to be the public policy of the United States that—(1) Employees of producers of bituminous coal shall have the right to organize and to bargain collectively with respect to hours of labor, wages, and working conditions through representatives of their own choosing, without restraint, coercion, or interference on the part of the producers." There is no word concerning coercion, restraint, interference, etc., on the part of labor organizations against each other, nor are there provisions in the bill as to how to ascertain just who are the representatives of the organization in the district; on page 37, lines 22 to 25, and extending over on page 38, lines 1 to 11, however, the question of minority organizations is adequately taken care of by the following: "(d) On the complaint of any employee of a producer of bituminous coal, or other interested party, the National Labor Relations Board may hold a hearing to determine whether any producer supplying coal for the use of the United States or any agency thereof or for the use of any contractor on or carrying out of any contract subject to the subsection (c) of this section, is complying with the provisions of subsection (a) of this section. Such department or agency shall thereupon declare the contract for the supply of the coal of such producer or for the work, service, or supply of the contractor using such coal to be canceled and terminated." Through the wording of this section, and the reference to the other subsections, the bill finally provides, in effect, that any employee or "other interested party" may make an appeal to the commission stating in effect that he is being denied the right of belonging to the organization of his own choosing, and because of the complaint of this one individual or other interested party, who does not necessarily have to belong to or be employed by any particular producer or union, the commission is empowered to cause hearings to be instituted, the United States courts are forced to enforce attendance of witnesses, and upon the basis of the protest of this one individual the commission can, if so disposed, nullify the contracts of such producer as stipulated in the above-mentioned section. There is no doubt but that a single man can be found in most any plant or coal operation in the Nation who could be induced to raise such objections against his employer, and that there are "interested parties" who would be glad to raise the point of choice of representatives in many different sections of the Nation. The coercive features of the act are such that we do not feel that it is to the best interests of any particular organization for it to be passed.

Another factor of the above-mentioned section is that it provides for "compulsory arbitration", which has always been fought upon the principle that it is coercive, arbitrary to the tenets of democracy, and obstructs normal negotiations.

CERTAIN OPERATORS PROTECTED

On page 40, lines 14 to 19, we find a definite protection to the contract of one of the largest coal operators in the State of Illinois. It reads: "Sec. 12. No coal subject to the provisions of this act may be delivered upon any contract at a price below the minimum price in effect at the time of delivery upon such contract: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to a lawful and bona-fide written contract entered into prior to June 16, 1933."

In conjunction with the above-named section let us take you back for a moment to pages 18 and 19, subsection (c), which says: "When in the public interest the commission deems it necessary to establish maximum prices for coal in order to protect the consumer of coal against unreasonably high prices therefor, the commission shall have the power to establish maximum prices, free on board transportation facilities, for coal in any district. Such maximum prices in effect within the district at the time, so that in the aggregate the maximum prices shall yield a reasonable return above the weighted average total cost of the district: Provided, That no maximum price shall be established for any mine which shall not yield a fair return on the fair value of the property."

Now, the minimum price protects the producer from cutthroat competition; the maximum price protects the consumer against "unreasonably" high prices. This bill provides in the first quotation that minimum prices shall not apply to contracts entered into "prior to June 16, 1933" and now we find that maximum prices do not apply to mines which may not earn a reasonable increase on the fair value of the property. This explains the problem of when a maximum and minimum price is not a maximum or minimum: It is when they run afoul of the interests of certain groups.

* * * Now the facts are these: The Peabody Coal Co. in 1928 entered into a contract with certain public utilities in the State of Illinois, and the contract stipulated that the Peabody Coal Co. would supply these public utilities with coal for a period of 30 years on the basis of "cost plus" payment. The Progressive Miners of America intervened in a suit before the Illinois Commerce Commission for the nullification of this contract in the public interest; also, the Public Ownership League of America protested the confirmation of the contract before the commerce commission, on the basis that the "cost plus" arrangement did not protect the interests of the consuming public inasmuch as the overhead of the coal company, no matter how high, would be absorbed by the prices of the products of those companies and paid by the consuming public. Under the Guffey coal bill as it is written, minimum prices or maximum prices would in no way apply to the contract of the Peabody Coal Co. which has yet another 21 years to run. Through the ramifications of this bill, you will find that the interests of many large coal operations are adequately taken care of, and their position, as such, in no wise threatened.

ANTITRUST EXCEPTIONS

By the insertion of the word "unless" on line 2, page 41, the bill takes from under the Sherman Antitrust Act of 1890 certain combinations of producers, restricting these combinations only to code members, which gives a distinct tinge of class legislation to the entire section, and predetermines its unconstitutionality. Why should any group be excluded from the antitrust laws regardless of their acceptance of the code, while others are held subject to the law? The old adage "A rose under any other name smells just as sweet" could well apply to this; a group, classed as a trust, would still be a trust even though they did accept the code. The permission of combinations is contrary to the real needs of the people which is decentralization of industry.

MINIMUM-PRICE AREAS

So far as the minimum-price areas are concerned, they are fixed in accordance to the quality of coal, and other technical qualifications, and under the last Guffey coal law apparently satisfied the requirements of certain producers; how the consumers fared, however, and how they will fare under the revised bill if enacted into law, is another matter. The district boards so arrange the minimum-price tables that they apply to the "delivered" price of the commodity, free on board to the market; in other words a price is fixed, based on operating costs, depreciation, depletion, insurance, etc., and the total average cost of each district is figured; then the national commission takes these costs and arranges a price for each area, and for each central distributive market. No code-member is allowed to sell in these central markets at a price less than the minimum for the area, or market, regardless of how high or low, as the case may be, his operating costs are. Through this medium the "low cost" mines reap high profits, and the "high cost" mines merely "get by", and the consumer pays through the nose.

OTHER DUTIES OF THE COMMISSION

Section 15 of the bill takes up the title Other Duties of the Commission. In this section it is only provided that the commission shall have investigatory powers so far as allocation, relief and rehabilitation, subsistence homesteads for unemployed miners, safe operation of mines, etc., is concerned.

The revised bill is much improved over the last bill in this respect; however, through the powers of investigation, suggestion, and recommendation of certain conditions might be brought about which would work a hardship on the workers, producers, and consumers.

CONCLUSION

In fine, there are entirely too many points upon which logical exceptions can be made to indicate that this is basic legislation. For regulatory legislation it is a step forward if regulation is needed. We, as progressive miners, however, believe that artificial control of industry is bad, and that government predicated upon the theory that it should regulate industry is also bad. We cling to these fundamentals:

1. Artificial regulation of industry does not stabilize, but to the contrary, throws the entire economic machine out of balance;

2. Paternalism in government toward industry or organized labor indicates a desire either to control, or defective leadership;

3. Regulation of production should not depend on potential profits, but on the ability of the people to consume.

Therefore, we make this analysis of objections, as we stated at the outset of this article, on the basis that the Guffey bill is not good legislation for the whole people, and from that standpoint we look to the defeat of the measure, and urge your active support to that end.

JOE OZANIC, President.
J. H. FANCHER, Vice President.
C. E. PEARCY, Secretary-Treasurer.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to voice my opinion in regard to the pending bill. While, as Members of this body, we are all interested in the problems of the bituminous coal industry, there are some of us who hail from purely urban districts, who are especially and particularly interested in the consumers. My district, comprising four populous wards on the west side of the city of Detroit, consumes, along with the rest of the residential and manufacturing parts of the city, many millions of tons of coal per annum, yet produces no coal at all. The State of Michigan produces perhaps seven or eight hundred thousand tons of coal altogether, which is a very fractional amount of the bituminous coal produced in this country. It is therefore natural that I would deal with this problem from the standpoint of the interest of the consumer. Accordingly, from the very outset I undertook to make of the consumers' counsel, who is amply provided for in this bill, the most powerful individual connected with the administration of the act. The consumers' counsel, due to my insistence and the support I received from my colleagues on the committee, has the right to intervene at any time or at any place whenever in his estimation the consumers' interests are involved, much less jeopardized. He is authorized to make his report separately and independently of the commission and makes it direct to Congress. He can therefore make recommendations for amending the act when in his experience he finds the consumer interest insufficiently protected. In other words, he is not subservient to any of the commissioners. He is independent and powerful in his own right and in a position to protect the consumers' interest at all times. He attends meetings of the commission without invitation, in his own right, not as heretofore merely tolerated.

I never have been convinced that even the old Guffey coal bill jeopardized the interest of the consumer; but if there ever was any doubt in my mind, it is completely dispelled by the provisions of this bill. This bill protects the consumers' interest entirely.

Mr. Chairman, I was not altogether willing to go along on the question of whether or not this commission should be under the Secretary of the Interior. I thought possibly it would have been wise to make of this an independent commission, responsible directly to Congress, but I agreed to submerge my ideas in the matter, provided the consumers' interests were carefully considered and fully protected.

There is a phase of this bill that appeals to me a great deal. It is the conservation feature which will follow in the wake of sane competition. This feature is not even mentioned though it will work out that way. As we go over this country of ours, rich in natural resources, we find that the American public, the American producer, whether it is timber, coal, oil, or any other natural resource, is spending these natural resources like a drunken sailor, with no consideration whatever for future generations.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I will yield in a moment. What has contributed more than anything else to the plundering and waste of these natural resources of coal, oil, timber, and natural gas is this cutthroat, unscrupulous competition.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. In regard to spending the resources of the people, according to the latest figures obtainable by scientific experts, there is enough bituminous coal in the United States to supply the world at the present rate of consumption for a thousand years.

Mr. DINGELL. I do not care if there is enough to supply the consumers of bituminous coal for 10,000 years. That is no argument why you should go out and ruthlessly and sinfully waste the God-given natural resources which cannot be replaced.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Michigan 3 additional minutes.

Mr. DINGELL. It is my contention that in the bituminous-coal industry, due to the practice among large coal buyers, using the "squeeze play", so to speak, the domestic consumers, who constitute between 12 and 15 percent of the consuming public, were obliged to pay what was rightfully to be paid by the commercial users of bituminous coal. In other words, coal produced at the mine, costing as high as $1.65 a ton, was frequently purchased, because of a combination between the large consumers, for as low as one-third of the cost of production. The utilities, railroads, and industry, consuming 85 to 88 percent, were the beneficiaries of this piratical practice. The attendant result was that the burden of costs was shifted to the 12 to 15 percent, the small household consumer; he had to make up this difference, he had to pay the other fellow's tariff. In the meantime, there was no concern about how the coal was produced. The choicest part of a rich coal seam was mined and the rest of it was not even propped. It was permitted, as soon as it was mined out, to cave. Millions of tons were thus being wasted. The most reckless kind of mining was foisted upon the industry because of cutthroat competition—labor was, as usual, the sorriest and most abused victim of our inexcusable system. The natural resources in this country sooner or later must be conserved. The same situation obtains in the oil industry and in the gas industry. It is enough to make your hair stand on end when we realize, for example, that in west Texas alone a billion and a half cubic feet of gas goes into the air every 24 hours. It would mean more and would be more impressive if the people of this country realized that that amounts to 175,000 barrels of oil, going into the sky every 24 hours. Greater losses are occurring every day in the bituminous-coal industry and no one pays any attention. It is high time that something be done to prevent further ruthless exploitation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Kentucky 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the soft-coal mining industry is a most interesting matter of discussion and study. Many of us think of bituminous coal as providing heat, power, and electricity only. We take from coal the beautiful and wonderful fast colors of red, purple, crimson, blue, green, yellow, and so forth. When we see a lady dressed in a beautiful crimson gown, we can hardly realize that the color was taken from coal.

Coal provides us not only with power and heat as weapons of national defense, but it is from coal that we take the chemicals forming the base of our high explosives for our great guns and other instruments of warfare. No pharmacopoeia is complete unless it has hundreds of tried and effective medical remedies derived from bituminous coal.

I have the honor to represent one of the great bituminous-coal producing districts of the Nation. A single county of my district in some years has produced and marketed approximately 20,000,000 tons of coal. My friend the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], who has made such a splendid speech in behalf of this bill, tells us of a mine in his district which produces 4,000 tons of coal per day. I have a mine in my district which produces, day after day, more than 10,000 tons of high-class bituminous coal.

There is no industry which has so many ups and downs, handicaps, drawbacks, losses, and uncertainties as the bituminous coal-mining industry, and there is no class of workmen in this country in any industry which has been and is subject to as many hardships, lack of employment, poor living conditions and low wages as the bituminous-coal industry for many years. Those who are not conversant with the coal-mining industry cannot appreciate the handicaps to the coal-mining industry or the hardships of the miners. It is a very hazardous employment. The miners perform their work in the darkness of the bowels of the earth, and the floor or bottom of a great majority of the mines have water in them all the time, and the miners come from work with their clothing soaking wet. The Federal Government and the State governments have enacted statutes and provided inspection to lessen mine disasters, yet mine disasters are almost of weekly occurrence in which many miners lose their lives. One out of every 10 employed in the mines loses his life.

This is one of the great essential and key industries of the Nation.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If all those who produce coal would quit, this country would suffer a great calamity, would it not?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. My friend is right. Our great cities would be plunged into darkness; our great railroads would come to a standstill; the factories, shops, and mills would be stilled. Perhaps more than a hundred million people in wintertime would suffer and many would perish with cold. Most of our common schools, colleges, and universities would be closed. Our hospitals could not provide for the sick and disabled; the ordinary and common offices of the household in cooking, laundry, and so forth, would be stopped; in a word, almost all of the activities of this Nation would at once be paralyzed.

JUSTICE TO ALL

I am one of those who sincerely believes that we ought not to want meat, flour, meal, fruits, or any other products of the farm, clothing, shoes, furniture, coal, transportation, or any other product of the factory, mill, shops, or transportation at prices that will not pay a fair return on the investment on the farm or industry and will not make it possible to pay real American wages and provide a real American living standard for the producers and workers in the various producing activities of our Nation. [Applause.]

All of us should be willing to pay such prices for our coal and other products consumed by us as will insure a fair return to the producers and to the workers who provide these commodities for our use. None of those, whether living in Boston, Chicago, or any other part of this great land of ours, should insist on having bituminous coal at a price that does not pay a reasonable return on the investment and a decent American wage to those who toil in the mines and risk their lives in producing this coal. [Applause.]

I wish to commend our colleague, Mr. MCCORMACK of Massachusetts, for the very splendid and interesting speech he has made in support of this measure. Of course, he has no coal mines in his district. For one, I deeply appreciate the information that he has brought to us and the broad and statesmanlike manner in which he has approached the subject. At this point I also wish to commend the very able and splendid speech made by my colleague, Mr. JENKINS of Ohio, in support of this legislation, and the illuminating and eloquent speech of my colleague, Mr. FRED M. VINSON, on the legal aspects as well as other features of this bill. He, Mr. JENKINS, and Mr. MCCORMACK differ in political faith, and Mr. VINSON and Mr. MCCORMACK have no coal mines in their districts. Being members of the Ways and Means Committee and having made a careful study of the legal and other aspects of this situation over a period of years, they have brought to us a very comprehensive view on the national aspects of this proposed legislation; and, after all, we must consider this very great and important question not only as it affects our own immediate communities but as it affects the Nation as a whole.

THE REAL "SORE TOE" OF INDUSTRY

As we have heretofore pointed out, there has been for many years more distress in the bituminous-coal industry and among the workers in the bituminous coal industry than any other in this Nation, and because of this condition the industry and the workers have been a subject of 25 years or more of intensive study and investigation. There was a time when we mined and consumed annually approximately 550,000,000 tons of coal in this country, and there were employed in the production of that coal more than 700,000 miners. Of all the power and heat units, coal provided approximately 72 percent. We have valuable bituminous coal deposits in 26 of the 48 States of the Union, and in 1936 we produced altogether something more than 400,000,000 tons of bituminous coal. Now approximately 70 percent of this total production came from Kentucky, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, and Illinois.

This study discloses some startling information. In 1923 there was paid out in wages in this industry approximately $900,000,000, but in the peak prosperous year of 1929 these wages had dropped to less than $600,000,000, a decline of more than 30 percent. The number of men employed fell from 705,000 in 1923 to a little over 500,000 in 1929. Coal production dropped from 535,000,000 tons in 1929 to 310,000,000 tons in 1932. The average price for the Nation over dropped from $2.68 in 1923 to $1.34 in 1933. For the last several years the average price was less than $1.50, and the average price in 1936 the Nation over, f. o. b. the mines, was about $1.72 per ton, but in many of the Southern States high-class bituminous coal averaged much less and down as low as $1 and $1.25 per ton.

The total annual wage payments for the year 1933 was less than $250,000,000. This was a drop from $850,000,000 in 1923 to $250,000,000 in 1933 in a period of 10 years. The total average annual wages for all miners were cut from $1,200 to a little over $400, although the number of days worked per man was increased from about 180 to 220 days.

The Treasury Department showed that this industry as a whole suffered great deficits and losses. In 1930 it was $42,000,000; in 1931 it was nearly $48,000,000; in 1932 it was $51,000,000; in 1933 it was nearly $48,000,000.

Therefore, as stated heretofore, no other industry has had so many drawbacks, so many failures and bankruptcies in the last 10 years as the soft-coal industry, from the operators' standpoint as well as the miners'.

In my own congressional district, so far as I have been able to learn, the average coal operator is anxious to pay decent American wages, but on account of the distress in this industry, the cutthroat competition, and the location of Kentucky coal with relation to the southern and northern markets, the wages of the miners in many of the mines have been very low. In fact, I know of one mine where the operator could not sell the coal, and it was up to the miners to either work in the mines or go on relief. The miners and the operator met together and the cards were laid on the table, and while the operator expressed regret that the situation was such that he could not do more, yet he could not pay more than $1 per day, and while he did not urge the miners to do so, yet he said if the miners desired to go to the mines and work for $1 per day he could and would operate the mines, and a great many miners, preferring to work at a dollar per day rather than go on the dole, did do so.

Some of the operators in my district are paying the union scale of wages, and one big mine, I am informed, pays from 10 to 15 percent in excess of the scale fixed by the United Mine Workers.

But because of conditions to which I shall call your attention hereafter, our mines are idle much of the time, and, of course, this works a hardship on the operators as well as the miners and their families, and thousands of miners who are anxious to work and support themselves and their families have been forced on relief; and because of this condition wages have been forced down and the operators have suffered losses.

During the past 25 years there have been meetings of Governors and other representatives from bituminous-coal States. There have been many meetings of the producers of coal. They have formed many organizations and associations and with great diligence have tried to formulate plans to meet the hazards and distress of this industry and the workers engaged therein. All of these plans have come to naught. It appears that no plan was workable that would stabilize this industry so as to provide a fair return on the investment and provide wages comparable with those received by the workers in other industries; and out of all this study and investigation came the stabilization coal bill which was passed by Congress in 1935 and which was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. The bill of 1935 provided for the fixing of minimum wages, hours, and so forth. The Supreme Court expressly held that the fixing of wages and hours was a purely State matter and not an interstate matter, and therefore could not be reached by an act of Congress under the Constitution, as the Constitution only gives Congress the power to regulate interstate commerce. Congress has no power over purely intrastate acts or intrastate commerce. It has been held over and over by a long line of decisions throughout the history of this country by the Supreme Court that the mere mining of coal is an intrastate act and is not interstate.

This bill omits the labor features of the 1935 so-called Guffey Act and confines the provisions of the bill merely to the distribution of coal that enters interstate commerce—that is, carried from one State to another.

HELPS PRODUCERS AND MINERS

The bill before us has nothing relating to the fixing of wages, hours, or working conditions. This bill relates solely and only to the stabilization of the coal-mining industry. The evidence before Congress discloses that 80 percent or more of the producers of the 400,000,000 or more tons of soft coal in 1936 favor this legislation, and the producers of less than 50,000,000 tons have expressed opposition. The chief opponent of this legislation is the large Pittsburgh Coal Co., of Pittsburgh, Pa. I am informed that it is the largest producer of bituminous coal in the United States.

It has been contended that this measure was intended to help the large producer of bituminous coal. The evidence submitted to Congress would indicate that the small producer of coal has more to gain from this legislation than the large producer. Because of the larger amount of capital and sales organization, and so forth, of the large producer, he can take care of his tonnage and provide storage and wait for advances in the market better than the small producer. The 80 percent or more of the producers of bituminous coal favor the bill because they believe it will stabilize this industry and will insure to the producers a more consecutive market, eliminate cutthroat competition, and force the large consumers of coal to pay a fair and reasonable market price, and in that way insure to the producers a fair return on their investment.

Practically all of the miners, as expressed through their organizations, favor this legislation because, they claim, if the producers receive a fair price for their coal and cutthroat competition is eliminated, the producers will be able to pay them wages comparable with the wages received by the workers in other industries.

ELIMINATED UNFAIR PRACTICES

There is no property that deteriorates so rapidly as the idle coal mine. Falling slate and the accumulation of water and dangerous gases require the constant attention of a considerable force at all times. The miners as a rule live in what is known as the mining camp, and they must depend as a rule entirely for their support from the mines. In order to keep the mines in a workable condition and prevent deterioration and provide support for the miners it is necessary for the mines, if possible, to operate regularly. In order to accomplish this and with the hope of selling the coal, the operator runs his mines, loads his cars, and fills his mine tracks, but he fails to secure buyers for the coal. The coal is in the cars and standing on the tracks. Heavy railroad demurrages accumulate on this unsold coal. In order to clear his tracks, stop demurrage, and find a market for this coal, the operator is often forced to take less than the cost of production. Large consumers of coal, such as factories, mills, shops, utilities, and railroads, sensing this situation, many times are able to buy this coal at much less than the cost of production. Other operators find themselves in the same situation, and the operators are forced in the position of meeting cutthroat competition. Many of the large consumers of coal have machinery by which coal is reduced to powder and blown into the furnace, and, of course, the slack of clean coal is almost as valuable to such consumers as block coal. In the last year I have known of slack from clean coal selling for as little as 20 cents per ton, and the operator paying 12½ cents per ton royalty to the landowner; and I have also known of many instances when the operator was forced to give the slack away or dump it.

The railroads of the Nation consume from 25 to 30 percent of the coal produced. They are the largest buyers of any group, and as a general rule they receive their coal at a very small margin of profit, or below cost. The domestic consumers of coal in this country use only about 12 or 15 percent. The domestic consumers as a rule require block coal for their use. This measure, in my opinion, will not increase the price of coal to the domestic consumer. It can be seen at once that to the extent that the large consumers of coal secure their coal below cost, this must be added to the price of domestic consumers; but under this measure the commission will fix a minimum price for each particular soft-coal producing section and the large consumer will be unable to secure coal at less than his minimum price and, of course, that price will be fixed at such a sum as will be fair and reasonable and enable the coal operator to make a fair and reasonable return on his investment and pay just and fair wages to the miners.

These unfair practices and this cutthroat competition should be eliminated. It is unfair to the soft-coal industry, it is unfair to the miners, and it is unfair to the ordinary and average consumer.

There are some features about this kind of legislation that I had hoped could be avoided. This is a complicated bill, and I am supporting it in the hope that it will benefit the producers and the miners and at the same time will not put an additional burden upon the average consumer, and believing it will eliminate the many unfair practices such as cutthroat competition forced upon the producers and the unfair advantage taken of the producers and miners by the large consumers of coal, and after all these 25 years of study and investigation and considering that the condition of this great industry continually grows worse and the situation of the producers and miners grows more precarious, I can see no workable plan to stabilize this great industry and save it from disaster except under the legislation here proposed.

SUBSTITUTES

If there should be any fear in the mind of the consumers of soft coal that this would unreasonably enhance the price, may I point out that oil, gas, and hydroelectric power are serious competitors of soft coal. John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, testified before a committee of Congress that these substitutes had reduced the annual consumption of coal approximately 200,000,000 tons, and that each million tons of reduction meant taking away the jobs of a thousand men—in other words, this had taken away the jobs of 200,000 miners—and we can see that the number of miners has been reduced from over 700,000 to approximately 500,000. If under this law the operators and miners should undertake to oppress the consumers with unreasonable prices for coal, it would mean an increase in the use of oil, gas, and hydroelectric power.

Due to the fact that we have enough equipped mines and enough trained miners, if they worked regularly 5 days to the week, to produce approximately a billion tons of bituminous coal, and to the further fact that we have deposits of valuable commercial bituminous coal in 26 States of the Union, I am satisfied that this measure cannot and will not bring about a monopoly in the bituminous-coal industry.

THE TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Having observed the distress of the soft-coal mining industry and the distress of the miners engaged in that industry over a period of many years, I voted against the T. V. A. In my opinion, one of the serious criticisms of this administration's policies is that it borrows and spends billions of dollars in promoting governmental activities in direct competition with private industry and the workers in private industry. For instance, the Government has borrowed and spent hundreds of millions of dollars in developing the T. V. A. Of course, this money comes out of the pockets of the taxpayers. In the first place, it greatly hinders and damages the $600,000,000 invested in the many private utility plants in that area, and it will take away the jobs of thousands of workers employed by these private utility companies and takes away a lot of the market for the bituminous coal in Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, and Alabama; and if the T. V. A. accomplishes what this administration says it will accomplish, in the course of a few years it will cut down one-half of the market for bituminous coal and take away one-half of the jobs of the coal miners in my congressional district, and will have a similar effect on the bituminous mines and miners in the States of Virginia, Tennessee, and Alabama. Of course, the T. V. A. provides a very few jobs to carry on its operation. The coal industry and the miners in my section are in bad enough condition without the Government putting into operation agencies that will greatly add to their distress.

KENTUCKY COAL HANDICAPPED

The average coal operator in my district, so far as I have been able to learn, is anxious to pay, and wants to pay, good wages to his miners. Kentucky, however, is handicapped as no other soft-coal producing State in the Union. We have a wonderful bituminous coal; in fact, it is superior to the bituminous coal of nearly any State in the Union, as shown by actual analysis. What is our trouble? Only a small part of the coal produced in Kentucky is consumed in that State. We must go to the coal markets to the north and to the south. In going to the coal markets of the north, we must pass through the coal-producing States of Indiana, Ohio, and Illinois. The freight rate is 45 cents per ton more for our coal to any of these markets to the north than it is on the coal produced in those States nearer the market. Forty-five cents is a big item when coal sells on the average f. o. b. the mines at perhaps less than $1.70 per ton.

A lot of Kentucky coal is also shipped to the southern markets, but in order to reach the southern markets Kentucky coal must go through the soft-coal producing States of Virginia, Tennessee, and Alabama. Unless the wide differential on freight rates on Kentucky coal is taken care of, it will put Kentucky out of the market, stop its coal mines, and throw its miners out of employment.

Now I come to the question I desire to put to my friend and colleague, Mr. FRED M. VINSON, from Kentucky, who is the author of this bill under consideration. He and his Committee on Ways and Means have, I am sure, made a careful study of this bill. Is this bill so framed that this differential can and will be taken care of and Kentucky coal will not be put out of the market?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. May I say to the gentleman that if I had the least thought that Kentucky coal would be put off the market, instead of being close to this bill I would get just as far away from it as I possibly could. I feel the language of this bill takes into consideration what the gentleman has in mind, among other things, the increased cost of transportation. I feel this bill is drafted to permit coal as such from Kentucky and the other fields of the country to move in competition to common consuming points upon a similar competitive basis as heretofore.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I thank the gentleman for his statement. I want to support legislation that will help the coal miners and coal operators of Kentucky. I certainly do not wish to support any measure that will injure the coal industry or the coal miners of Kentucky. The United Mine Workers' organization and other miners' organizations have always recognized that this 45-cent freight-rate differential must be taken into consideration if we are to have any coal business and work for the miners in Kentucky. We all regret that Kentucky is not more favorably situated to the markets and that we do have this freight-rate differential, but we are confronted with a condition and not a theory. Kentucky is right where she is. We do have the advantage in having one of the very best bituminous coals in the Nation.

There has been some statements made on the floor of the House today that this bill is going to interfere with every little coal operation in the country. This measure, if I understand it correctly, is directed and bottomed on the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution and is attempting to stabilize the coal industry so far as it is engaged in interstate commerce, and it does not cover little local wagon or truck mines. For instance, in my county and at my county-seat town there are a number of men taking coal from little wagon or truck mines and bringing the coal into the town. There is no large coal operation near my home town. Is there anything in this bill that would interfere with that? None of the coal mentioned enters interstate commerce at all.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I do not think the small mine the gentleman describes would come under the terms of this bill.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I am stating a case that involves intrastate commerce only.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. We should have a definite understanding that intrastate coal, when it involves undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination of interstate commerce, comes under the terms of this bill.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I do not think the bill covers the situation that I speak of.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I do not think the case which the gentleman states creates the undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination that is necessary.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Let me call my colleague's attention to some other counties in my district. There are little mines—wagon or truck—that do not send a pound of coal out of the State.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. In my opinion, the small mines to which the gentleman refers do not fall within the act.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. If the bill includes those strictly intrastate mines such as I have mentioned, then the bill will be in danger of receiving adverse action at the hands of the Supreme Court. Congress under the Constitution has the power to regulate interstate commerce, but it cannot regulate purely intrastate commerce.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. We attempted to regulate the interstate feature and the interstate transactions, and in order for intrastate transactions to fall within the terms of his bill there must be undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination against interstate commerce.

Mr. SHORT. That is a matter for the commission itself to determine.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It is a matter of law, which under this machinery the commission itself may determine.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. But the small-mine operator himself may determine whether he is violating the law or not.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman, of course, is familiar with section 4 (a), which provides—

> After hearing finds that the prices of coal sold by producers in transactions in intrastate commerce cause any undue or unreasonable advantage, preference, or prejudice—

And so forth. It seems to me that is a pretty broad provision.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. If this measure is as broad as the gentleman from South Dakota would indicate, that would cause the Supreme Court to hold this measure unconstitutional if we should pass it.

Believing that this bill will stabilize the coal-mining industry and will provide a fair return upon the investment of the small as well as the large operator of bituminous-coal mines, and believing that it will mean decent American wages for all the miners engaged in producing this coal, enabling them to provide for themselves and their families in a real American way and according to the American standard of living, I am giving this measure my support. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, it is clearly manifest that there is some dislocation in the bituminous coal business. This impressed me many years ago when I first became a member of the Pennsylvania Legislature. We were having difficulties then, as you are having them now. At that time we had prolonged strikes, with coal selling on the tipple at $1 a ton, Ida Tarbell making her reports on rebates, and all sorts of troubles connected with the bituminous coal business.

I have been thinking about this history as I have listened to the wonderful presentation from a constitutional standpoint made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON], who seemed to make it clear that in the minds of those who favor the bill it will be constitutional. One thing is certain, you cannot tell whether it is constitutional until you try it.

It is my opinion that long ago we ought to have known at least two things that are paramount in the economy of this country. One of them is in regard to interstate commerce. It does seem to me that it is about time for legislative bodies and the judiciary to know what constitutes interstate commerce or intrastate commerce, or both, much the same way as we long ago ought to have known something more about the Federal Reserve System without having to wait until 11,000 banks failed in 1 day. These constitutional and legal questions ought to have been settled long ago. However, economic and social conditions have changed, until I find up in the district that I represent—what is known as the Broad Top bituminous coal field, than whose residents, who are practically all Americans, no finer citizens live anywhere—conditions which impel me to stand before you today and speak in the interest of this bill.

I had to do with the anthracite field when I was a member of the Pennsylvania State Senate. Later on we saw that whole difficulty ironed out and solved by President Theodore Roosevelt, who sent a commission up there to make an investigation. I have read carefully the reports of that commission, and I am told by those who are more directly interested in this matter than am I that this commission is modeled after the one that was set up by President Theodore Roosevelt.

I sincerely hope there may come out of this a betterment of the conditions existing today. I do not wish to give you the sob story that I could give you about these people, my constituents, people who want to work, who are willing to work, who can work, but are without the opportunity. The miner himself is without a chance. The operator is without a chance. The railroads that are constructed into these mines are in financial straits. One of them is in the hands of the receivers, and another has just been rescued from that position.

In proof that these people in my district are progressing, that they are ready for the call of the market for this coal, they have set up washeries. They break the coal into sizes and send as fine coal to market as can be found anywhere.

I do not care to accept the challenge of the gentleman from Kentucky, or from anywhere else, but everyone knows the quality of the great Pittsburgh vein of coal. The coal veins in Pennsylvania are not all of that same quality, to be sure; but I do know that whatever comes out of this, whether it is turned down as unconstitutional or considered constitutional, you are not going to know about it until it is presented to the Supreme Court. However, we do know from contact with these fine people up there that whatever does happen as a consequence of the passage of this legislation and its enforcement, we cannot make things worse.

Let me say that if you do not do something pretty soon I will get a lot of miners together up at Huntingdon and Broad Top, Six Mile Run, Saxton, Hopewell, Orbisonia, and Shade Gap, and that section of the coal region around Dudley, and we will have a little session together and draft you a bill based on common sense and without so much argument. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, certainly, I have no desire to quarrel with the aims of this bill. The stabilization of the industry and an improvement in the economic condition of the workmen are things that probably every Member of this House desires, and I no less than anyone. The question I raise with respect to the bill, however, is whether or not it will accomplish these purposes because of section 4 (a) as it applies to the coal miners and the intrastate coal industry in my district by destroying the very industry itself.

Under section 4 (a) it is specifically stated:

> Whenever the commission upon investigation instituted upon its own motion or upon petition of any code member, district board, State or political subdivision thereof, or the consumers' counsel, after hearing finds that the price of coal sold by producers in transactions in intrastate commerce cause any undue or unreasonable advantage, preference, or prejudice as between persons and localities in such commerce on the one hand and interstate commerce on the other hand—

It becomes amendable to the provisions of the act.

The author of the bill [Mr. VINSON] has stated that in his opinion it does not apply to the small operator or the small miner, yet the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] has said that in his opinion "coal mined in any State competes with coal mined in every other State." On this basis coal miners and coal producers of my district have wired me that they believe that section 4 (a) would kill the business they are now engaged in developing.

The actual production of coal in South Dakota is so small at the present time that my friend from Kentucky would laugh if I were to give him the figures. Suffice it to say that this industry has been in operation less than 25 years at the most. The country was opened for settlement that long ago. During many of the years since, when economic conditions permitted the people to get a better wage somewhere else, they have not worked in the coal fields, but in our best years we have produced about 60,000 tons a year.

Our coal is a lignite coal, mined in open or strip mines and hauled away in trucks. Practically all of the coal price therefore goes for labor. The wages compare favorably with other wages in the territory and the hazards are not those of the underground miner of whom most of you speak. The sales are to near-by farms or towns and the business is strictly within the State. The miners are laborers and farmers who prefer work to relief.

If this section of the bill attempts to regulate intrastate commerce as plain words give it power to do, we may have to raise the question of constitutionality. This is not a question that I like to raise, but I recall that in 1930 the present President of the United States, then Governor of the State of New York, speaking before the Governors' Conference at Salt Lake City, said with respect to the Hawes-Cooper bill, which attempted to regulate prison-made goods:

> I would even go one step further than Governor Christianson. I regard this very distinctly as an invasion of what I call State home rule. I would go one step further and doubt very much the constitutionality of that act. It seems to me that it is incumbent upon some of us to test out the constitutionality of the Hawes-Cooper Act.

However, there is not merely the technical question of whether or not section 4 (a) violates the Constitution, there is also the question of whether or not it is desirable to attempt to regulate young intrastate industry. On this point I should like to bring to you the testimony of the President himself with regard to the development of new industries in the newer sections of the country.

I have been much impressed as I have listened to the arguments on this floor with respect to the social condition that has developed in the country and the statements that we have passed beyond the pioneering stage.

In many districts that may be true, but certainly in my own district it is not true. Our best days are ahead. This measure points to an eventual control that will "freeze" production rights on the basis of present records. It assumes that you have a mature industry. That is not true in South Dakota, certainly not of our coal. Any industry that is not yet 25 years old has not reached that stage and I should like to plead for some consideration to the development of our younger States where there are still new horizons and where hope is not dead.

In 1930 the Governor of the State of New York, now President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt, in a speech broadcast on the 2d of March, said:

The proper relations between the Government of the United States and the governments of the separate States thereof depend entirely, in their legal aspects, on what powers have been voluntarily ceded to the central government by the States themselves. What these powers of government are is contained in our Federal Constitution, either by direct language, by judicial interpretation thereof during many years, or by implication so plain as to have been recognized by the people generally.

The United States Constitution has proven itself the most marvelously elastic compilation of rules of government ever written. Drawn up at a time when the population of this country was practically confined to a fringe along our Atlantic coast, combining into one nation for the first time, scattered and feeble States, newly released from the autocratic control of the English Government, its preparation involved innumerable compromises between the different commonwealths. Fortunately for the stability of our Nation, it was already apparent that the vastness of our territory presented geographical and climatic differences which gave to the States wide differences in the nature of their industry, their agriculture, and their commerce. Already the New England States had turned toward shipping and manufacturing, while the South was devoting itself almost exclusively to the easier agriculture which a milder climate permitted. Thus already it was clear to the framers of our Constitution that the greatest possible liberty of self-government must be given to each State, and that any national administration attempting to make all laws for the whole Nation, such as was wholly practical in Great Britain, would inevitably result at some future time in a dissolution of the Union itself.

The preservation of this home rule by the States is not a cry of jealous Commonwealths seeking their own aggrandizement at the expense of sister States. It is a fundamental necessity if we are to remain a truly united country. The whole success of our democracy has not been that it is a democracy wherein the will of a bare majority of the total inhabitants is imposed upon the minority, but because it has been a democracy where, through a division of government into units called States, the rights and interests of the minority have been respected and have always been given a voice in the control of our affairs. This is the principle on which the little State of Rhode Island is given just as large a voice in our national Senate as the great State of New York.

The moment a mere numerical superiority by either States or voters in this country proceeds to ignore the needs and desires of the minority, and, for their own selfish purposes or advancement, hamper or oppress that minority, or debar them in any way from equal privileges and equal rights—that moment will mark the failure of our constitutional system.

For this reason, a proper understanding of the fundamental powers of the States is very necessary and important. There are already, I am sorry to say, danger signals flying. A lack of study and knowledge of the matter of the sovereign power of the people through State government has led us to drift insensibly toward that dangerous disregard of minority needs which marks the beginning of autocracy.

Those, ladies and gentlemen, are not the words of "a defeatist lawyer", nor the voice of "horse and buggy" days. They are the wise words of a man who then saw clearly that the true answer to the problem of American growth is the development of America, words spoken just 7 years ago.

It seems to me the gentlemen who are most in favor of this bill would care to see that it is constitutional by exempting purely intrastate commerce, and that would help to insure the onward march of the American people.

The coal that is mined in the districts I am speaking about does not enter into interstate commerce. It would be to your interest to insure that the bill itself is not found later to be unconstitutional. But more than this, I want to put in a word for the development of a new country. We have out there, we are told by the Great Plains Drought Committee, a resource of lignite coal that will become in time the great coal reserve of the country. Figures mean nothing because they are only guesses today—we need more development to know—but we have been told there is a reserve coal supply in the Northwest sufficient for North America for 400,000 years. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, the legislation under consideration is of vital importance not only to my own district and State but to the Nation as a whole.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] declared this afternoon during debate in opposition to the bill that the coal industry is a dying one. In reply I should like to emphasize to the Members that it is not due to a lack of markets that the industry might be classed as dying, but it is, rather, due to the ills within the industry itself. In support of this contention it will be interesting and enlightening to quote production figures in the bituminous industry. In the year 1935 there were 372,373,122 tons of coal mined throughout the United States, an increase of 124,000,000 over 1932. In the year 1936, 434,070,000 tons were mined by 6,500 operators, an increase of more than 138,000,000 tons over the previous year. During the months of January and February 1936 there were 39,795,000 and 41,154,000 tons, respectively, produced. During January and February 1937 there were, respectively, 40,940,000 and 41,740,000 tons mined.

Consumption of the commodity, therefore, has not been decreasing, and we should remember that the figures presented for the first 2 months of the present year are based upon unusually warm-weather conditions, whereas in the same period last year a major portion of our Nation was swept with unusually cold weather.

I repeat again that within the bituminous-coal industry itself there lie the unhealthy conditions which must be remedied now. In this connection I desire to read from a letter received by myself from John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America:

As you are aware, repeated investigations by Congress have disclosed the long-disordered condition of the bituminous coal industry, due primarily to its overdeveloped productive capacity and to its consequent cutthroat struggle for markets. Since mine labor constitutes from 60 to 65 percent of production cost, the effect of this ruthless competition is reflected directly in the wages of mine workers and the living standards of their families.

The Coal Act of 1935 sought to establish a floor level of minimum prices, determined by actual cost of production, as a fair method of stabilizing the interstate marketing of bituminous coal. Because the act included certain labor provisions which the majority of the Supreme Court thought were inseparable from the minimum price regulations, and which were held to be beyond congressional control, the act was held invalid on a 5 to 4 division of the Court. The House then, in 1936, passed H. R. 12800, which reenacted the act with the labor provisions omitted, and that bill, though favorably reported by the Senate committee, failed to reach a vote in the Senate.

Except for minor changes in phrasing, this is the same bill. Though disappointed at the failure of mine labor to find shelter under the law for its right to organize and collectively bargain, the mine workers are still vitally interested in legislation that will end the practice of seeking markets at any price and cutting wages to attain that miserable objective.

The bill provides for commission control of both minimum and maximum prices and creates as an independent agency a consumers' counsel whose function is to represent consumers in the deliberation of the commission. It is also noteworthy that, in view of the tax imposed by the bill, the administration of this measure will entail no financial burden on the Government.

Honest legislative efforts have been made formerly to enact stabilization measures for the bituminous-coal industry. I feel that under the provisions of this act we meet the problem on a constitutional basis and that the Supreme Court will not declare invalid this bill, which I believe will have the speedy approval of both the House and Senate.

We have listened today to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] declare his intention of supporting this measure. He, doubtless, along with a great many other Members, has believed in the principles of such regulatory legislation for the coal industry; and whereas he has criticized the provisions of the N. R. A. as being too broad in scope, he feels that we must do something at once to stabilize the bituminous-coal industry.

I am personally familiar with distressing conditions. West Virginia is the largest bituminous coal-producing State in the Union, and in 1936 produced about 28 percent of the Nation's output. Out of the 15 counties in my own congressional district, 9 of them—namely, Barbour, Grant, Mineral, Monongalia, Pocahontas, Preston, Randolph, Tucker, and Webster—produce bituminous coal in huge quantities.

We have seen the chaotic conditions in the industry grow steadily worse. Too long has there occurred the crucifixion of both the miner and operator—the former on the cross of long hours, short pay, and bad working conditions; the latter through unhealthy overproduction and disastrous price cutting. It is my desire to see huts and hovels in mining regions turned into happy homes; to see dreadful drudgery become noble labor; to see profits accrue to the operators and those who have financially invested in the industry; to see added safety and security for all those affected. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. EDMISTON].

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, a great deal has been said on the floor today about the constitutionality of this new Vinson coal bill. I am not a lawyer, and I shall not touch on that subject. I do not pretend to know anything about it, but I do know what has happened in the coal fields of West Virginia since the enactment of the N. R. A. and the Guffey coal bill up until the old bill was declared unconstitutional. I know that peace and prosperity reigned there instead of strife and starvation, which we had had for years before governmental regulation in the bituminous-coal industry. Therefore, I urge upon the Representatives from non-coal-producing districts to assist us in passing this bill. I think if they will check up on the record they will find that the Representatives of the coal-mining districts supported their cotton bill and their tobacco bill, and in return they should support us in our coal bill. [Applause.]

Another point which I want my colleagues, who are opposing the bill on the ground that it increases the cost of coal to their constituents, to consider is the fact that under the N. R. A. and the Guffey bill, until is was declared unconstitutional, the records show that the price of domestic coal was not increased, but was decreased in all of the larger centers of population all over the country. The price of coal under the N. R. A. and the Guffey bill has been increased to the railroads, to the utilities, and to the manufacturing consumer. This is as it should be, in my opinion, because these people in the old days took advantage of the fact that the coal operator could not store his slack coal, of which 85 percent is used by utilities and industries, and held out on him until he would sacrifice his slack coal at a price far below the cost of production; then, naturally, in desperation to endeavor to balance his books he raised the price to the domestic consumer. The railroads of our country, up until the time of the N. R. A., practically stole their coal from the coal operator. They never paid a price equivalent to the cost of producing the coal, and, of course, the consuming public had to pay the difference. I have already told you of the peace and prosperity which exists in the West Virginia coal fields today as compared to the strife and starvation which existed prior to governmental regulation. It is hard to believe now that conditions could exist in America as those which did exist in the coal fields of West Virginia.

Many operators wanted to be fair, but in competition with ruthless operators, who installed "yellow dog" contracts at their mines, which compelled their men to purchase their food, clothing, and supplies from the company commissaries at a most unreasonable price. In the old days a miner had to buy his powder, to shoot his coal, from the company for which he worked, and that company, in many cases of record, charged him from 5 to 10 times the cost of the powder. One of the opponents of the bill has said that he opposes it on the ground that it gives a monopoly to the large coal operator and drives the smaller operator out of business. I do not believe this to be the case, but if it is the case I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that, in 1933, all coal operators, both large and small, were in the red. The bonds of the largest coal companies in the United States were purchasable on the market for 10 percent of their face value. Their preferred and common stocks had no value whatever, and they were all delinquent, for many years, in the payment of their taxes to the State. The State of West Virginia merely permitted them to continue to operate because to foreclose on them would have added more to an already overwhelming burden of unemployment. One final point I want my friends from non-coal-producing sections of the country to consider is that the cost to enforce and administer this bill is borne wholly by the coal industry and does not cost the taxpayers of America one single cent. As a matter of fact, on a tonnage basis far below that of 1936, it will put into the Treasury around $3,000,000 more than it will cost the Treasury.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I have been over this bill very carefully, and I feel there are some things about it, some effects bound to flow from it, that I should call to the attention of the House. Under the provisions of section 3 (a), a one-half of 1 percent tax is imposed on all coal produced and sold and under the provisions of section 3, paragraph (b), a 19½-percent tax is imposed upon those who do not become and remain code members. Under section 4 a code is set up to which the producers are supposed to belong. Boards are set up in 23 different localities, and these boards are made up of the large producers. That is, the producers have the privilege of naming the boards in the same proportion that their tonnage would figure. In balloting for board members the tonnage counts. That means that only the large producers would be in on it. There is to be one employee member in each territory, and these members are supposed to give a little bit of statistics to the Commission which is set up under sections 1 and 2. Then the Commission is to fix the minimum and maximum prices of coal in each district.

This coal industry, as has been said here by many, has been in difficulty for a long time, due, undoubtedly, as the history of it shows, to the competition that it has received from the oil industry, the natural gas industry, and the hydroelectric power industry. The development of those three industries has gone on in increasing velocity over the last 15 years, and the difficulties of the soft-coal industry has been very largely traceable to the competition that has come from that development.

If they are going to fix a minimum price at which coal must be sold, then their market will be more and more restricted, because of the competition of hydroelectric power, natural gas, and the fuel oil. Only because fuel-oil prices are maintained as a result of the restrictions on the production of oil at the present time has it been possible for the bituminous-coal industry to obtain any price at all. This is my idea of the result that the people in the bituminous-coal industry are going to get from this bill. You are imposing a tax upon it and you are imposing restrictions on the way that people can do business. You are placing most of the power to handle the situation in the hands of the large producers and ignoring the small producers almost entirely. The result of that situation will be that it will be harder and harder as a result of this bill for the soft-coal producers to market their products and maintain their markets. That is the way it will work out, insofar as the bituminous industry is concerned, and it is going to be a little more difficult for the consumer in the city and in the far-off territory where they are dependent upon bituminous coal to obtain the coal and to pay for it. It will just be one more mess of governmental regimentation and Government control, and the result will not benefit the bituminous-coal producer or the bituminous-coal laborer or the man who lives in the city and who is obliged to use that coal. It seems to me it is absolutely ridiculous, for that reason, for us to go further with this kind of regulation and I hope that the membership of the House will have those things in mind, the interest of the industry, the interest of the workingmen and of the consumers when they come to vote on the bill.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. Under the terms of this bill, does not the commission become a quasi-legislative and also a quasi-judicial body? The Congress gives over to this commission both the power to legislate and to adjudicate?

Mr. TABER. It does.

Mr. SHORT. And the Congress does not have anything to say about it?

Mr. TABER. There is no question about that.

In 1930 the Governor of the State of New York, now President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt, in a speech broadcast on the 2d of March, said:

Mr. TABER. I think the gentleman has placed his finger on the fundamental trouble with the bituminous-coal fields today—that is, the competition of these three sources he has named. Would the gentleman say, in view of that fact, that anybody who voted for the T. V. A. and water power would be consistent in supporting this bill, when they caused, largely, the trouble in the bituminous-coal fields today?

They very certainly helped to bring about the sorry state of the bituminous-coal industry today. The more they go into that sort of thing, the more damage they do. The Government financing of hydroelectric-power propositions, where it is costing the Government many times what it gets out of it in revenue to produce the power——

Mr. MASON. And ruining the miners?

Mr. TABER. And ruining the miners, is absolutely ridiculous. It is absolutely ridiculous for the country to go into that kind of business. Business enterprises on the part of the Government are designed to ruin the workingmen employed in the industries with which it competes. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 16 minutes.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield before he starts his speech?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], in the conclusion of his remarks, which were approved by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], stated that what was ruining the bituminous-coal business was the competition of oil and electric power. I wish to say to both of the gentlemen that the bituminous-coal industry was ruined and in misery 25 years before you ever heard of oil or these other products of other industries. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, this bill could well be given two or three different titles. One title could very well be "the emasculated Guffey bill" of historic interest, in connection with which the President of the United States advised his party associates to vote for the bill, irrespective of any doubts as to constitutionality, "however reasonable." It was found to be unconstitutional by the Court. Now we have left the emasculated Guffey bill.

Another title I would like to give it is "a bill to permit the producers of bituminous coal to gouge the public." That is what it is, because if this is not intended to raise the price of bituminous coal, it has no purpose whatsoever, and we might just as well not waste our time considering it. Stabilize prices? Yes. Stabilize them upward against the people who burn bituminous coal in their homes and in industry. That is exactly what you are endeavoring to do. You are so determined to do it that a majority of the Ways and Means Committee would not even give those who were opposed to it a chance to be heard. Not a line of testimony was taken in public hearings. Therefore, I say it is even more indicative of the fact that it is the old Guffey bill, because they said, "We got all the information available at that time." The purpose of the original bill and the purpose of the pending bill is to stabilize prices upward, against the consumers of bituminous coal.

The pending bill reenacts the price-fixing provisions of the original Guffey Act, which also contained wage and labor provisions. This act was invalidated by the Supreme Court on May 18, 1936. The proponents of the bill claim that the part which was declared unconstitutional has been omitted. Let us see whether it has or not. Let us see what the Court said in that decision. It held the wage and hour provisions unconstitutional and said that the price-fixing provisions must fall with them. Then it added:

> The price-fixing provisions of the code are thus disposed of without coming to the question of their constitutionality, but neither this disposition of the matter nor anything we have stated is to be taken as indicating that the Court is of the opinion that these provisions, if separately enacted, could be sustained.

Those are the exact words of the Supreme Court decision, rendered on May 18, 1936. They took absolutely no stand on sustaining the part of the bill now before us. So that when the proponents of this measure come forward with the statement that the measure is constitutional, they are presuming on the possible results of further action on the part of the Supreme Court. I do not think any advocate of the bill will deny that this measure, as left now, will eventually come before the Supreme Court. They did not pass on the validity of the price fixing, but they took particular pains not to hold out any hope that the price-fixing provisions, considered by themselves, would be upheld.

However, I do not intend to argue the constitutionality of the price-fixing provisions at this time. The primary question, it seems to me, is whether the price-fixing provisions should be enacted into law, even if they were constitutional. In my opinion, they should not.

Let me emphasize the fact that this bill does not provide primarily for Government regulation against "excessive" coal prices. On the contrary, it gives Government sanction to minimum price fixing by the coal industry itself.

Those who are sponsoring the bill will, of course, deny that the industry has the power to fix its own prices. But let us see just what the bill provides. Let the bill speak for itself.

Section 4 of the bill constitutes the proposed bituminous coal code, to which all coal producers must subscribe in order to avoid the penalty tax of 19½ percent under section 3 (b). Part I of the code sets up 23 district boards, 1 for each of the coal-producing areas designated in the appendix to the bill. These boards are to be composed of from 3 to 17 members, as determined by a majority vote of the district tonnage. This means that the large producers will dictate the number of members. All of the members of the district boards, with the exception of one labor member on each, are to be producer-members of the code.

These 23 district boards are required by part II of the code to propose minimum prices for the various kinds, qualities, and sizes of coal produced in each district.

These minimum prices are to be based on the weighted average of the total cost of production of all the coal produced in the district, and in determining total costs the district boards are permitted to include the cost of labor, supplies, power, taxes, insurance, workmen's compensation, royalties, depreciation, depletion, and all other expenses of production, coal operators' association dues, district board assessments for board operating expenses, and reasonable costs of selling and the cost of administration. In other words, everything is included but the kitchen stove.

Now let us see who is to pass upon the propriety of these minimum prices as proposed by the coal producers themselves. Section 2 of the bill sets up a national bituminous coal commission, composed of seven members, who are empowered to approve, disapprove, or modify the minimum prices submitted by the district boards, and to coordinate minimum prices in the various consuming markets. Ordinarily when a commission of this kind is set up, it is a disinterested body. The pending bill, however, provides that two of the seven members of the commission shall be experienced coal producers, and two experienced mine workers. This gives the coal industry a working majority on the commission, which is to pass upon the minimum prices proposed by the district boards which are also composed of coal producers and one labor member on each. As a matter of fact, there is nothing in the bill to prevent the entire coal commission being composed of men with the coal industry's point of view.

The only qualification for the remaining three members is that they shall have no financial interest, direct or indirect, in the production and distribution of coal, but I call attention to the fact that the present coal commission, established under the invalidated law, had this same qualification for the entire membership of the commission, yet two of its members were formerly connected with the coal industry. The chairman of the commission is a former coal operator and another member is a former official of the United Mine Workers.

Thus we see that under the very terms of the bill, as well as under its practical operation, the bituminous-coal industry is being given the power to fix its own minimum prices. The consumer is almost entirely out of the picture. I say "almost entirely", but I might as well say that the consumer is out of the picture altogether. It is true that a consumers' counsel has been provided for under the bill whose duty it will be to represent the consumers' interests in all price-fixing proceedings before the commission. But what chance has the consumers' counsel to accomplish anything? He has no vote. All he can do is present his argument and produce his evidence. The coal operators, through their district boards and their working majority on the coal commission, can completely ignore him when they come to make up the minimum prices which they are going to enforce against the helpless public.

Of course the public is not entirely helpless. It can turn to other fuels, such as fuel oil and natural gas, and to electricity. These substitute sources of fuel and power have already made heavy inroads into the market for coal, and any effort on the part of the bituminous-coal producers to raise the price of coal will inevitably lead to increased use of these other fuels. Thus this bill may prove to be a boomerang to the coal industry.

I have already mentioned the various items that are considered in establishing minimum coal prices. One of these costs was the expenses incurred in connection with assessments for district board dues incident to the administration of the coal code. The bill on its face makes it appear that the cost of administering the code will actually be borne by the code members; but, as a matter of fact, it will merely be included in their production costs and thus passed on to coal consumers when the minimum prices which consumers must pay are fixed. Let this be clearly understood.

The consumers of coal must also pay the expenses of the coal commission and the statistical agencies that will be set up all over the country. It is said that the tax of one-half of 1 percent levied on all bituminous coal produced will more than meet this expense; but this tax, while paid in the first instance by the coal producer, will be passed on to the consumer when the coal is sold. Thus the consumer is footing the bill all along the line.

During the hearings which were held in 1935 on the original Guffey Act, it was estimated that the effect of the bill would be to increase the price of coal anywhere from a few cents per ton to as much as $1.50. There is no way to tell exactly how much the increased cost would be. But even if it is only $1 per ton, this would mean an annual tribute of $400,000,000 annually to the bituminous coal industry. I ascertained from a witness who seemed qualified to know that my own section of the country—New England—consumed 20,000,000 tons of bituminous coal annually. On this basis, the people of my section alone may be required to pay $20,000,000 more annually for their coal. It is clearly evident, to my mind, that the consumer is the forgotten man in this measure.

What a ridiculous thing it is to put into a measure, that the consumers' counsel is looking after the consumers. Humph! That gentleman appeared before us. I sort of envy the man in a way. In the first place, he came up into my district and picked out one of our young ladies for a wife a number of years ago. That showed good judgment on his part. On top of that he shows most excellent judgment in holding down that job at $10,000 per annum. We tried to inquire what had been accomplished either by the board itself or by the consumers' counsel during the period since this law was originally invalidated, and what did we find out?

The Budget calls for an appropriation for the coal commission of $900,000. It calls for an appropriation of $90,000 for the consumers' counsel—$990,000 to support a board that was invalidated by the Supreme Court. One million dollars wasted in this one item! What did we find out? By inquiry we found out that the consumers' counsel and the coal commission filed a brief before the Interstate Commerce Commission in connection with a hearing on freight rates. It took three whole pages in the commission's report to list the names of the other persons who were also appearing, including 64 representatives of State public service bodies and some 300 other persons representing shippers, receivers, cities, and civic, commercial, and other organizations. And then the commission tells us that part of their job was to protect the consumer during the period that this matter of rates was before the Interstate Commerce Commission. They were just about one-four hundredth part of those who filed their names and briefs.

The chairman of this commission testified that they were getting up statistics, surveying things, getting data, and so on. Well, we could get a whole lot of data for $900,000 per annum, a lot of it. Further than that, he was honest enough to say that he asked for $1,400,000 and the Budget cut him down to $900,000. He could not, of course, spend it all. Nevertheless, in anticipation of the passage of this bill, they will at once come back and ask for the full $1,400,000, and probably more.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I infer from the remarks of my colleague, the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, an able member of the committee, that he thinks the provision for a consumers' counsel is a waste of money. Feeling this way, I judge he would be interested in offering an amendment to the bill striking out that provision.

Mr. TREADWAY. What earthly good would that do? The gentleman has been instructed to pass this bill. The gentleman has not the slightest idea of accepting any amendment.

Mr. DOUGHTON. It would show the gentleman's faith in his argument.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman sat there in the committee room day after day down at his end of the table, under the leadership of the gentleman from Kentucky, and wrote into the bill everything that looked good, and struck out everything that looked bad; and the gentleman is here to pass the bill. I have been in Congress long enough to know how far I would get offering an amendment. But I will be frank with the gentleman and say that I would like to see the consumers' counsel and the employees of his office earn their salaries a little better than they have been earning them since the invalidation of the original Guffey bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. If that be the state of the gentleman's mind I do not see the use of his making this speech. He should back up his words with action.

Mr. TREADWAY. I know it is a waste of time. Why should we even take the time to read the bill? There is no use reading it. We know how the majority is going to vote. Let me say that if we had the Australian ballot on this bill perhaps the gentleman would not vote for it any more than he would for some other legislation that he has got to accept in the near future. The gentleman could be using his time, Mr. Chairman, and the time of the Committee to better advantage by taking up the subject of the elimination of nuisance taxes of one kind and another. Instead of that you are adding to the tax problem every day. You Members on the other side should see if you cannot revise some of the existing taxes and relieve the people of some of their burden. One of the proponents of the bill went so far as to say that it was not going to cost the Government anything. Why not tell the whole truth. My friend VINSON knows, and I know, that it is going to cost the consumers this $1,000,000, for instance, that is already wasted, and a lot more besides in increased prices for coal.

Your patronage master, Mr. Farley, can put more men to work under the language of this bill than he has postmasters to appoint at the present time. Of course, the seven high-priced men at $10,000 each per year will continue to draw that and they will not work up any great amount of perspiration earning it. They will just draw that much money. There will be no perspiration, that is certain. Mr. Farley will tell them who these "experts" and "special agents" shall be who are to be put on the pay roll.

However, there may come a day of reckoning even when you get instructions to pass a bill that you are told in advance is unconstitutional. I do not believe the American people are going to stand for this sort of thing forever. Think of what a nice proposition all of these boards are. Who is going to pay for them? The Government? No, not the Government, but the consumers of bituminous coal. Read the bill. If any of these producers, in order to stabilize the proposition, do not like it they may pay a tax of 19½ percent. Where is there anything more ridiculous in the way of forcing people to do a certain thing if they want to earn a dollar?

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I want to warn the House of the precedent which this bill will set if it becomes a law. When one industry is given the monopolistic privilege of fixing minimum prices, it will be a signal for other industries to seek similar legislation, and the Congress will have difficulty denying such privilege to these other groups if it grants it to one. If it is fair for one, it is fair for all. I was under the distinct impression that the Democratic platform of 1936 contained a rather strong declaration against monopoly. This bill suspends the antitrust law insofar as it otherwise would apply to members of the bituminous coal code, who under this bill are given monopolistic powers. Certainly the people of the country have not forgotten their experiences in connection with price fixing under the N. R. A. codes. This bill revives price fixing for coal, and if the past is any guide, the people of this country will not be long in expressing their sentiments in opposition to a renewal of price fixing. The following quotation, taken from a radio speech made on June 5, 1936, by the senior Member of the other body from Montana, one of the country's leading liberals, is quite apropos of the pending bill:

> Consider the implications of price fixing for trade and industry by either the Government or private groups. It radically changes our form of government.
> The Government would be forced into a system of regimentation of industry that would not only be onerous to the people but that might very well be inefficient. Certainly the greatest totalitarian, bureaucratic state the world has ever seen would be the result. Price fixing by private groups will inevitably lead to price fixing by government. It will be a Fascist state in every sense of the word.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this bill will receive the fate that it deserves at the hands of this House and will be ignominously defeated.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 4 minutes.

May I say at the outset I am going to support this bill. I come from a district and a State which does not produce coal; therefore, we are not interested from the standpoint of either producer, operator, or miner. My good friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] who has just taken his seat, is greatly exercised about the consumer. It seems to me he is not overly consistent, because I have heard him address the House perhaps more frequently, and whose voice resounded throughout this Chamber more eloquently than any man in this House in the last 24 years, in behalf of the producer or the laborers in his district. He has always been anxious that they should have wages commensurate with the American standard of living and that they should have the benefit of the protective tariff, the primary purpose of which, according to his contention, has always been to take care of American labor and to maintain the American standard of living.

Today, however, we find the gentleman from Massachusetts unconcerned with maintaining the American standard of living, or decent living wages for those engaged in one of the basic industries of our country. Today he is concerned over the price of coal to the consumers while for the past 24 years his voice was silent in behalf of those who had to buy textiles, shoes, leather goods, machinery, cutlery, and scores of other articles produced in his section of the country, and now when he has an opportunity to give labor in the coal-mining States a decent wage and improve their standard of living he becomes agitated and concerned because the enactment of this bill might slightly increase the price of coal to the people of his State. If he has been sincere, as he doubtless was, in his desire to give protection to industry against unfair competitive conditions in order to enable labor to benefit from such protection he, in order to be consistent, should support this measure.

Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, that is the primary purpose of this bill. It is to take care of the deplorable conditions from which labor has been suffering for many years in the bituminous-coal sections of this country. That has been explained over and over again. I do not believe this bill will substantially increase the price of coal, but even if it did, in order that the miners in the bituminous-coal sections of this country may receive a living wage and may be rescued from the chaotic conditions under which they have been laboring for many years, I am willing, and I believe the people whom I represent would be willing, to pay a slightly advanced price for coal in order that these people may receive a living wage for their labor.

This bill has for its purpose the stabilization of one of the country's basic industries—the bituminous-coal industry—by providing for Federal regulation of interstate commerce in bituminous coal and of matters and transactions in or directly affecting such commerce.

The need and necessity for such stabilization and regulation of this industry has long been recognized and favored by a large majority of the coal operators, and the half a million workers engaged in the hazardous mining of coal. We are all, more or less, familiar with the labor unrest and the un-American standard of living and working conditions existing for years in this industry.

This bill seeks to improve the working conditions of the miners by stabilizing the industry and thereby remove the basic cause for the low wages and poor working conditions which have too often brought about strikes accompanied by violence and bloodshed.

Under the terms of the measure a bituminous coal commission is reestablished and empowered to fix minimum prices of coal at the mine in the various minimum-price areas set up in part II of the bill. The bill also sets up a code of fair competition and practices for the coal industry, the lack of which in the past has been the major cause of the chaotic conditions existing in the industry. A tax of one-half of 1 percent is levied on the mine price of all coal produced. This tax will more than defray the cost of administration. An additional tax of 19½ percent is levied on the mine price of all coal produced by those who do not become code members, or by those code members who violate the provisions of the code.

A consumers' counsel is also reestablished independent of the coal commission to protect the interests of the consuming public. Some may scoff at and belittle this provision of the bill and term it a "gracious gesture" and that his will be only a "voice crying in the wilderness." In the short time in which we have had such an official the consumers' interests have been protected. The present Consumer Counsel, as well as the members of the Coal Commission, has already contributed much toward the saving of $30,000,000 annually to the consumers of coal. For the first time one representing the consumers' interests has appeared before the Interstate Commerce Commission in connection with rate proceedings. Heretofore no one has presented briefs and arguments except those parties directly interested in such rate structures. I do not claim that the elimination of the surcharge and the saving of $30,000,000 annually was brought about solely by the Consumers' Counsel, but I do think it is a good thing to have someone representing the consumers' viewpoint at such proceedings, and if our Republican friends are sincere in their belief that the continuation of a Consumers' Counsel is merely a gesture, let them offer an amendment to strike this provision from the bill.

They are also fearful that this measure will bring about a monopoly in the coal industry and drive the small producer out of business. The answer to such claims is the fact that the large producers with strong financial resources, those who are able to maintain their own selling and distribution systems and who take advantage of unfair competitive practices, are the ones opposing the passage of this measure, while the vast majority of the smaller producers, who are slowly but surely being driven out of business at the present time because of such unfair trade practices, are supporting its enactment.

Let me repeat: The coal industry has for years been characterized by wasteful production, chaotic distribution, inefficient management, and economic insecurity. If it is to survive, some form of regulation is necessary, and this bill sets up the necessary standards and machinery to bring about the stabilization of this industry. I am confident that it will be administered in such a manner as to protect the interests of all producers as well as the consumers of coal. I do not share the fears of some that the price of coal will be unreasonably increased in price to the ultimate consumer. On the contrary, I believe the small domestic consumer will be able to secure his coal at no increase in price and perhaps at a lower price. In the past the small domestic consumers have been charged prices that enabled large producers to recoup some of their losses incurred by sales to large industrial and utilities industries at prices far below the actual cost of production. The setting up of minimum prices at which coal may be sold at the mine will correct many of the unfair practices, and will, in my opinion, be of benefit to the domestic consumer instead of a hardship. Many times in the past the price of coal has been unduly advanced to the consumers because of the unstability and labor conditions in the coal industry, and the passage of this bill will in a large measure prevent the recurrence of such price advances. Criticism has been voiced because no hearings were held on this bill. The committee had ample evidence presented on the subject matter of this bill at the time of the hearings on the original bill, and, in addition, Congress has during the past several years conducted investigations and hearings on the coal situation. Additional hearings would only serve to further delay the solution of the problem. The situation calls for action, and I am confident the membership of this House will respond by the passage of this bill by an overwhelming vote of approval.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I wish to state that each and every member of the Ways and Means Committee approaches his duties with a real desire to discharge those duties faithfully and conscientiously. The gentleman who introduced this bill is a member of that committee and he is a most diligent, faithful, earnest, and capable member of that committee. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON], whenever this legislation is enacted into law, and its benefits are reflected throughout the country, should be given credit as its author and chief credit for its enactment. I have known no man who labored more diligently, more intelligently, more assiduously, or more prodigiously than he has in the preparation of this bill and the other bills preceding this one. I want to speak these words of tribute because I know he is entitled to the thanks of everyone desiring this legislation. He has given more painstaking study than I have known any member of any committee doing in the preparation of this measure in order to bring it before the House in proper form so that its constitutionality would be sustained. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to pay the gentleman that tribute. I am sure the people of his district, the people of Kentucky, of Virginia, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, and other coal-producing States interested in this legislation, owe him a debt of gratitude and I am sure they will be pleased to know of the splendid service he has rendered, almost unparalleled so far as my knowledge of legislation in this House is concerned. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remaining time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DUNCAN].

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Chairman, apparently this has been a rather unusual bill as there has not been a Member on either side of the aisle who was able to say that it is not a deserving piece of legislation. There has been some little discussion about its constitutionality, but I believe no Member who has discussed it, with possibly one exception, has discussed that question with any degree of certainty whatsoever, even to his own satisfaction. It is unusual in that there has not been a word of criticism from the industry. At least, I did not receive a letter or telegram during the 10 days this bill was under discussion from any person objecting to it.

It is the general opinion, and I am sure it is true, that the employer and the employee alike are in accord with the objects of this bill and agree to the terms of it.

I am very much surprised at the speech of my good friend and colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], when he spent 16 minutes of his time here and did not discuss a single, solitary thing of any importance in connection with the bill. He did talk about the consumers' counsel, who receives a salary of $10,000 a year. After the Supreme Court held the previous act unconstitutional, this consumers' counsel appeared before the Interstate Commerce Commission, representing the consumers of this country, and through his efforts and the efforts of those who were associated with him saved the consumers $30,000,000 in freight rates. This redounded to the benefit of the consumers. It seems to me that the $10,000 he has been paid since this bill was held unconstitutional was well earned in his appearance before that Commission and his efforts in helping to save this $30,000,000.

I can speak only of my own State. There are approximately 1,200 coal mines in it. There are men today in that State digging coal out of the bowels of the earth for $1 a day, and the coal is being sold from the coal mines for 75 cents a ton. If the consumers were getting any benefit from this price it might be justified, but they are getting no benefit from it because the coal is being moved into the places of consumption by trucks and other means of transportation, and is being sold for just a few cents below the market in these places of consumption, and which is just enough to upset the market.

I have seen literally hundreds of trucks coming from the State of Illinois into the city of St. Louis hauling coal, competing with the coal that has been shipped in there, thus affecting the market, and causing unfair competitive conditions, and directly affecting working conditions in the mines.

The same is true of coal going from some parts of Missouri into Iowa, into Illinois, and into Kansas, and it is true of practically every coal field in the United States.

It is true this bill will not remedy that situation entirely, because a great deal of the coal which is being sold as I have described is in intrastate commerce; but a large part of it may directly affect interstate commerce and can be controlled by the commission set up in this bill.

I agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER], that the tax is not enough, but it will help. It will aid materially in encouraging some of these cut-rate producers to come in under the code rather than be required to pay the 19½ percent. I am sure nobody is seriously contending this tax is not valid.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUNCAN. Yes.

Mr. BIERMANN. Would the gentleman care to say whether or not he thinks the Supreme Court would hold valid that 19½-cent tax, which has as its only purpose compelling the operators to join this code?

Mr. DUNCAN. I think there is no question about the constitutionality of it. If the gentleman will read the decision in the Carter case he will find the Court there said it was necessary to base the tax on the commerce clause of the Constitution or the right of Congress to control the industry, and when this had been done legally the tax would be valid. Whether it is a tax or whether it is a penalty then makes no difference so long as the Congress has the power under the Constitution to legislate with respect to the particular question under consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remaining time on this side to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. IMHOFF].

Mr. IMHOFF. Mr. Chairman, it being my privilege to represent a congressional district in Ohio which mines at least 60 percent of the total output of the State and employing at least 14,000 miners, needless to say I am vitally interested in the passage of H. R. 4985, a bill to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal, and for other purposes, which I believe will aid materially in stabilizing the coal-mining industry, as well as prevent wage cuts and disastrous competition such as existed before the passage of the N. R. A. and the Bituminous Coal Conservation Act of 1935.

I have lived in a coal-mining community practically all of my life, and I am familiar with the difficulties and conditions of both the miners and producers which have prevailed during the past several years until the N. R. A. came into existence. Immediately upon the passage of the National Industrial Recovery Act the coal mines began to pick up, as well as upon enactment of the Bituminous Coal Conservation Act of 1935.

Upon setting aside of same by the Supreme Court, the effect was immediate. Several small operators in my district were compelled to shut down on account of cutthroat competition. The small operators were looking to Congress last year to enact appropriate legislation. After the great coal strike in 1927 and up until 1933 the coal-mining business in my section was at a very low ebb. The mines were working only 2 or 3 days a week. The miners were paid 25 cents a ton for loading coal and $1.25 per day for outside work. Then came the Roosevelt administration and the advent of the N. R. A. Immediately under the N. R. A. the coal-mining business became prosperous. Wages for loading coal were raised from 25 cents to 60 cents per ton, and wages for outside work were raised from $1.25 to $5 per day, and instead of the mines working 2 or 3 days a week they worked every day. The cutthroat competition that had been ruining the coal business for years was eliminated. The operators were saved from bankruptcy. The mines once more were working every day at good wages and were able to provide the necessities of life for their families. The prosperity of the miners and operators at once spread to other lines of business in the community. Everybody profited by the prosperity of the miners.

Cutthroat competition is again coming into play, and unless something is done the coal business will be back into the same state it was before the advent of the N. R. A. I believe the necessary remedy is provided in the present bill. The provisions of this bill are vital to the interests of one-half million miners in this country, as well as the investment of hundreds of millions of dollars by the operators.

It has been said that the passage of this bill will result in a very great increase in the cost of coal. Investigation has disproved these claims, and reliable authority has established that under the provisions of this bill there would be but a very small increase, if any, in the cost of coal to the public at large. The bill creates a consumer's council to appeal for and act in the interests of the consuming public.

During the consideration of this bill I expect to give it my full and absolute support. It will have tremendous and far-reaching effects upon many of my constituents. As stated before, I feel that not only would the coal-mining industry benefit but agriculture and other lines of industry would also benefit through the increased purchasing power that would be sure to follow and be maintained through the enactment of this legislation. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That regulation of the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of bituminous coal is imperative for the protection of such commerce; that there exist practices and methods of distribution and marketing of such coal that waste the coal resources of the Nation and disorganize, burden, and obstruct interstate commerce in bituminous coal, with the result that regulation of the prices thereof and of unfair methods of competition therein is necessary to promote interstate commerce in bituminous coal and to remove burdens and obstructions therefrom.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from North Carolina if it is the understanding that the further consideration of the bill is to go over until Thursday?

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is the understanding, I believe; yes.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MAY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4985) to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday, March 15, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the disposition of all matters on the Speaker's table, and the following call of the calendar on that day, I may be permitted to address the House for 1 hour.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 10, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Lord and our God, we rejoice that Thou art a God of the little child, of the unlettered, of the afflicted, and of those who have wandered from the right way. We thank Thee that Thou art the King of righteousness, truth, peace, and love. We pray that our souls may give Thee entrance and allow not our hearts to deceive us. Holy Spirit, fill us with the visions, the charities, and the enthusiasms of a new life. We pray that this day may be filled with brotherly harmonies; give glow and passion to all our deliberations. When questions arise may they receive the best and the strongest persuasions of our understanding. Inspire us all, we beseech Thee, with a clearer and larger life in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested.

S. 5. An act to prevent the adulteration, misbranding, and false advertisement of food, drugs, devices, and cosmetics in interstate, foreign, and other commerce subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, for the purposes of safeguarding the public health, preventing deceit upon the purchasing public, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks by printing an address delivered by my colleague, Hon. ED. V. IZAC, of California, at the Victory Dinner held in Lawrence, Mass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MEETING OF COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries be permitted to sit today during the session of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FLORENCE C. OCHSENREITER

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 150) from the Committee on Accounts, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 150

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Florence C. Ochsenreiter, widow of William F. Ochsenreiter, late an employee of the House, an amount equal to 6 months' compensation, and an additional amount, not to exceed $250, to defray funeral expenses of the said William F. Ochsenreiter.

The resolution was agreed to.

MRS. MARY MUELLER

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer another privileged resolution (H. Res. 144) from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 144

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Mrs. Mary Mueller, mother of Helen I. Mueller, late an employee of the House, an amount equal to 6 months' salary compensation, and an additional amount, not to exceed $250, to defray funeral expenses of the said Helen I. Mueller.

The resolution was agreed to.

NEUTRALITY LEGISLATION

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following resolution (H. Res. 151) on the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 51) for printing in the RECORD:

House Resolution 151

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 51, a joint resolution "to amend the joint resolution entitled 'Joint resolution providing for the prohibition of the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerent countries; the prohibition of the transportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war by vessels of the United States for the use of belligerent states; for the registration and licensing of persons engaged in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing arms, ammunition, or implements of war; and restricting travel by American citizens on belligerent ships during war', approved August 31, 1935, as amended." That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and continue not to exceed 10 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider without the intervention of a point of order the substitute amendment recommended by the Committee on Foreign Affairs and such substitute for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill. At the conclusion of such consideration the Committee shall rise and report the joint resolution to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the proceedings under Calendar Wednesday are dispensed with I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address made last night by the President of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address made by the President of the United States on March 4 last.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, that March 4 address has already been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. RANKIN. I withdraw the request, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RICH. We do not want that in the RECORD twice.

Mr. RANKIN. Did the gentleman read it?

Mr. RICH. I heard it once. That is enough.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi withdraws the request.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by inserting an address delivered by my colleague the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. CRAWFORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by including a program for highway development by my colleague, Mr. DREW.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF TIME TO FILE RETURNS UNDER TITLE III OF REVENUE ACT OF 1936

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 249, authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to grant further extensions of time for filing returns under title III of the Revenue Act of 1936, on the ground of reasonable emergency.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Joint Resolution 249

Resolved, etc., That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant additional reasonable extensions of time for filing returns under title III of the Revenue Act of 1936 for the calendar year 1935 and any fiscal year ending on or before August 31, 1936: Provided, That, except in the case of taxpayers who are abroad, no such extension shall be made beyond June 15, 1937.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman to explain why the need of this extension?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, under the present law returns on the "windfall tax", which was a part of the tax bill passed last year, must be filed by March 15. The purpose of this joint resolution is to extend the time, in the discretion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, until June 15. The Department in its letter states:

That numerous inquiries received in the Department relative to the provisions of title III of the Revenue Act of 1936 disclose that many persons subject to the tax are encountering difficulties in assembling the data necessary to the preparation and filing of a proper return on time. These difficulties are due principally to a lack of detailed records and need for which could not be anticipated, or, on the other hand, to the necessity of examining voluminous records covering the 6 years preceding initial imposition of the excise tax involved.

In either event the circumstances afford ample justification, in my opinion, for legislation which authorizes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to extend the time for filing the reports under title III in proper cases beyond the period permitted under existing law.

That letter was signed by Acting Secretary Magill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is this a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. McCORMACK. It is a unanimous report from the committee. I conferred yesterday with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] about the bill, and he was agreeable to its immediate consideration.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. RICH. It may be necessary to extend the time for filing these reports; but does not the gentleman also think that the people throughout the country generally are entitled to an extension of time for filing their regular income-tax returns that are due on the 15th of this month? The returns are complicated and the people are clamoring for information. They do not have the benefit of expert assistance such as is available to Members of Congress. Two or three of the experts are in the Capitol Building at the present time ready to help Members of Congress make out their income-tax return. Members of Congress are responsible for making the laws, laws which make the income-tax returns so difficult to understand. Does not the gentleman think this privilege should be extended generally to all income-tax returns?

Mr. McCORMACK. I know what my friend has in mind, but this is a consideration extended to those businesses affected as a result of the Revenue Act of 1936 relating to the "windfall tax."

Mr. RICH. I appreciate that, but I thought I would call attention to another question that vitally affected the welfare of the Nation. I hope the gentleman, as one of the Members on his side of the House responsible for this law, will come in with a bill to simplify income-tax returns. That is what the people of the country are clamoring for.

Mr. McCORMACK. There is a great deal to what the gentleman says.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 26]

Arnold	Crosby	Kleberg	Snell
Barden	Disney	Kniffin	Sweeney
Binderup	Driver	Lesinski	Terry
Boren	Duncan	McGehee	Tobey
Boykin	Gasque	McGroarty	Tolan
Buckler, Minn.	Gearhart	Mahon, Tex.	Wadsworth
Buckley, N. Y.	Gehrmann	Maloney	Weaver
Bulwinkle	Goodwin	Meeks	West
Cannon, Wis.	Harrington	Nichols	White, Idaho
Clark, Idaho	Hill, Wash.	Patrick	White, Ohio
Clark, N. C.	Holmes	Pettengill	Whittington
Clason	Honeyman	Sabath	Wigglesworth
Coffee, Nebr.	Jarrett	Scott	Wood
Cooley	Johnson, W. Va.	Scrugham	Zimmerman
Cravens	Keller	Shannon
Creal	Kelly, N. Y.	Smith, Va.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and sixty-eight Members are present, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. RAYBURN, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization may have permission to sit during the sessions of the House this afternoon and tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to insert therein a report of the New York State Economic Council on Labor Conditions in South Carolina.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

(Mr. HOUSTON and Mr. MILLARD asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.)

CONTINUOUS DISCHARGE BOOK

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries may have until midnight tonight to file a report on the bill (H. R. 5487) to amend section 4551 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. II, title 46, sec. 643).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, it is expected that the coal bill will probably not take all of tomorrow. This morning the Rules Committee reported a rule making in order the neutrality bill. If the coal bill is finished at a reasonable hour tomorrow afternoon, it is expected to begin general debate on the neutrality bill. I thought the House should have this information.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees.

Mr. DEROUEN (when the Committee on the Public Lands was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up House Joint Resolution 137, to amend a Senate joint resolution dated March 28, 1918 (47 Stat. 499).

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the assistant to the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized to sign such official papers and documents as the Secretary may direct. Any official paper or document of whatever character so signed by the assistant to the Secretary shall have the same force and effect as if signed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Louisiana that that is not necessary.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the resolution in the House as in Committee of the Whole. There are one or two Members on this side who would like some time on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this bill is on the House Calendar, and under the rules it is considered in the House.

Mr. MOTT. And those opposed to the bill will have an opportunity to speak in opposition to the bill?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire recognition?

Mr. MOTT. Yes; I do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DEROUEN] has an hour under his control and can yield such part of it as he desires.

Mr. DEROUEN. I yield myself such time as may be necessary to explain the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to clarify the provisions of the Senate joint resolution of March 28, 1918, authorizing the assistant to the Secretary of the Interior to sign such official papers and documents as the Secretary may direct.

The Comptroller General of the United States has refused to credit certain payments for travel authorized by the assistant to the Secretary on the ground that the assistant to the Secretary did not, under the resolution referred to, have authority to sign such travel authorizations even though he was directed to do so by the Secretary of the Interior. The Comptroller General took the position that the hearings at the time the 1918 resolution was passed by the Congress indicated that the intent was to limit the authority of the assistant to the Secretary to more or less routine matters even though the language was without such limitation.

The resolution now proposed gives the Secretary of the Interior sufficient and specific authority to assign to the assistant to the Secretary for signature any official papers which, in his discretion, he deems necessary, and the papers so signed will have the same force and effect as if signed by the Secretary of the Interior himself. The administrative purpose is to facilitate the handling of the large volume of departmental business. The specific assignment to the assistant to the Secretary which occasioned the request for the new resolution was the signing of authorizations for reimbursement of travel expenses to employees on permanent change of station which under the law is vested in the head of the Department. This new resolution is a corrective measure, and I understand that no change in departmental procedure is at this time contemplated by reason of the changed language.

This has been the practice all along. I quote from a letter written by the Secretary of the Interior to the Comptroller General:

> Under the authority of this joint resolution, which has not been modified or repealed in any way, the assistant to the Secretary has from time to time signed consolidated personnel orders, when directed to do so by the Secretary, and his authority to sign these other documents when directed by the Secretary has never before been questioned.

In other words, it would seem that the Comptroller General took an arbitrary position, that while it was true, it was the custom since 1918, and I refer to the custom of signing transfers and other important papers by the assistant to the Secretary, the Comptroller General nevertheless refused to accept that fact. All we are endeavoring to do by this resolution is to make it sufficiently broad so that it will cover the entire matter.

Mr. Speaker, I think I have made myself clear, but if I have not I shall be glad to answer such questions as the Members of the House may wish to ask.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, this resolution may appear simple and harmless to some, as the Chairman of the Public Lands Committee indicated it was. Perhaps it is, but it does not appear so to me.

I think the principle involved in this proposal is wrong, and I think the House should know about it before proceeding to adopt it. In this resolution the Secretary of the Interior proposes that the Congress give him blanket authority to allow his assistant, not the Assistant Secretary of the Interior nor the Under Secretary of the Interior, but the assistant to the Secretary, to sign any document or paper or order which the Secretary of the Interior may direct and which the Secretary is now required personally to sign. He asks that when the assistant to the Secretary signs any such document or order it shall have the same force and effect as though the Secretary had signed it, existing law to the contrary notwithstanding.

It seems to me that is asking for rather broad and rather unnecessary authority. And may I call attention to the fact this is not a proposal of the Public Lands Committee of the House, from which it has been reported. Like a great many other proposals that have come out of that very fine committee, of which I am a member, the committee has really had nothing to do with it. This resolution was written in the Interior Department.

Mr. DEROUEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. DEROUEN. I think the gentleman wants to be fair. I read a letter addressed to W. B. BANKHEAD, Speaker of the House, recommending that this resolution be enacted into law. It was thereafter referred by the Speaker to the Public Lands Committee and a hearing was had, at which the gentleman was present.

Mr. MOTT. That is quite true. I did not say anything that would contradict the gentleman's statement in that regard. I said this resolution was written in the Interior Department, either by the Secretary himself or by one of the various assistants to the Secretary. Nobody in the Public Lands Committee knew anything about it. It was not the proposal of anyone on our committee. It was simply sent up here from the Interior Department, and one of the Assistants was sent along with it to explain it to the committee and to tell us that the Secretary wanted it.

Now, why does the Secretary want this resolution? Last year an order was signed by the assistant to the Secretary of the Interior transferring certain personnel of the Department from one station to another and authorizing reimbursement of the employees so transferred for expense of transportation and for other items. The statute as it exists today provides that in a case of that kind the Secretary of the Interior must sign the order himself, personally. There are a number of such statutes. They pertain not only to the Department of the Interior but to all of the other departments of the Government. The statutes provide that certain things must be done by the department heads personally. Certain orders must be signed by the Secretary of the Interior and not by the assistant to the Secretary or by anyone else. The particular case in question, which I have just mentioned and which gave rise to this resolution, is a case in point.

The Secretary of the Interior, instead of signing this particular order, followed his usual custom and allowed his assistant to sign it. The order involved the payment of money. When the matter got to the Comptroller General the Comptroller turned it down because the law had not been complied with. It was the only thing the Comptroller could do in the circumstances.

Now, instead of the Secretary of the Interior complying with the statutory law, as he should have done, or proposing an amendment to the law if he was of the opinion that the law placed too much of a burden upon him, he comes in here with a proposal, not to amend the law of which he complains, but with a resolution to give him blanket authority to direct his assistant to sign any paper, any document, or any order which the Secretary himself is now required, under the law, to sign. And the resolution provides that when the assistant signs such an order it shall have full effect and validity in spite of any existing law to the contrary.

Under this bill the Secretary of the Interior does not have to direct the assistant to sign a particular order at a particular time. He can give him blanket authority in that field. If this bill becomes law tomorrow, the Secretary of the Interior may say to his assistant, "From now on, and until I advise you otherwise, I desire you to sign all orders of a certain class, all papers of a certain class, and all documents of a certain class." That would be all the authority the assistant would need under this resolution.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have explained what this resolution is, and I have explained the character and the extent of the authority asked for in it by the Secretary. I think there is no real excuse for passing legislation such as this, and I think it is carrying irresponsible government entirely too far to ask the Congress to pass it, particularly upon such insufficient reasons as those which are advanced for it.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Will the gentleman tell me whether or not any other department has made a similar request, or whether a similar resolution has been passed?

Mr. MOTT. Not that I know of.

Mr. BOILEAU. Under existing law does the Under Secretary of the Interior or the Assistant Secretary of the Interior have the right to sign these papers?

Mr. MOTT. I believe he does not. At any rate, the assistant to the Secretary does not have that authority.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is there such a large number of these papers that it requires someone to assist in signing such documents?

Mr. MOTT. I do not think there is such a large number of papers. Neither do I think the number involved is very important. The situation is simply this: Certain statutes authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make certain orders contemplate that he shall sign those orders personally. An instance has arisen where the Secretary of the Interior does not want to do that. But instead of asking us to amend the particular law which requires him to do it in a particular case, he asks us for blanket authority to permit him to direct the assistant to sign for him on any occasion, and that is what this bill is.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does the assistant to the Secretary of the Interior receive his appointment from the President subject to confirmation by the Senate, or is he appointed by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. MOTT. I think the assistant to the Secretary is appointed simply by the Secretary.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am wondering while reading this bill whether it would not have the effect of putting the stamp of approval on something that has been done already in the way of payment of expenses.

Mr. MOTT. I do not think so; no. At least my opposition to the resolution is not based upon any such assumption.

Mr. GIFFORD. There is no retroactive clause in the bill, but it reads—

> Any official paper or document of whatever character so signed.

You might well read into that, "so signed already." It certainly has a retroactive idea.

Mr. MOTT. Perhaps it has, but that is not my objection to it. My objection to this bill is simply to the giving to the Secretary of the Interior of blanket authority to direct his assistant to do anything in the way of signing orders and papers that the Secretary wants him to sign, notwithstanding the provisions of the several existing statutes upon that subject.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Does the assistant take any oath of office?

Mr. MOTT. I presume he does. I imagine the constitutional requirement in that regard would include the holder of a position of this kind. His office is assistant to the Secretary, not Assistant Secretary.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. THURSTON. If the duties of this assistant become too arduous, should we not have provision made so that the assistant to the assistant may sign the papers?

Mr. MOTT. Adoption of this resolution probably would set a precedent under which a further resolution might be considered by the Congress in event the assistant should become overburdened with paper signing in the future.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, a year or perhaps a year and a half ago the Congress approved of the creation of the position of Under Secretary of the Interior on the representations of the Department and on the representations of a majority of the committee in charge of the bill that such a position was absolutely necessary for the transaction of the public business.

According to the best information I have been able to gather, this Under Secretary of the Interior performs no duties in the office of the Interior Department, but is the official lobbyist of the Executive Office on the Hill. It would seem to me that if we are going to prescribe additional duties for anyone to perform, those who are not performing any duties now, but are simply drawing the pay of the office, might be selected and designated by the bill that is being brought in for the consideration of the Congress requiring the performance of these duties. Perhaps the duties would be too arduous or perhaps it is impossible for the Congress to expect that one who is favored with such a position should be expected to perform any duties in connection with the Department to which he is attached. It seems to me when we create a position of Under Secretary, to be confirmed by the Senate, and the position of Assistant Secretary, also to be confirmed by the Senate, important functions required under the law to be performed by the Secretary himself should be delegated to the Assistant Secretary or the Under Secretary, if the Secretary is unable to perform them, so that the Under Secretary, perhaps, may have some work of an official character to do in the Department.

I hope before the Congress passes such a bill as this it will bear these things in mind. I hope it will make the position of Under Secretary of the Interior something more in that Department than merely a salary-drawing job, and I hope the House will take this under consideration in the consideration of this measure.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Would it not, perhaps, be better to employ an additional Cabinet member as Associate Secretary of the Interior when the Secretary becomes 70 years of age, in order to help him take care of his work if it is too arduous? [Laughter.]

Mr. TABER. Perhaps so.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I heard all the questions asked on the other side, but I may say to my colleagues that, in my opinion, this is just a tempest in a teapot.

In the first place, the present law provides:

> The assistant to the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to sign such official papers and documents as the Secretary may direct.

This is the present law; in other words, at the present time the Secretary of the Interior may direct his assistant to sign such documents as he thinks should be signed, and the assistant signs them, and they have the same force and effect as if the Secretary had signed them himself. This was always thought to be the law. However, recently, in the rush of business, there were a number of travel checks signed by the assistant to the Secretary, Mr. Burlew, who, by the way, is a career man in the service of the Interior Department and served under President Hoover, and has been connected with the Department for many years. He is not a patronage man in any sense whatever, and I understand is a Republican.

The Secretary of the Interior directed him to sign these travel checks. The Comptroller General in looking over the law found there was in existence a statute requiring that whenever any matter pertaining to money was involved, it must be signed by the Secretary himself, and therefore he said, "This law you have passed allowing the Secretary of the Interior to direct his assistant to sign certain papers conflicts with a general law providing that the Secretary himself shall sign such papers", and therefore he refused to approve the signature.

This bill is introduced to clear the matter up and, I understand, is perfectly satisfactory to the Comptroller General and also satisfactory to the Department. The bill came before the Committee on the Public Lands and was considered very carefully and very technically, and the Public Lands Committee, with the exception of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT], unanimously decided that the measure should be passed for the benefit of the Secretary of the Interior. We reported the bill out and we find ourselves met here with opposition.

Mr. Speaker, the only thing this bill seeks to do is to clarify the law and make things a little easier for the Secretary of the Interior; to permit him to do what he has done all the time, and what he has heretofore considered to be legal, and what the Comptroller General has considered heretofore to be legal. In other words, this is just a matter of clarifying existing statutes; and we hope you will not regard the political argument on the other side as being directed against this bill.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. This bill, if passed, will allow something to be done under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and make legal that which is not legal under existing law. Is not that the fact?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. No; it is not the fact. It is what the Comptroller General says is not the law; but what, in my opinion is the law, and what, in the opinion of the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior, is the law, and always has been the law.

Mr. MOTT. Is not that the same thing as saying that a certain law is not unconstitutional, although the Supreme Court has just said that it is unconstitutional?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. No. All we add to the present bill is this:

> Any official paper or document of whatever character so signed by the assistant to the Secretary shall have the same force and effect as if signed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MOTT. Oh, I agree to that, because that is all there is to the bill.

Mr. GREEVER. As a matter of fact, does not a similar officer in every department have the same authority as is given in this bill to the assistant to the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. It is my understanding that that is the fact.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is a very meager report. I, for one, should like to know how these people who travel and whose expenses were denied by the Comptroller General finally did get their money or if they did not get it.

Mr. DEROUEN. I shall be very glad to answer that. After that ruling the Secretary of the Interior signed all of those papers. This is not retroactive. They were being held up since 1934.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, for many years I have had a little experience in retroactive clauses in legislation, and I am a little interested to know whether or not all orders "so signed" would not include those already signed. It is plain here that orders in the future should be allowed; but, if one should come up that was so signed before this law was enacted, would it not be retroactive?

My purpose in rising, Mr. Speaker, is that I can see possibilities of something more than convenience. Our Secretary of the Interior seems to be very politically minded, as has been suggested. He travels over the country making political speeches; and with the Under Secretary, as suggested, devoting perhaps his entire time to political matters, I want to recite to you how nice it would be if an Under Secretary or an Assistant Secretary might be called upon to O. K. the traveling expenses of even the Secretary himself while off making these political speeches.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. If the gentleman will give me a minute or more of time.

Mr. DEROUEN. I should be very glad to. I have in mind that the gentleman from Massachusetts is now discussing a political question. The gentleman is bringing in the Under Secretary, and I imagine that he is alluding to our former colleague, Mr. West, who is doing fine work.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, I agree that he has done marvelous work in the herding business.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I wonder if the gentleman has it in mind that this bill has nothing whatever to do with Mr. West?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, I understand that. This applies only to the Assistant Secretary.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. West is the Under Secretary.

Mr. GIFFORD. Like many other secretaries that are to be anonymous in the future, such as those to be given to the President, they are simply to do the things that their superiors will wish to be relieved of doing. I want to quote to you a short article I read recently:

> Some bureau directors, and others sometimes, as a gracious gesture, are speakers at meetings even so far away as the coast. Do not let it be said that the great American public fails to get a break. Here is the arithmetic that proves it does.

And the arithmetic is so interesting that no wonder they want an Assistant Secretary who might feel that he is doing simply a duty and is not called upon to weigh the thing or assume any real obligation in signing the paper. To continue:

> Assume 2 weeks consumed in making the trip and that the speech is prepared en route. Assume the speech will require a half hour in delivery. The pay rate of the official being $8,000, he receives $307 pay for the 2 weeks. He also receives $70 per diem. It also costs about $300 fare and Pullman. To these let us add $10 for sundry items—telephones, taxicabs, and gratuity. Total, $687. Now, since the speech consumes a half hour, which is $\frac{1}{1344}$ of the 2 weeks, it is delivered at the rate of $922,928.

And the point I wish to make is that an Assistant Secretary who does not have real responsibility should approve these items of expense such as travel. It really might be less embarrassing to the Secretary to have his Assistant O. K. and sign all orders for traveling, especially on political matters.

I thank the gentleman for these few enjoyable minutes.

Mr. DEROUEN. The gentleman is very welcome.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the House joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "Joint resolution authorizing the assistant to the Secretary of the Interior to sign official papers and documents."

Mr. DEROUEN. That is all my committee has, Mr. Speaker.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will continue with the call of committees.

SANTA ROSA BAND OF MISSION INDIANS, CALIFORNIA

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma (when the Committee on Indian Affairs was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5293) to authorize the acquisition of 640 acres of land for the use and benefit of the Santa Rosa Band of Mission Indians, State of California.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman please explain the bill for the benefit of those who are not members of the committee?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I should like to yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. SHEPPARD] to make an explanation.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to authorize acquiring 640 acres of land for the benefit of the Santa Rosa Band of Mission Indians in the State of California. Originally this land was lying adjacent to the Indian reservation and was open to homestead. An individual by the name of Fessler filed on that piece of land. At that time the Indians objected to that particular filing, but they could not make a showing that established their right to have it excluded, so the gentleman's patent was granted. The Indians have been using the 640 acres of land almost continuously since that time, until finally the gentleman who owns the land has conceded that he would be very well satisfied if it were sold to the Government. He is asking the sum of $500 for that particular 640 acres of land. We feel it would be of advantage to the Indians to have that land acquired, because there are many natural assets there that would be of benefit to the Indians. This has been approved by the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. CRAWFORD. As I understand, the Indians use this land for hunting purposes?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And they derive considerable income serving as guides to those who go on the land to hunt?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And also, during the off season, when there is no hunting permitted, they can use it for grazing purposes and thus keep their herds and help make a living?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The gentleman is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I believe the gentleman stated the entire section of 640 acres would cost the Government only $500?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is all.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And that it also adjoins the Indian reservation?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ROGERS].

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase in the name of the United States of America in trust for the Santa Rosa Band of Mission Indians 640 acres of land described as section 36, township 7 south, range 4 east, San Bernardino meridian, California, and for that purpose there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $500.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 10, after the word "appropriated", insert "not to exceed."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXCHANGING OF CERTAIN LAND AND WATER RIGHTS IN CALIFORNIA

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5299) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange certain lands and water rights in Inyo and Mono Counties, Calif., with the city of Los Angeles, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have this bill explained. I want to find out what the purpose of the bill is.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. SHEPPARD] to make an explanation.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, this bill is for the purpose of transferring 3,800 acres of what is considered now as worthless Indian land to the city of Los Angeles for 1,470 acres of irrigated land. The city of Los Angeles already owns the water rights on the 3,800 acres of land. The Indians have no access to any water at all on the present land they occupy.

This is the outgrowth of the transaction of about 4 years ago wherein the city of Los Angeles acquired water rights and land out in the Owens Valley. At that time the land was acquired and the Indians were left without water on their present holdings. We want to make the exchange at this time through proper legislation and give the Indians an opportunity to move onto land where they will have access to water and can take care of themselves and make themselves self-supporting and keep off of the relief rolls.

Furthermore they have waived their rights under the Jurisdictional Act that was made in the State of California in consideration of this land-transfer arrangement.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. BURDICK. Have the Indians of California been heard before the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. The ones we have had communication with are in favor of this bill. The chairman of the committee knows what the gentleman has in mind, but he does not want to make a statement at this time.

Mr. BURDICK. I want to inform the gentleman that there are a number of Indians here from California who desire to be heard on the bill, and they desire to have this go over until such a hearing can be had.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. In that connection I would say they have never communicated that information to me, and I did not know of it until a few minutes ago, when the gentleman advised me of it. It is too late now, of course.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it not also true that there are only about 181 families involved in this entire transaction; something less than 600 Indians altogether?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. That is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. By making this transfer these Indians, who are now on land from which the water has been cut off by reason of acquisition of water rights by the city of Los Angeles, will be transferred in the immediate vicinity to land which will be supplied with water.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. That is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And thereby they will be enabled to go ahead with farming operations.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. The gentleman is correct, Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK], that the bill passed the committee unanimously, and everybody who had anything to contribute to it favored the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to accept title on behalf of the United States to lands and water rights now owned and held by the city of Los Angeles in the counties of Inyo and Mono, State of California, if, in his judgment, the interests of the Indians in said counties will be benefited thereby; and in consideration therefor the said Secretary may issue a patent or patents to the said city of Los Angeles for lands, water rights, and buildings now held by the United States for the benefit of the Indians, provided that the lands, water rights, and buildings covered by the patent or patents shall not exceed in value the lands and water rights conveyed by the said city of Los Angeles to the United States: Provided, That the said Secretary may reserve the minerals of the lands conveyed to the said city, and the said Secretry is authorized to accept conveyance by the said city of the lands and water rights, subject to a similar reservation in the city of the minerals of such lands, and in determining the relative value of the lands and water rights to be exchanged consideration shall be given to any reservation made by either or both parties of any minerals or easements in the lands that may be exchanged.

SEC. 2. No allotted or other lands covered by trust patent or other instrument containing restrictions against alienation by the allottee shall be involved in any such exchange except with the consent of the allottees or their heirs. Any such allottees or their heirs are hereby authorized to relinquish to the United States any lands covered by such patents or other instruments and accept in lieu thereof assignments of land within the new Indian reservations which are hereby authorized to be established by the Secretary of the Interior out of any lands accepted by him pursuant to section 1 hereof: Provided, That any such Indian may receive an area of equal value to the area of the allotment relinquished by him and receive similar title to that relinquished should any of the lands accepted by the said Secretary be outside of the boundaries of the new reservations.

SEC. 3. No tribal lands shall be involved in any such exchange except with the consent of a majority of the adult Indians entitled to the use thereof. All lands acquired pursuant to this act, other than land to which title may be held by or in trust for individual Indians, shall be held by the United States in trust for the Indian tribe, band, or group concerned.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I am not entirely satisfied that this bill should be passed, nor have I sufficient information to make up my mind that it should not be. One fact, however, that stands out plainly is that we are transferring 3,840 acres of Indian lands and receiving back for the Indians 1,470 acres. The wording of the bill itself provides that this transfer shall be made if in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior it is for the best interests of the Indians of these counties. It occurs to me that the Indians themselves have no voice in this matter. We are conferring authority upon the Secretary of the Interior to transfer this tract of land if in his judgment he thinks it is for the benefit of the Indians.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that there are Indians here now who desire to be heard on this bill, and as long as they are here I am going to use what influence I have to prevent the passage of the measure. It may be when a hearing is had and they are satisfied that it is the best thing to be done that they will approve it or give their consent before the committee. In such case I shall have no objection to make, but I do not believe we have the right to let the Secretary of the Interior transfer this much land without the consent of the Indians.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Have these Indians had an opportunity to be heard before the committee?

Mr. BURDICK. I inform the gentleman that I just asked the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs if there was any hearing before this committee on this subject and he said "no." I may inform the gentleman further that this bill was introduced only on March 3.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. The chairman made no such statement. We did have a hearing on the bill, but we did not hear the Indians to whom the gentleman refers, because they made no request to be heard. We did not even know they were here until a few moments ago.

Mr. BURDICK. I do not know that these Indians know even where the committee is.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Their lawyer does.

Mr. BURDICK. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we are going mighty fast to bring up for passage on the 10th of March a bill introduced on the 3d of March. This is the speediest action I have seen on legislation in this House.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Answering the gentleman's assertion that no chance was given these Indians to be heard relative to these changes, I call his attention to the fact that the report from the Secretary of the Interior specifically says that no change will be made without the approval of the Indians before the transfer is made. We have that report from the Secretary.

Mr. BURDICK. That is not what the bill says. The bill authorizes him to transfer this land if in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior he thinks it is for the best interests of the Indians.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. And then the report says that no transfer will be made without the Indians' approval.

Mr. BURDICK. We are not passing reports; we are passing laws.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. And I may say to the gentleman from North Dakota that the Indians have already approved this. They have been working for years to get something like this arranged and worked out between the Indians and the city of Los Angeles.

Mr. BURDICK. I am not in favor of Indian legislation which is favored by a city without taking the Indians into consideration. As long as they are here and desire to be heard on the bill, I think we are making a mistake to pass it without hearing them. It may develop when the hearing is had that it will be all right, but at the present time it does not seem to me to be all right.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. These Indians should have been heard, but they did not make their wishes known. We did not know even that they were here.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. As I understand, no request whatsoever was made by these Indians of the committee that they be heard. Is that true?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. That is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Furthermore, has not the Committee on Indian Affairs adopted the policy of hearing these Indians whenever they come to Washington in order to let them get away as quickly as possible without incurring a lot of hotel bills and traveling expenses in the city?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. The gentleman is right. Whenever we know there are Indians in Washington who desire a hearing, we try to give it to them right away. That has been the policy of the committee continuously.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And that has been adopted as the policy of the committee?

Mr. BURDICK. I may say to the gentleman in this instance they went so fast they did not even hear the Indians at all.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BURDICK) there were 44 yeas and 34 noes.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifty-three Members present; not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 249, nays 105, not voting 76, as follows:

Mr. MOUTON, Mr. CARTWRIGHT, and Mr. GRIFFITH changed their votes from "nay" to "yea."

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that the gentlemen from California, Mr. LEA, Mr. GEARHART, Mr. CARTER, Mr. SCOTT, Mr. MCGROARTY, Mr. WELCH, Mr. HAVENNER, and Mr. TOLAN, are unavoidably absent on account of important official business.

The doors were opened.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Indian Affairs have no further bills to offer at this time.

DEVELOPMENT OF HYDROELECTRIC POWER PROJECT AT CABINET GORGE, ON THE COLUMBIA RIVER

Mr. WHITE of Idaho (when the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, I call up the bill (H. R. 114) to provide for studies and plans for the development of a hydroelectric power project at Cabinet Gorge, on the Clark Fork of the Columbia River, and a reclamation project for the Rathdrum Prairie area, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have not had a chance to see a copy of this bill as yet, because we did not know it was going to be called up at this time. Will the gentleman tell us what the bill is about?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill authorizing the Interior Department to make an investigation of this project and provides for an appropriation of $25,000 to carry out the investigation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object to the gentleman's request to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and nineteen Members, a quorum.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 114, with Mr. CULLEN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized: (a) To conduct surveys and investigations in order to determine the feasibility and economic usefulness of the development of a hydroelectric power project at the Cabinet Gorge site on the Clark Fork of the Columbia River (near the Montana-Idaho boundary line) and a reclamation project embracing the Rathdrum Prairie area in Kootenai and Bonner Counties, Idaho; and (b), if such development is determined to be feasible and economically useful, to prepare cost estimates and designs for the construction of a dam at such site and such additional or incidental facilities as are necessary to carry out such development.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the reclamation fund, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, may I get some agreement as to time?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I have 1 hour in my own right. I do not have to ask the gentleman for time. I am going to take my hour when I get around to it.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. All right.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If the gentleman wants to give me half of his time, I will accept that, too.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this bill has to do with the policies of the Bureau of Reclamation of the Federal Government. We have west of the Rocky Mountains the great undeveloped section of the United States. In the States of Idaho, Montana, Washington, and Oregon are located the great timber stands of the country, which are owned by the Federal Government. We have to utilize and develop those timberlands to send the timber to the eastern section of the country, where it is needed to build up our great communities. We have to manufacture and utilize that timber out there. We do not have very extensive coal deposits in western Montana or Idaho. We must depend upon the utilization of our power resources. The Columbia River and its tributaries is, I think, the second greatest river system in this country.

The mountains are high. The run of the rivers is down steep grades. We have in that section as to which this investigation is asked one of the greatest areas of undeveloped potential water-power sites in the West.

Close by this section we have a number of reclamation districts. A few miles west of the Cabinet Gorge site, which is almost exactly on the boundary line between Montana and Idaho, is a number of reclamation districts that have been settled for years, with expensive pumping plants put in by private initiative. They are pumping from lakes and little streams that are going dry. The water resources have failed.

In the panhandle of Idaho and the Great White Pine Belt of Idaho we have a large demand for electric power. Less than 50 miles south of the proposed site is the Coeur d'Alene lead- and silver-mining district, one of the most important mining fields of the country, which produces most of the lead and silver of the western country.

In the Clark Fork River, one of the main branches of the Columbia River, we have a vast amount of power that is not being utilized. Part of that is going to waste. This is a conservation measure, if we can make the proper investigation and find that it is feasible and practicable to develop this resource. It is an ideal power site, one of the best power sites left in the West.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman estimated what the eventual cost of this project to the Government will be?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. That is exactly one of the purposes of this bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. You want to spend $25,000 just to get an estimate?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The money is to be spent in making the necessary preliminary studies and examination of the rock structure of the dam site in order that we may bring that information to the Congress and tell the Congress exactly what we have.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. You know somewhere near what it is going to cost. Would it be $100,000,000?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. No.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Are you sure of that?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. It is a small amount.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What would it be?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. It has been roughly estimated by private engineers at less than $10,000,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Where did you get that information?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. From some engineers who have investigated it for the different power concerns out there. It is not one of these large projects. It is an ideal site. It can be economically developed.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If you have already investigated that much, why do you want to spend any money now?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I have explained to the gentleman I am taking the estimates of private individuals. Now, we want to get something official. We want to put it in the Government record.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman also stated this would be helpful to other irrigation sections. How much land does that cover?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I could not say exactly, but I happen to know personally, from those who have been in my office seeking some other source of supply for these irrigation districts, that Dalton Garden, Avondale, and Chilco-Post Falls depend on Hayden Lake, and that the water level of Hayden Lake is lowered so far and they have to pump so high it is no longer practical to secure water from that source. The people whose homes are on those irrigation districts are short of water. The land has gone out of production. We must find a supplemental supply. This will solve the whole situation.

Mr. DOWELL. How much land will this put in production?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. It will not bring more land into production. This is rehabilitation.

Mr. DOWELL. What do you mean by "rehabilitation"?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I mean to bring back those irrigation districts that are now short of water and cannot be fully utilized. People are living on those districts eking out a meager existence.

We have numerous photographs, which I regret I cannot bring here, showing the abandoned homes and the places where they are farming in a meager way when they could be utilizing these irrigation districts by rehabilitating them and putting them back into production.

Mr. DOWELL. Just a moment. The gentleman has introduced this bill and is familiar with the situation.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I am familiar with the situation. I have lived 40 years in that environment.

Mr. DOWELL. Then would you tell the House just how much this is going to irrigate, how much land this is going to bring into cultivation?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. If the gentleman will study the bill, he will see that we have amended the bill at the suggestion of the Department of the Interior and cut out the irrigation features. We had them only for pumping and other purposes. It is a possible market for the power that will be generated on this project.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Pumping for irrigation; yes.

Mr. DOWELL. This is for that purpose, as I understand it, for irrigation.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is it the gentleman's contention that these people who have gone onto this land, built homes, cultivated the land, and done all the things they could do should be left to abandon the places on account of insufficient water supply? Do you not think the Government should do something—go out there and furnish an adequate water supply to make power available, so the water can be put back on the land where it was originally?

Mr. GILCHRIST. Does the gentleman want me to answer his question?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I want your answer. I would like to have your answer as a Member of this House representing the great State of Iowa.

Mr. GILCHRIST. I will say that the people of your State should have every aid that the people of Iowa should have. I do not think they ought to have more. I think that at a time when the Government in cutting land out of production, at a time when it is the policy of this administration to cut down crop production, we should stop the bringing in of new lands by irrigation or reclamation.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is it the gentleman's contention that all development in this country should be stopped?

Mr. GILCHRIST. I think that development by way of irrigation of arid lands can wait until the time comes when the production of lands already under cultivation shall be short of what the market demands. I think it is very, very foolish for this Government to go ahead and bring in new lands under the conditions that now prevail, when we are voting large appropriations to take lands out of cultivation. Your bill, as I understood your answer to the gentleman——

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I cannot yield to the gentleman for a stump speech. I will yield to him for a question that will throw light on this matter.

Mr. GILCHRIST. This bill is for pumping, yes; but it is for pumping for irrigation. That is what it says.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I cannot yield further. I suggest the gentleman get his own time, as there is going to be 1 hour of debate on that side.

Mr. GILCHRIST. I will be very pleased to do that, but I thought I had the right to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Let me answer the gentleman by repeating the statement I have made over and over again. This does not propose to bring into production new lands. This land has already been settled, the homes are built there, the roads are built, railroads have been constructed through the land and everything has been done to produce fine communities, and does the gentleman think that these people should be made to leave there because their source of water has failed them?

I may say further, Mr. Chairman, the same conditions exist here that obtain in the dust bowl. We must do something to reestablish the homes of the people who are on this land, and we are simply asking you for this authorization of appropriation and it has the approval of the Bureau of Reclamation, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Budget.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. First, I want to say that these communities that exist here have everything that is conducive to the establishment of a fine community. The people are already on the land and we are trying to get this authorization in order to determine what should be done eventually, and the Congress will have ample opportunity to go into the details when the matter is presented on the floor here for appropriate action. We think we should know and know as soon as possible, what can be done in this situation and the sole purpose of the bill is to secure an authorization of some $25,000 to make this determination which involves one of the finest power sites in the entire United States.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman stated a while ago this land was not being cultivated because they did not have the water. Can the gentleman explain to the Committee why we will cut off production on land that is in proper condition, as it is in Iowa and in the Middle West, and then proceed to spend large sums of money in putting water over land that is not now in cultivation?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Does the gentleman want to pauperize these settlers out there because they are short of water on account of some possible benefit that may come to the State of Iowa?

Mr. DOWELL. May I suggest to the gentleman it is more important, it seems to me, that we do not put more land under cultivation while we have a policy of keeping land out of cultivation where it is productive.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. May I say to the gentleman that his contention is right along the line of the statement made at the Bureau of the Budget when they went down there to get the money to eliminate predatory animals. They said we must reduce the production of livestock; and why not let the wolves and the coyotes take the stock? Is that the gentleman's contention?

Mr. DOWELL. No; my contention is not to put more land under cultivation until we take care of what we have under cultivation now. May I ask the gentleman one thing more? Whenever the surplus problem is solved, then you can come to this House with good grace and ask to have this land put under cultivation.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I may say to the gentleman that his proposition, reduced to its simplest terms, is whether we should produce a surplus of agricultural crops or increase the surplus of the unemployed. If the gentleman wants to take people off the land where they can dig out their own sustenance and bring them into communities where they have to vote millions of dollars in order to support the unemployed, or put them in inefficient labor, that is one thing. Here they are engaged in private initiative on projects that have already been built. If the gentleman wants to take that position, he is welcome to do so; but this is simply a question of whether we are going to have surplus products or an additional surplus of unemployed people, with all that this means to the children as well as to their parents.

Mr. DOWELL. In other words, the gentleman favors putting more land under cultivation while we have a surplus and while we are taking land from cultivation throughout the country that is now producing crops.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I think I have made it clear to the gentleman—at least, I have tried to make it clear—that we are not bringing any land under cultivation but rehabilitating land already in cultivation.

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I now yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. GREEVER. As a matter of fact, the lands proposed to be put under cultivation do not raise crops that come into competition with the crops raised in the State which the gentleman who just spoke represents.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I may say most emphatically they do not. The principal outlet of this country is in the local mines and in Canada. A great deal of our stuff goes across the line into the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. As I understand, this bill only calls for an appropriation of $25,000?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Which means there is not a very great deal of work entailed in this study. Is not that the fact?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. That is correct.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Then, if this is only a small job, have we not a department in this entire Government that could go out there without putting through this bill and without having any special appropriation?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. No; not under the plans being followed by the Bureau of Reclamation. They must have an authorization for this appropriation.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. How about the W. P. A.; can they not make a study of this matter without any appropriation?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. This is to be handled not by W. P. A. or by any other organization, and I do not want to go into that.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I know that is true under your bill, but cannot the W. P. A. make this study?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Oh, if they were so disposed, I presume they could.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. BURDICK. As I understand it, all the gentleman is trying to do with respect to any irrigation which may be involved in this measure is to give the people out there a chance to live where they are now?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has again expired.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute more.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. How long has this community been established there?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. About 40 years. There are seven or eight irrigation districts, and it dates back from 1900 on.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. And this bill simply proposes to investigate the question of supplementing existing water supply for an existing community?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. And the practicability of this power development and the market for the power that is produced there. This is simply a matter of investigation.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. For an established community?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Which has been there for 40 years?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has again expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, there is no Member of this House for whom I have greater affection than the proponent of this measure, the distinguished and able Member from Idaho [Mr. WHITE]. His happy personality and his approach to these questions are certainly most interesting. Those of you who were in the last Congress remember that in the heel of that hunt the gentleman from Idaho brought in this bill under a motion to suspend the rules, and the bill was roundly defeated.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman from Idaho does not lose courage, and he is here again endeavoring to write into law something, of course, that may commend him as a Representative to his own constituents, but from the standpoint of the Treasury can only be defined in classic phrase as a piece of pork, pure and undefiled.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. In just a minute. I want the gentleman to cool off a little. If gentlemen who are present here will turn to the letter of the Secretary of the Interior on page 2 of the report, they will find that the Secretary of the Interior condemns, beyond hope of salvation, this project so persistently pushed by my good friend from Idaho. In the first paragraph on page 2 of the report in the letter to which I refer, the Secretary states:

A complete investigation of the possibility of irrigating the Rathdrum Prairie area in Kootenai and Bonner Counties, Idaho, was made by the Bureau of Reclamation in 1931 and 1932.

So that there is now in the Department of the Interior a full and complete data as to this proposition.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I should like to correct the gentleman.

Mr. CULKIN. I shall yield in just a moment or two.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. But if the gentleman——

Mr. CULKIN. No; no. I refuse to yield now. The letter goes on to state:

That report shows that the engineering plans for the rehabilitation of the irrigation districts could not be completed within the assumed economic limits, and therefore was infeasible.

The gentleman now takes refuge in the proposition that this is not reclamation. He was somewhat beleaguered by my friend from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL]. He said it was merely to render present land more fertile, and was simply a pumping proposition—a $10,000,000 pumping proposition, $10,000,000 to be taken out of the Treasury for the purpose of establishing power. With reference to that, note what the Secretary of the Interior himself, in a measure a proponent of reclamation and power, says:

There is a possibility of developing a feasible power project at the Cabinet Gorge site on the Clark Fork of the Columbia River; further investigations are necessary to determine, first, the power markets that might be served by the plant, and, second, the design and cost of a dam at this site, provided that the necessary markets can be developed.

In other words, the proposition is uneconomic from an irrigation standpoint, and there are no markets for the power. In the past I have had a considerable number of skirmishes with my friends from the western country who are seeking appropriations for reclamation. I want to make myself clear here and now that there is no man in this House more devoted to the orderly and proper development of the arid West than I. Before I take a stand on a reclamation proposition I endeavor to find out if the project is economic. The Secretary of the Interior says that this is not an economic project, and condemns it for reclamation and power purposes in his own letter.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. If the gentleman will yield, I think I can save the House and the gentleman some time.

Mr. CULKIN. Not now. I call attention of the House to the fact that we are now spending or beginning to spend on this same river for reclamation purposes $490,000,000 in the Grand Coulee area. At Bonneville, Wash., we are spending another $50,000,000. Grand Coulee is a most uneconomic, a most unsound project, and if such projects as is here suggested are sufficiently multiplied, they will ultimately wreck the United States Treasury. They will do a disservice, if you please, to genuine needed reclamation. Every piece of reclamation pork that is put over here defeats the needs of real reclamation and discredits it.

My judgment is that this may add to the prestige of the gentleman from Idaho in his own district, but from what I know of his personality, his fascinating and charming character, that sort of influence on his part does not need any additional prop. [Applause.] So I say to you this is the time to call a halt. You are going to be confronted with demands for reclamation, some of it sound, much of it unsound, that will run into $3,000,000,000 before this Congress is over. Do not start with this pipe dream that emanates from some of the chambers of commerce enthusiasts of the gentleman from Idaho.

Now I am going to yield to the gentleman from Idaho for a question; not a self-serving declaration but for a question.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I am going to yield the gentleman 1 minute of my time that he may properly answer the questions I should like to put to him. If the gentleman in his diligence in reading the report had read the last report from the Department of the Interior, he would have saved himself and the House considerable time, because he would have found in there that the words "and a reclamation project embracing the Rathdrum Prairie area in Kootenai and Bonner Counties, Idaho" were stricken out. A committee amendment has been passed by the committee, and that part is cut out. It is simply an investigation of the Cabinet Gorge power project. I will add that there is a vast amount of water going away to the sea that is not being used by anyone. Is it the gentleman's contention that if that power can be utilized to manufacture the timber in that country and develop the mineral resources of that country, it should be allowed to escape and no attention paid to it and no investigation be had and nothing done about it? Is the gentleman in favor of that policy?

Mr. CULKIN. Now, the gentleman has asked me a question. I have a very tender conscience. The gentleman makes me suffer when he makes that sort of pathetic appeal, but that statement of the gentleman does not change my view one iota.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. We knew that in advance. [Laughter.]

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman, of course, is somewhat concerned about the attitude of his constituents. We will all bear witness that he has made a gallant fight for this uneconomic proposition. That ought to be sufficient glory for him without making it part and parcel of another raid on the Federal Treasury.

I repeat that this is just getting the camel's nose under the tent on this reclamation proposition. It means the beginning, if you open the door here, to unbridled and unqualified spending of the public money, running, as I say—and I say it advisedly—into a sum approximating $3,000,000,000.

I wish to say this in corroboration of what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] brought out a moment ago, that every new acre of land which is brought into production in these western areas decreases the present value of lands in Kansas, in Minnesota, in Iowa, and in every other agricultural State North, East, South, and West.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CULKIN. In just a moment. These new lands increase the problem of surpluses. That is what the A. A. A. was directed at. I voted for the A. A. A. I think it was correct in principle. It was for the purpose of controlling surpluses. This proposition is preliminary to adding to those surpluses and placing new burdens on the men who are on the land. It will particularly place a new burden upon men who are on the irrigated lands. I say now to those gentlemen from the reclamation States, as I have said before, that the time is coming, if this foolish, uneconomic policy is persevered in, when their constituents will turn on them and they will disappear from the legislative lists.

Sound policy, intelligent disbursement of the public money, due regard for the policies for the present administration, and the present Department of Agriculture call for the defeat of this bill, not only because it is unsound but because it is something that will bring disaster to the other farmers who are on the land. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Could not everything the gentleman has said and every argument he has made, have been made by the people east of the Alleghanies when Ohio, Illinois, and Indiana were being developed? Could not the people of Virginia, Maryland, and other Eastern States have made the same argument against the development of Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio? Could not every argument the gentleman has made have been made at the time those States were developed and that agricultural land brought into production?

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman loses strength and force as he goes along. That question is irrelevant. The people of those States always paid their own way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. In his remarks the gentleman referred to this bill as a piece of undefiled pork. A reading of the report of the committee would indicate that it is a piece of pork that has been impregnated with trichinosis; is that not true?

Mr. CULKIN. I accept the amended definition.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Is it not a fact that this bill as now amended in accordance with the report and recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, is not a reclamation or irrigation bill at all, but is purely a power bill? The gentleman will notice that the Secretary in his recommendation cut out practically all reference to either irrigation or reclamation.

Mr. CULKIN. Yes; I think that is probably true; but reclamation is just like that famous lizard, the chameleon, that changes color. Reclamation changes color as legislative needs demand, sometimes it is power and then again it is reclamation. Today it happens to be power.

Mr. MOTT. The point I am getting at is that this is a power bill as it is now presented to us, and nothing else. If this be the case, why ask that this survey be made by the Interior Department when the War Department has made every survey of a power project? The Army engineers do it, and they do it without the necessity of an additional appropriation, and they bring in with their report all of the information there is on the power project. It is a report of experts and it costs probably a fraction as much as the amount asked for in the bill. My question is, Why give any jurisdiction to the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. CULKIN. I understand; the gentleman wants to know why it should not go to the War Department engineers.

Mr. MOTT. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. I will say this, that the best engineers in the world on the matters of transportation and water power, the best economists in that field, are the United States engineers. That is where it should go. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MOTT. And I venture the further assertion that it would be found they already have information on this project down in the War Department.

Mr. CULKIN. That would not be surprising.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

A THREE-HORSE TEAM PLOWING A FIELD

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, last night the President went back to the "horse and buggy" days for an illustration, and likened our Government, consisting of a legislative, a judicial, and an executive branch, to a three-horse team plowing a field. The illustration is a very good one and, rightly applied and correctly understood, lays bare his plan to usurp the functions of the Supreme Court. Unfortunately the President has the horses of his team hitched, not abreast but tandem, with the Executive as the lead horse, determining the course of the plowing.

Our forefathers, having suffered from unjust laws, enforced arbitrarily by an executive and his appointees, wisely determined upon a system of checks and balances, whereby laws are enacted by representatives selected directly by the people and for short terms.

WHY A SUPREME COURT?

Knowing that the people themselves, as history has demonstrated, often, under the pressure of some temporary urge or disaster, adopt expediencies which are ill-advised, a judicial department was established, at its head the Supreme Court, its judges appointed for life, with authority to determine whether the legislation enacted squared with the Constitution.

Remote from popular clamor, not dependent upon the will of the people for their tenure of office, selected in the first place because of their integrity and ability, the members of this Court are enabled to look without passion or prejudice at the enactment of the Congress and determine, not whether such laws are wise or expedient but whether they were enacted in the exercise of powers granted to that body by the Constitution.

USURPATION OF LEGISLATIVE POWERS

The Executive was charged only with the enforcement of the law. It is a matter of common knowledge that in recent years the Executive, through his advisers, has written many bills, sent them to Congress under the title of "must legislation", and, because of the pressure exerted by him, those bills became law. Thus he usurped the functions of Congress. Those laws he proceeded, through his appointees, to execute arbitrarily and without judicial determination.

USURPATION OF JUDICIAL POWERS

When the Court, in a few instances, held that the enactment of those laws, passed because of the claimed existence of an emergency, under threat of revolution if they were not enacted, was an improper exercise of power by Congress, the President conceived the plan of establishing a Court which would do the will of the Executive and of the legislative branch of the Government, as dictated by the Executive. Thus he seeks to usurp the functions of the judiciary.

He wants to change one of the horses of the team. He forgets entirely that a three-horse team plowing a field is of no value without a restraining power. The team has that influence in a driver. The Government has it in the Supreme Court and the Constitution.

THE SUPREME COURT'S PLACE IN A THREE-HORSE TEAM

Again, as every farmer knows, a three-horse plow team has three horses driven abreast. Not infrequently the two outside ones are young and fractious, headstrong, and inclined to go their way. And so the plowman, who knows his business puts in the middle, not another wild and woolly yearling, unbroken, with a maximum of energy and a minimum of judgment, but a tried and true, staid, old workhorse.

PROGRESS THAT CONTINUES

Under the direction of the driver, not only is the one field plowed, but the work goes on without bolting this way or that, the team held down to a steady but continuous, if plodding, progress.

Both the farmer and the experienced, old work horse know that there are other fields, that there are other days, yes, other weeks. The Supreme Court knows that there are other days and other years and other centuries and that Congress and the Executive must both be held, not to do the bidding of the Supreme Court, but to do the will of the people, guided by the driver's, the Constitution's, restrictions.

In everyday life, this sort of a team accomplishes much and the progress is ever onward. A team made up of nervous, high-strung horses, even though they may be Kentucky thoroughbreds, speedy and impelled by the highest motives to get somewhere soon—in fact, right now—in the end turn few furrows, plow little ground, although they may kick up quite a dust.

The President would hook up the three departments of the Government, not abreast, as the forefathers did, each doing its part of the work, all pulling together toward a common end, under the guidance and the limitations of the Constitution. He would arrange these departments like a three-horse team hooked tandem, with himself in the lead. He would not submit to any directions or restrictions by the governmental driver—the Constitution.

A TEAM WITHOUT RESTRAINT

He, like a lead horse without guidance or rein, would determine the speed at which the team should travel and the direction in which it should go, and, if the staid old horse in the middle chose to follow the furrow and the driver's controlling rein, he would leave the driver—the Constitution—sitting under a shade tree and substitute for the old work horse—the Supreme Court—new blood, judges who will have expressed before they are appointed an opinion in favor of the legislation he desires.

The President may know all about yachts and deep-sea fishing, but last night he displayed a lack of knowledge of farming, of plowing, and of the way in which a team is used, even though he claims to know about the "horse and buggy" days.

The years have demonstrated that our form of government, the three departments, all working together under the Constitution, and not in defiance of it, is still the best system in existence. Let us continue in the lawful way, and when our Constitution needs change, let the people do it in the manner provided in that instrument.

Franklin Delano Roosevelt is not the only President the United States has had. We have had depressions, emergencies, and crises in our history, and through all of them we have survived and made progress, not in violation of but within the spirit of the Constitution. If we have courage and faith, we can do it again. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILCHRIST].

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, this bill is either a power bill, or it is a reclamation bill, or it is both. If you will read the bill you will discover that on the motion of the Secretary of the Interior they struck from the bill the language dealing with reclamation projects; but in lieu thereof and also on his own motion they put in the language that this should be a hydroelectric power project for irrigation pumping or other uses.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILCHRIST. I will yield to the gentleman when I get through. The gentleman is about to ask me about the phrase "or other uses" as not being limited alone to hydroelectric power purposes. Perhaps it is, and perhaps it is not. No man can say positively that this language is limited alone to the hydroelectric project for irrigation pumping or other purposes. If it is a power project, of course, as was pointed out by the gentleman from Oregon, it is not properly here but ought to be in the War Department. They can make their own surveys, and they make the best surveys in the world. In that case we would not need to expend this money.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILCHRIST. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. I just made the proposal to the gentleman from Idaho that if he would consent to an amendment requesting that this survey be made by the War Department, which properly should make it, that I would be glad to support the bill; but neither a survey by the Interior Department nor the granting of any jurisdiction over a power project to the Interior Department is proper.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILCHRIST. Yes; on the gentleman's time. That is fair. I had only 5 minutes to start with.

So, Mr. Chairman, as I said at the outset, if it is a power bill it is not properly here. Furthermore, if it is a power bill it does not appear that it is within the constitutional limitation that was laid down in the T. V. A. decision on the Norris Dam and other such kindred works, because that decision was founded upon the proposition that the sale of power was incidental to the reclamation of the river, incidental to commerce upon the river, and incidental also to control of the river for flood purposes. These are things clearly within the province of this Congress to pass upon. That does not appear. It does appear to the contrary, however, that it is not a kind of proposition that would be within the four corners of this T. V. A. decision.

Passing from that proposition to the question of whether this is a reclamation bill—and it may be that it is possible so to construe those words—then it is manifest that it ought not to be here, because the time is not ripe for further reclamation districts to be established.

The gentleman has very ably put his argument on the ground of helping poor people out there. Does the power proposition help them? Is it going to rescue these men from arid lands if you give them power? Power to do what? Power to turn machinery?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, the proposition that this is really a reclamation project is the thing upon which the able gentleman from Idaho has appealed to us for support; but in his speech he says it is not reclamation; it is not for the purpose of helping the poor friends of his and mine out there at all if we are to support the Secretary of the Interior in his view of it. Furthermore, if it is a reclamation project, certainly this is not the proper time, with the Secretary of Agriculture, all of the Cabinet, and the President asking for various appropriations to cut down the surpluses. I have been one of those who believed that we must cut down surpluses in order to put agriculture back upon a sure footing. We cannot go on and on and on raising foodstuffs beyond our needs and then expect to get good prices. I am one of those Republicans who believe it is a part, and should be a part, of our system, to cut down production insofar as that production creates surpluses beyond the ability of the market to buy. That is our condition now. That is exactly what we are confronted with. The time has not come for the people out there to raise crops and create a surplus.

Mr. Chairman, something was said about the fact they do not raise crops in competition with the other States.

Mr. CARLSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILCHRIST. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CARLSON. I believe a statement was made on the floor of the House that this would not result in competition with agricultural lands of the Middle West.

Mr. GILCHRIST. That statement was made.

Mr. CARLSON. I find in a resolution of the Spirit Lake (Idaho) Chamber of Commerce, which organization is in favor of this measure, that the purpose is to convert the land adjacent to this power and irrigation project into stock raising and farming. Therefore, I think it would come in competition with the farm lands of other States.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Certainly. Now, beets are raised in many places in this country.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILCHRIST. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. After hearing the debate thus far I am wondering if the proponents of the bill would not withdraw it for the good of everybody?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The statement has been made on the floor that this is idiotic. I will leave to the verdict of posterity as to whether the policy of the proponents or opponents of this bill is idiotic.

Mr. GILCHRIST. I should be glad to leave it to posterity or prosperity.

Mr. CULKIN. Did the gentleman say "prosperity" or "posterity"?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Both.

Mr. GILCHRIST. I should like to leave it to posterity, but I do not think either the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE] or myself will live long enough to collect the bet or find out which one of us is right.

May I say something with regard to the raising of sugar beets? They may be raised there. If you put this land under water, it will come immediately into competition with the sugar-beet country and the cane-sugar country. Are you going to raise wheat or potatoes? I have heard something about Idaho potatoes. Certainly it will come into competition with all the rest of the agricultural production of the country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, our colleagues on this side of the aisle should "quit kicking our hound dogs around." I have been through this territory and am thoroughly familiar with it. I may not have a complete picture of the situation, but I understand there is a district here that is settled, divided into farms, the farms fenced, houses built, schools constructed, and everything built to make up a community. Then the water partially fails. The Reclamation Service made a survey or study and found they could not get water into the district except by pumping, at the exorbitantly high rate charged by the power companies. Therefore the Secretary of the Interior makes the statement it is not feasible to irrigate the land at present power rates. The authorization of $25,000 from the reclamation fund is a very small matter, considering the thousands and millions that we have voted out of the Treasury of the United States in the last 4 years. The measure under consideration calls for an appropriation of $25,000 to make a survey and study of the situation to see if cheap electric power may be developed. Whether it is feasible or not depends entirely upon the price of power. Throughout the West we are paying very high rates for power. If we had the T. V. A. rates out in that country, we would pay one-third or less than we are paying today for electric power. If cheap power can be developed, then it is feasible to pump the water for irrigation and thereby save the homes of the people who are living there. They may then raise the grass that old Bess eats and they can gather eggs and not be on relief.

Mr. Chairman, I am ready to vote money to make a survey of all feasible projects involving power which may be used for or in connection with irrigation. Grand Coulee is the object of attack of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN]. He likes to talk about it and roll it around a little bit. Some years ago a Member of this House gained great fame in talking about Duluth and the great country that was going to be developed out there by making sport of the situation. Maybe our friend from New York will be as badly deceived in years to come about Grand Coulee. He may be in the same position as the Congressman who talked about and made sport of Duluth some years ago.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I cannot yield to the gentleman now.

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman is referring to me, and it seems to me he ought to yield.

Mr. PIERCE. Not right now. Let me finish my thought.

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman invites my interruption when he mentions my name.

Mr. PIERCE. I want to see the $25,000 authorized. The bill still has to run the gantlet of the Reclamation Department before the $25,000 may be used to make a study to see if the power can be developed at the rates at which it is said it can be developed and sold. If such development is possible, the market is found there; yes, for irrigation and for the other uses that will come naturally.

Our friend from Iowa made a long, long talk about raising more products to come into competition with other agricultural products. The big crops that are raised on these districts do not compete with the products of Iowa and Michigan except incidentally. As for sugar, we are still an importing country. If we can raise more sugar in the United States, I am willing to help do so. I think we should raise our own sugar in sugar beets.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I yield the gentleman from Oregon 2 additional minutes.

Mr. PIERCE. Do not take seriously the criticism of our friends here who would stop progress in the West, who would call a halt on these surveys and studies. There are many projects in the West where electric power can be developed very cheaply. There is no coal to dig out, there are no trees to cut down to generate power. The rains supply the force in the streams. If this power can be developed and utilized for pumping the water cheaply onto those lands, the thousands and thousands of people who must leave the territory just east of the Continental Divide can find homes there where they can live comfortably.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield to my friend from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Is the gentleman familiar with this particular area in which this power is to be provided?

Mr. PIERCE. Just driving through there is all.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. What has been the source of the water supply for irrigation? Has it been by gravity?

Mr. PIERCE. There has been a lowering of the water supply which, as I understand it, has deprived them of water. There was at one time plenty of water, but the water level throughout a good deal of that part of the West has been sinking for 20 years, and I think this is one of the areas so affected.

Now they want to supplement that supply by pumping water, and if they have the power furnished cheaply enough they can pump it and still live in their homes.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. How large an area of farm land is involved?

Mr. PIERCE. I could not tell the gentleman that.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. As a matter of fact this money does not come out of the Treasury at all, but out of the reclamation fund, a fund which has been accumulated by the sale of public lands.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman referred to my attitude on the Grand Coulee. Would I be violating any confidence if I asked the gentleman if there have not been times when he was not very enthusiastic about the Grand Coulee himself?

Mr. PIERCE. I am not going to answer that directly. I will say to my friend from New York that I hope he will take a trip through Grand Coulee 25 years from now, when I think he will see a picture altogether different from the picture he dreams of now.

Mr. CULKIN. I have a high opinion of the gentleman's sincerity.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, my colleague understands that whatever may be the incidental features of this project, such as irrigation or reclamation, as the bill is now before us it is purely a power project and nothing else. This is borne out by a reading of the bill, is it not?

Mr. PIERCE. That is true, but I think in the background is the saving of this settlement, which is why I want to see cheap power available.

Mr. MOTT. Since it is a fact that this is purely a power project, why bring in a bill asking the Interior Department to make a survey and appropriate $25,000 when this is within the jurisdiction of the War Department? The survey will be made by experts, and we will not have to authorize a cent.

Mr. PIERCE. Because when irrigation is mixed up in any way, directly or indirectly, with a power project it should be under the Reclamation Service, as is Grand Coulee, which is for reclamation and power, while Bonneville is power and navigation.

Mr. MOTT. My colleague knows that the War Department made both of those surveys.

Mr. PIERCE. Construction of Grand Coulee is now being done by the Reclamation Service.

Mr. MOTT. I say the War Department made the survey. That is what this bill is asking for.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, it happens that the two committees that have had bills come under fire this afternoon are committees of which I happen to be one of the minority members, and we all joined in the favorable report on these bills. So possibly I should take a few minutes to come to the defense of the integrity of the minority membership thereon.

THE INDIANS HAVE A VOICE

First, I want to go back to the bill from the Committee on Indian Affairs, on which we had the roll call.

I am afraid that many of the Members of the House voted under the impression that the bill was presented here by the Indian Affairs Committee without an opportunity being afforded for anyone to be heard upon it. It should be known that the gentleman who, we now understand, wanted to appear before that committee was present at the time the bill was considered by the committee. He could have been heard.

The objection that was raised here on the floor this afternoon was that this land was to be traded at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior without the consent of the Indians concerned. That is not the case.

As a matter of record I would like to call to your attention the first sentences in sections 2 and 3 of that bill. The first sentence in section 2 reads as follows:

No allotted or other lands covered by trust patent or other instrument containing restriction against alienation by the allottee shall be involved in any such exchange except with the consent of the allottees or their heirs.

That takes care of the allottees.

And the first sentence of section 3 takes care of tribal lands. It reads:

No tribal lands shall be involved in any such exchange except with the consent of a majority of the adult Indians entitled to the use thereof.

So in the bill itself provision was made to take care of Indian consent on both the allotted lands and the tribal lands, and on behalf of the minority members I would like to make it clear that there was no objection to the bill.

COMMITTEE UNITED ON IRRIGATION BILL

Similarly there was no objection raised by the minority members of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation to the bill now under consideration. There were three members of the minority in committee when this bill was heard. Some questions were asked and we obtained some information about it, but there was no objection raised, and I would like to speak for the integrity of the members of that committee.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. My time is limited and I am not going to yield until I finish what I have to say.

I want to speak, first, with respect to the question of shifting positions, whether this is a power bill or whether it is reclamation.

Mr. Page, the Commissioner of Reclamation, appeared before us at our last meeting and I happened to ask him the question:

Is there any way, Mr. Commissioner, in which the purposes of flood control that are accomplished by some reclamation measures can be assessed to the people who benefit by reason of the flood control?

He said:

There is no way in which that can be accomplished.

I then said:

There are other purposes or benefits that are accomplished by water control and water development.

And he said:

Yes.

And I said:

Navigation sometimes? Yes.
Power development sometimes? Yes.
Irrigation sometimes? Yes.
Flood control sometimes? Yes.
Who pays the bill for all benefits in our irrigation and reclamation projects when the cost is assessed back to the land?

The Commissioner said:

The people of the irrigation districts pay the cost.

Then what should be more natural than in the attempt to discover some way for these people to have an economic independence we should seek to find all the sources of revenue that can come from the development of any water project? What more natural then, that when the Secretary reports, as has been pointed out, that a thing is not feasible, for irrigation alone that the committee should then seek to find on what other bases the development of this water project might stand economically? So, naturally we want to find out whether in this particular project, in addition to the benefits that may come from irrigation, there will be benefits from the development of power, so that the cost can be shared by the several interests that will benefit.

Something has been said here as to increasing surplus production.

I am just a little surprised at some of the arguments that have been brought up this afternoon. A few days ago, when a bill was rushed before the House to appropriate $20,000,000 for the relief of people in the flood districts, no one objected to the purposes of the bill. There may have been some question as to the procedure, some questions about some phase of it, but so far as the purpose of alleviating the suffering of people in the flood districts was concerned, no one objected. We have done everything that could be done by this body for the people in the flood districts; and I submit, Mr. Chairman, if you could go through the districts where irrigation is being proposed you would find that the people are just as worthy and just as deserving of measures for their economic relief and for their salvation as the people in the flood districts, and I do not begrudge anything we have done for the people in the flood districts.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I must decline to yield until I have concluded my statement.

An excess of water may be an economic calamity in one district and a shortage of water may be an economic calamity in another district. In the development of irrigation and reclamation projects we are not seeking to bring in surplus production. The gentleman from Iowa spoke about raising sugar, and certainly the gentleman with his knowledge of agricultural products knows that in this country we do not produce a surplus of sugar, and yet it might be implied from his remarks that we are producing a surplus of sugar. In the United States alone we produce less than 25 percent of the domestic consumption of sugar, and under the flag, taking our country as a whole, we do not produce a surplus of sugar.

If we irrigate lands where farmers now are working out their hearts trying to make a living growing corn or growing wheat or something of that sort in competition with other farmers—if we can transfer them into an economy where they are producing sugar beets, then they are not going into competition with you. We are putting them into the production of a noncompetitive product. You may answer, "What about your quota system?" At the present time the sugar-beet production of the country does not meet the quota allotted to sugar beets, and until America is producing a surplus of sugar, is it not a better proposition that we take wheat and corn farmers and put them into the production of sugar beets?

Something may be said with regard to livestock, but the people out in these dry-land areas are now trying to produce livestock, and one of the things accomplished by irrigation is the production of needed winter feed. Is it economical that these people should live out their days trying to get along without using the water that goes to waste? You appropriate money for their relief and we appreciate that, but these people want a chance to make good for themselves, and that is why they want this water, to go into noncompetitive production and make it possible for them to get winter feed for the stock for which they have the summer range.

The question is raised as to whether this is economically sound or not; but certainly it is not economically sound to ask these people to move from where they are and become nomads. They want to stay there. They have built their homes, they have built their schools, they have built their churches and they want a chance to succeed.

And they should have the same chance at economic independence that we freely concede and grant and are willing to support for the people of the districts where they have an abundance of water. [Applause.]

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. The gentleman has made a good general statement about this matter and I am wondering if he can inform some of us not acquainted with that particular section of the country as to how far the proposed site of this dam is from the Grand Coulee Dam.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I would rather have the gentleman from Idaho answer that, because it is his bill and I am not familiar with the immediate district.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Is the gentleman familiar with the population there, as to whether it is sparsely or thickly populated?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I would rather have the gentleman from Idaho answer that question.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, the Coulee Dam is 225 miles in an air line west of the site of this proposed project, and, further, in certain valleys out there it is fairly well populated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I was born in the Middle West quite a number of years ago. About 25 years ago I moved to the far West, and sometimes when I hear certain gentlemen from New York speak on the floor of this House I thank Almighty God that I was not born and reared in that State. They talk about pork. Well, the way they squeal every time anybody gets up and says anything about power and irrigation, they must be an authority on pork. If they would read the bill they would find that the question of reclamation has been deleted, and it is a question of power, but I shall address myself also to the question of irrigation and later on when the question of the Coulee Dam comes up I think I shall be ready to meet some of these allegations and aspersions by Members on the other side of the House. I want to make just a few remarks now with reference to irrigation. A king who bore the same name as I do, Canute, King Canute, the Dane, sat among his courtiers at the seaside and said to the waves, "So far and no farther." But the tides came in, and King Canute could not control the tides. I say here to you Members of the House today that all the mouthings of those who oppose irrigation cannot stop the onward march of irrigation and reclamation in the United States, both in the West and in the South, by reclamation, by irrigation, and by drainage. You cannot stop it, it is coming in spite of you. The Coulee Dam is one of the grandest projects in the history of the world ever undertaken by man, great not alone for the district that I represent, because it is partly in that district, not alone for the State of Washington, not alone for the Northwest, but for the whole United States, for you who live any place in the United States. You will all some day thank God that such men as Secretary Ickes and President Roosevelt had the courage and found the means to start that project, and to carry it through to completion.

I want now to answer two or three questions that have been raised. Does irrigation pay its debts? You are talking about pork, you who live in the East and Middle West, and I look at some of you now right in your eyes and say to you that we did not withhold our support from flood control, God forbid that we should, and we want to help you take care of the men, women, and children who are suffering and dying there, but how much, what percent, what penny out of a dollar do you pay back of all the money that we have appropriated? Not one cent. We gave it to you to take care of those in want and suffering; the Federal Government did this, and the same is true regarding results of earthquakes and droughts and hurricanes and tornadoes. When we gave that money we did not expect to get back a cent of it. I am here now to tell you that in the Yakima Valley where I live, from 72 to 85 percent of the money that has been expended by the Federal Government there in construction of irrigation projects has been paid back. We are going to pay back every cent and yet you talk about pork! Damn your talk about pork. Those who always cry "pork" are the ones who look for it. Irrigation has and will repay every cent the Federal Government has expended in its behalf.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Washington. No; I ask the gentleman to get his time over there on his side.

Mr. CULKIN. But the gentleman has referred to me.

Mr. HILL of Washington. If the coat fits, put it on. There is one other thing I want to speak about. Is there any competition between what we raise in the West on irrigated lands and what you raise in the Middle West?

You raise what are known as staple products—cash crops, such as corn, wheat, grain of all kinds. They are the necessities for a bare existence. Those are the products that the poor people must use. That is true. But when people get back their purchasing power so that they can get a little more money to spend than for mere existence, they are going to spend it for what is known as the protective diet, such as eggs, vegetables, and fruits; for a better-balanced diet that will help not only to keep them alive but give them health, comfort, and a physical vigor to fit them for their duties. Those are the kind of products that we raise in the West on irrigated lands, and they are not in competition with your products in the Middle West and the East at all. I would also emphasize that most of the products we raise we consume ourselves. Moreover, we are buying from you who are complaining of irrigation and reclamation. Your agricultural products are being sent west by the carloads; not only that, but we buy from your manufacturing centers. There is being sent to our section now where we are building these dams engines, implements, steam shovels, and manufactured goods of all kinds. We are buying them from you and helping you, and then your gratitude is to turn around and raise your voices and strike at us every time we try to have some small form of reclamation. I shall talk later on about the reclamation projects, but I want to close my remarks on reclamation with this statement:

The last great frontier of homesteading is the arid West. A half century ago the Middle West was called the "bread basket of the United States" and the arid West was called the "great American desert." Due to causes far beyond the control of human beings, some of the Middle West has become the Dust Bowl, where existence is barely possible. With the diversion of water now going to waste and often destructive, the American desert is becoming in a small measure the bread basket. We do not glory in the pathetic conditions of the Dust Bowl, but we do intend to provide food and homes for those who are being driven from their former homes and are coming west to seek new ones.

Just after the Civil War the great Middle West was the homestead country opened up by Lincoln and those who followed him. There are no more homesteads there now. Instead of that, people are coming to the great Northwest and going to the South, where we reclaim land by irrigation in one instance and by drainage in the other. That is where the future homesteads, lands for homesteads, are to be found. Secondly, let me tell you Members on the Republican side, do you know that 12,000 families—not persons, but 12,000 families—from Kansas, Nebraska, from the Dakotas, and Oklahoma have come to our States of Washington, Idaho, and Oregon in the last year, asking us to find them homes? [Applause.] They are asking us to give them something to eat and to feed them. We are digging down into our pockets to help those who left your States. That is what we are doing. More than 12,000 families came there to find homes; yet you are against more irrigation.

But this bill does not deal with that. This bill deals with power. It has been stated on the floor of this House that we have got too much power already. Yes; we have too much power, because we have rates at 10 or 12 cents per kilowatt; but when you get the Government of the United States to develop power so that we will get it at 1 cent per kilowatt, we will not have too much power. Why? Because the people are going to use 10 or 15 times as much power as they are using today. Those who have no power at all, those who have only a little power in their homes, will use it for every conceivable purpose. So when we develop the Coulee Dam and the Bonneville Dam and the St. Lawrence-Great Lakes Waterway and all the power sites in the United States, we are going to use every kilowatt of power that is developed. People will buy it because it is low in price. That is what President Roosevelt stands for. That is what Secretary Ickes stands for. That is why, when they came out to our great Northwest in 1934 and saw the great opportunity for developing a power plant that would give cheap power for our people, they said, "We are going to do it." And they are going to finish the job in spite of opposition and obstructions.

I close by saying you cannot stop the tides of progress. They are coming. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL] has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, the last speaker, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL], made reference to the large influx of people into the semiarid States in the past few years. Of course, it is human nature to want to be where Santa Claus spends most of his time. [Laughter.] I cannot recall a year in the last 20 when some of these Western States have not been before the Congress asking for huge sums of money for the purpose of bringing additional lands under water. Now, do not get the idea that this $25,000 they are asking for today is all this proposed project will call for. That sum is not going to accomplish anything except to make a survey. After that survey is made they will come back and ask for perhaps twenty-five or fifty million dollars to carry out the recommendations that will be made. Such recommendations are always made. Why all this hurry about developing the entire country? We cannot hope to develop this great continent in a few generations. There are other generations coming after us. We should leave a little frontier for them to develop.

The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL] sought to minimize the competition that is being forced upon our farmers as a result of this constant development of irrigated land. With us, that competition is a serious problem. Each time you bring in a new area of irrigated land you simply emphasize the grave and serious crop-surplus situation that the Mississippi Valley has had to contend with in the past few years. We are spending hundreds of millions of dollars in order to control production in this country, and then we turn around and spend millions of dollars to bring new land into production through reclamation. Is there any sense in a policy like that?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. KNUTSON. I cannot. I only have 5 minutes.

I dare say there is not a man here this afternoon coming from the Middle West who has not time and again had his farmer constituents complain to him about the policy of Congress in appropriating money to bring new lands into production through irrigation, which can only mean greater surpluses. You cannot justify the spending of money to control production, on the one hand, and then spending millions of dollars to increase production, on the other hand. They say that the products of this land will not come into competition with us. I say it will, and the gentleman knows it will.

Mr. HILL of Washington. I do not know it, because it does not.

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes; it does.

Mr. HILL of Washington. It does not.

Mr. KNUTSON. We always hear that your products do not compete with our section of the country. What are you going to raise out there—jack rabbits?

Mr. HILL of Washington. What will we send here? Can the gentleman name anything that we send here?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the regular order.

Mr. KNUTSON. Oh, you produce alfalfa, and so do we. You produce sheep, and so do we. You produce cattle, and so do we. You produce potatoes, and so do we. I could go on that way for another 5 minutes, enumerating the things that you produce which come into competition with us.

We do not object to your development; but whenever we have a reclamation project in Minnesota, we finance it ourselves. We have reclaimed thousands of acres of swamp lands in the northern part of the State, to our sorrow; and we as a nation have brought thousands of acres of western land under irrigation at the expense of the Federal Treasury, to our sorrow. It is about time that we called a halt on all this senseless and ofttimes harmful reclamation program. We can use these huge sums of money to better purposes.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in asking for time to address the House this afternoon is in order to speak, as my colleague the gentleman from Washington has spoken, in answer to some of the arguments which have been advanced on this floor this afternoon against this bill.

In the first place, it is my desire to ask you to think back over a few years of American history to a time before the natural resources of this country had been almost all claimed and largely monopolized, to a time before all our agricultural lands had been taken up by our farming population. In those days America bred a spirit of hope and enterprise. It was the very product of those conditions. We today, if I understand our efforts, are engaged in a great attempt to break the hold of monopoly on this land in order to bring back, insofar as we may in this modern day, that same kind of American spirit.

If I understand the agricultural program of this administration aright, it is based upon an attempt to put agriculture on an economically sound basis. It is not based on the idea of scarcity; it is based upon the belief that the farmers of the country ought not to farm uneconomical land. We are trying to put them in the position where they will be farming lands which are profitable. It is, to my mind, fallacious for people to believe that in continuing to block the development of new wealth they are helping anybody at all. This is brought to our attention with unusual force in California. People from other parts of the Nation, if they stop and think, will be glad to see us open up new opportunity for unemployed people to start out and make a living on their own hook.

Our major problem continues to be unemployment. We have got to find ways and means of getting our unemployed people into a condition where they can make a living. The problem of our farmers is not primarily a problem of overproduction, it is primarily and basically a problem of wrong distribution of income which prevents the people in this country from being able to buy the things they should have to eat.

CONTROL OF MARKET, NOT SCARCITY, IS REAL NEED OF FARMERS

Further than that, we must remember that what the farmer really needs is to be put in a position—as this administration has attempted to put him in the position—to have something to say about the price at which he sells. He should at least get cost of production for what he produces. We must help him break the hold of monopoly on the marketing of his product. When he is put in that position he will no longer need to be afraid of overproduction of essential food products.

We know today something about the problem of monopoly price. Yes; about the problem of monopoly price of electric power, if you will. Every time we enable our people to have a basic commodity like electric power at cheap cost, the benefits of it will stretch throughout the length and breadth of this land in some manner or other and will increase the prosperity not only of Idaho, not only of California but likewise of New York and other parts of our Nation. This, after all, requires us to think a little beyond the particular interest of the section from which we come. It will not directly benefit my own State of California, perhaps, if this step is made; but for my part I should be glad if I could say to people who come to California in broken-down cars because they could not make a living where they came from, that there is still a place in America where they could make another start and have a reasonable chance of making a go of it.

NEW LANDS FOR OLD

What is the use of condemning our people to an existence on marginal agricultural land when it is possible to put them on good land? America has always moved onward, she has always had a vision of a future broader than her past. Let us not forget this, as we face these problems of adjustment in this day that are greater than any we have had to face before.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The development of irrigation in the West, including California, has never been a matter of partisan politics, has it?

Mr. VOORHIS. Not so far as I know.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Hoover Dam, for instance, was not a matter of party politics, was it?

Mr. VOORHIS. No.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. And that is the way it ought to be in the future. It should be viewed from the standpoint of the progress of the people.

Mr. VOORHIS. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. Is not the policy of the Department of Agriculture at the moment one of reducing agricultural production?

Mr. VOORHIS. I should rather say it is a policy looking toward an ordered and balanced agricultural production, an economic balance of different types of production. If we can go forward with this program long enough, it will enable us to have a balanced agriculture to meet the needs of the Nation in many different lines.

Mr. DOWELL. As a matter of fact, that is the result of whatever policy the gentleman may call it?

Mr. VOORHIS. It might be in a particular commodity.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not the case in every commodity?

Mr. VOORHIS. No; I do not believe anyone can say that.

Mr. GREEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. GREEVER. Is it not true some of the very best rehabilitations and the soundest rehabilitations of farmers we have had has been upon reclamation projects?

Mr. VOORHIS. The gentleman is correct, and I thank him for his contribution.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, irrigation, reclamation, drainage, improvement of navigation, prevention of soil erosion, the generation and development of hydroelectric power are all related and allied subjects. It is extremely difficult to consider one of these subjects without taking into consideration the others. But there are certain committees of this House under which these various problems are specifically considered, committees like the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, the Committee on Flood Control, the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and the Committee on Military Affairs.

I regret that some gentlemen here this afternoon have attempted to make this a partisan or sectional matter. Certainly we all want to go forward together, because the progress and prosperity of one section of our country depends very largely upon the progress, prosperity, and stability of other sections of our country. Mr. Chairman, there has been more heat than light and more wind than wisdom in some of the words spoken by gentlemen here this afternoon.

Let us consider this particular bill. The members of the committee have been informed this bill was brought in last year as an irrigation and reclamation measure, wholly and simply that, but defeated by an overwhelming vote. If it is an irrigation and reclamation project, then the authorization of $25,000 is wholly unnecessary, because the Department of the Interior has already made the survey of this proposed project as far as rehabilitation of irrigation districts is concerned and the Department has ruled that from the standpoint of economics it is altogether infeasible. So we can eliminate this particular bill and this particular project so far as irrigation and reclamation is concerned, from a purely economic point of view.

The measure is brought into the House this afternoon as a hydroelectric power development project. I do not know whether it is an irrigation or reclamation project of whether it is a power project. Some of the proponents of the measure say it is one and other proponents of the measure say it is something else. But if it is not an irrigation and reclamation project, if the Department of the Interior has already made surveys and recommended that the project is infeasible from a purely economic point of view so far as irrigation and reclamation is concerned, then, Mr. Chairman, I submit to the Members of the Committee, it must be a power project. If it is a hydroelectric project, what committee of this House and what department of Government has the proper jurisdiction for the consideration of the measure? Why, there can be only one.

This bill should have been reported out by either the Committee on Rivers and Harbors or more particularly the Committee on Military Affairs. Certainly an investigation and survey should be made by the Chief of Engineers of the War Department, which would not call for the useless and wholly inexcusable and unjustifiable expenditure of $25,000. That is the gist of the whole matter. That is the only thing we have to consider this afternoon.

We are not voting on whether we are in favor of irrigation or against irrigation. May I say to my good friends from the far West that the old Fourteenth District of Missouri, which I once had the honor to represent, and which is now ably represented by my good friend and colleague, the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. ZIMMERMAN, spent over $53,000,000 of their own money in draining counties in southeast Missouri and moved more dirt than was moved in the excavation on the Panama Canal.

Mr. Chairman, in recent years thousands of homes have been deserted not only in my State of Missouri but in every other Mississippi Valley State. You Representatives from the States of Minnesota, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Tennessee, Arkansas, and Louisiana, as well as the States to the east of us, Indiana and Ohio, even as far as New England, know that in recent years, because of high taxes, because of surplus production, thousands upon thousands of our farmers have been forced to leave their farms. I will agree and frankly admit at least 100 families from my own district during the past year, much to my displeasure, unfortunately have been forced to go to California and Idaho. Why? Because Secretary Wallace has been spending millions upon millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money in taking good, tillable soil out of production in my State and every other Middle Western State, while Secretary Ickes has turned right around and spent hundreds upon hundreds of millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money on irrigation and reclamation projects in the far West, opening up 1,600,000 acres of new land that had never been in cultivation before. May I say to my good friends from the far West that if we will stop the illogical, silly, foolish, and destructive program of having one department of Government destroying every attempt that is made by another department, if we will stop paying farmers not to farm in the Midwest, if we will stop opening up new regions in the far West, many of the farmers of Iowa and Missouri will stay at home and not go out to Idaho, California, and Washington to bother you people and become a pest.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in the statement made by the gentleman from Missouri referring to the discussion on the bill. He stated there had been more heat than light and more wind than wisdom. I am, of course, a little bit curious to know to which side of the discussion his remarks were addressed.

There does seem to be considerable confusion and lack of investigation on the part of the opponents of the measure, and for the information of the opposition, the gentlemen who spoke on the bill, I am going to read a few lines from the report and a paragraph from the bill.

In the letter of the Secretary of the Interior under date of February 11, 1937, we find this statement:

> This bill has been submitted to the Bureau of the Budget, which advises that the proposed legislation, insofar as it pertains to the investigations in connection with the development of the Cabinet Gorge project, would not be in conflict with the program of the President, but would be in conflict therewith insofar as it pertains to further investigations in connection with the reclamation project for the Rathdrum Prairie area.
>
> In view of the above, I recommend enactment of the bill with the following amendments.
> HAROLD L. ICKES,
> Secretary of the Interior.

I think that definitely sets at rest the contention that this bill does not have the approval of the Department of the Interior.

As to where the money is going to come from, I am going to read to the opponents of this bill the second section, as follows:

> There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the reclamation fund, the sum of $25,000.

Now, get the inference there, and get that statement, "any money in the reclamation fund." We all know, if we know anything about the provisions of the law under which the reclamation fund was created, the money in this fund is accumulated from the sale of public lands in the Western States, from oil royalties, coal royalties, and so forth, and put into a fund to develop the area where the money is raised by the sale of these resources. It does not come out of the Treasury. This is not an authorization to take money out of the Treasury but simply from the reclamation fund.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. I should like to ask my colleague if I understood him correctly to say that there is money available now for this purpose in the reclamation fund?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I understand there is money available in the reclamation fund.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CULKIN. Does not the gentleman understand that in the last session there was $4,000,000 remaining in this reclamation fund, and that amount was earmarked for a sum of $50,000,000? How can the gentleman then say there is money in the reclamation fund, if I am correct as to that information?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. From my discussion with the Bureau of Reclamation I understand there is some money available, and I understand there is money coming into the reclamation fund from time to time. If the money is not available, then there will be no authorization.

Mr. CULKIN. Did the gentleman read the text of the last bill appropriating money for reclamation? It earmarked all that money for approximately $50,000,000 worth of irrigation. Therefore there can be no money available if my understanding of the matter is correct.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Then, if the gentleman is correct in that statement, he has done a lot of talking about nothing, because there is no money to appropriate.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, may I say to the gentleman I do not think that remark rises to the height of parliamentary discussion. The gentleman may think it is funny, but I think it is clowning. I will say that, and that is the way I feel about it.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I may say in answer to the gentleman he has made a definite statement on this floor that a remark was idiotic. I am going to say this to the gentleman, as between the idiocy of the policy of the opponents of the bill and the idiocy of the Committee on Reclamation, I will leave that verdict to posterity.

Mr. CULKIN. Prosperity or posterity?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Both. [Laughter.]

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE. The income from the reclamation fund this year, if we do not pass a moratorium bill again to extend the time of payment, ought to be somewhere between $6,000,000 and $7,000,000 from all sources.

Mr. CULKIN. May I state to the gentleman I have just conferred with the distinguished ranking Member——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho has the floor.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I have yielded to the gentleman from New York, but the gentleman from Oregon is giving some valuable information and I should like to have it in the RECORD.

Mr. PIERCE. This information came from Mr. Page himself, when he was visiting in Oregon last summer.

Mr. CULKIN. I understand from the ranking minority member on the committee that what I said a moment ago is correct, that these sums, to some $50,000,000——

Mr. TABER. It is a good deal more than that.

Mr. CULKIN. A good deal more than that—$200,000,000, were earmarked for irrigation, and at that time there was only $4,000,000 remaining, if I am correct.

Mr. TABER. Something like that.

Mr. CULKIN. Approximately $4,000,000 in the reclamation fund. Therefore, you are $196,000,000 shy. Mr. Page is off that much.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE. There has been collected a large sum of money from the various sources, as provided in the act, for the reclamation of the West, and this money was collected out of lands sold and from the products of the West.

Mr. CULKIN. I understand that.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I must refuse to yield further.

Mr. Chairman, a lot has been said about what is intended under this bill. This is a bill to investigate one of the great power sites or one of the great potential power sites in the West. It is in one of the large undeveloped sections of the United States. We have out there, owned by the Federal Government, one of our greatest stands of Government timber. This timber, to be utilized, must be manufactured. We must manufacture our pulp, wood fiber, lumber, and then we have tributary to this site and very convenient to it one of the great silver-lead mining fields in the country—the Coeur d'Alenes—and they use a vast amount of power in the reduction of zinc by an electrolytic process.

What we desire to do here is to investigate the markets concerned and the feasibility and practicability of this project.

I may say to my friends from the Prairie States, including the great States of Iowa and Nebraska, who are opposing this bill, that they are concerned with markets, and by this development we will build up a market for them. If they would go into the great mining camp of Wallace, they would see the large amount of bacon and corn products coming in, not by carloads but by trainloads, with solid car after car of packing-house and corn products. Our country is their market, and if they had an ounce of gumption they would be here working with us to develop new communities and new markets for their products.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be read for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized: (a) To conduct surveys and investigations in order to determine the feasibility and economic usefulness of the development of a hydroelectric power project at the Cabinet Gorge site on the Clark Fork of the Columbia River (near the Montana-Idaho boundary line) and a reclamation project embracing the Rathdrum Prairie area in Kootenai and Bonner Counties, Idaho, and (b), if such development is determined to be feasible and economically useful, to prepare cost estimates and designs for the construction of a dam at such site and such additional or incidental facilities as are necessary to carry out such development.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, after the parenthesis, strike out the remainder of the line and all of line 9 and the word "Idaho" in line 1, page 2, and insert "for irrigation pumping or other uses."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

It is perfectly apparent this is a reclamation bill, if we put in the measure that it is for irrigation pumping and other purposes. I do not believe we ought to put in this sort of thing in view of the condition of the country today. I do not believe we should go ahead with reclamation projects any further, and I hope the committee amendment will not be adopted.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOTT: Page 1, line 3, strike out the word "Interior" and insert the word "War"; page 1, line 4, strike out "surveys and investigations" and insert "preliminary examination"; page 2, line 1, after the word "for", insert "navigation, flood control."

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, it has been suggested that there has been a good deal of futile debate on this bill. I think there has been a good deal of unfortunate debate also. Some of it has been in the nature of acrimonious debate. Some of the tirades we have listened to today have had hardly the dignity of stump speeches.

It has been charged, for example, that the minority here is against irrigation and reclamation and power development. This certainly is not true. The minority has supported all of these projects. The record shows that. What it is that prompts gentlemen to make such ridiculous assertions is beyond my comprehension.

Personally, I have voted for every reclamation project, every irrigation project, every flood control and every hydroelectric power project since I have been in Congress, and I intend to continue doing so as long as the projects are meritorious and as long as the legislation proposing them is proper. There would be nothing that would please me more than to have my colleague from Idaho secure a proper survey for his proposed hydroelectric project. I am willing to take his own word for it, without further testimony from anyone, that he has a meritorious power project, and I think he is entitled to have a survey of it and to receive a report from experts making the survey.

But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Idaho is not asking for a survey in the proper manner, by the proper procedure, or from the proper authority.

I do not object to the gentleman's having a survey. What I do object to is bringing bills like this in here which undertake to give jurisdiction to a wrong authority. No one can read this bill without being convinced that irrigation and reclamation form no part of it whatever. The Secretary of the Interior, in his report on the bill to the committee, said that he would not recommend a survey or an investigation of the irrigation and the reclamation feature of it. And he sent to the committee an amendment, which the committee and the gentleman himself accepted and adopted, eliminating irrigation and reclamation from the bill. He recommended an investigation of a hydroelectric power project, and nothing else. It is true that the words "for irrigation, pumping, and other uses" are in the bill, but that would be an incident to any hydroelectric power development in any arid or semiarid country.

So there can be no doubt either about what the gentleman from Idaho wants or what the bill provides. It provides for a survey to determine the feasibility of a hydroelectric power development on the Clark River, and for nothing else. That is all the gentleman wants and that is all he has contended he wants.

That being the case, the proper thing to do is to amend the bill in the way I have suggested.

Instead of having a survey made by the Interior Department, as the bill now provides, authorization should be given to the War Department to make the usual preliminary examination. That is the usual, orderly procedure to obtain a survey of any power project. In order to bring it properly under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, it is necessary, of course, to include in addition to hydroelectric-power development navigation or flood control. That is always included in every power project. So I have included that in addition to the other provision for power purposes.

If this bill is amended as I have suggested, my colleague from Idaho will get everything that he wants. He will get the regular and thorough preliminary examination by experts in the War Department who have made every examination and survey for Federal hydroelectric-power projects to date, including the Grand Coulee, the Bonneville Dam, Boulder Dam, and every other power project now being constructed or operated.

The amendment I have suggested also strikes out section 2, which authorizes an appropriation of $25,000 from the reclamation fund for the purpose of a preliminary examination. The reason for this is that if the survey is made by the War Department, no money needs to be either authorized or appropriated. The War Department has a fund for that purpose, and a simple authorization for the War Department to make the usual preliminary survey is all that is necessary. The War Department will send its experts out there and make the examination. They will make their report to the Board of Army Engineers. If the Board approves it, the War Department will then submit it to Congress. That is all my colleague can possibly want, and by this amendment he will get it without the expenditure of any money. Furthermore the survey will be made by a department which has the authority and jurisdiction to make it, and which also has engineers qualified for that work. I hope the amendment that I suggest may be adopted.

It is possible, of course, that the amendment may not be germane to this bill as it is drawn. In that case the gentleman should withdraw his bill and redraft it in the way every other hydroelectric power survey bill has been drawn. If he will do that and can get a favorable report from the Army engineers, I want to tell my colleague from Idaho that I shall then be happy to vote for any appropriation necessary to carry out the construction of the project, as recommended by the engineers. If he is not willing to do that and insists upon having this survey made by the Interior Department, which has no proper jurisdiction and which must hire civilian engineers and pay them out of the reclamation fund, then I must regretfully vote against the kind of an authorization he asks for in this bill.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oregon refers to a provision in his amendment to strike out section 2. Was that provision submitted in writing?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk did not report it because the Clerk has not yet read section 2.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Then that is not before the House. I make the point of order that the Bureau of Reclamation, the Department of the Interior, has the authority to make this investigation, and I make the further point of order that if his amendment to transfer to the War Department is passed, it will prevent the use of money from the reclamation fund for the purpose for which the bill is offered, and for that reason that the amendment is out of order.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair directs the attention of the gentleman from Idaho to the fact that he has not presented any ground where the point of order would hold.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. It is my understanding that the amendment must be submitted in writing. I made the parliamentary inquiry as to whether the proposal to strike out was in writing and, as I understood, was informed it was not. So that it is not now before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment was submitted in writing.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I make the point of order that it is not germane.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I make the point of order that the point of order comes too late. The gentleman had already debated the measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho reserved the point of order. In regard to the point of order made by the gentleman from Idaho, the Chair will state that the amendment as submitted on line 1, page 2, to insert the words "navigation and flood control", is not germane, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, before we go any further, what was the ruling of the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustained the point of order, as it was not germane to the bill. That has been decided by the Chair. There is no amendment before the House at this time. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I do not yet understand. A moment ago, if I understood him correctly, the Chair stated that it was perfectly germane and that he overruled the point of order. That is what I understood the Chair to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that it was not germane. That was very plain, as far as the Chair is concerned.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the reclamation fund, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOTT. I stated a moment ago that I rose for a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair asked if I would defer it for a moment, and then before anything was done the gentleman from Idaho moved that the Committee rise. I should like to state the parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may state it.

Mr. MOTT. Section 2 of the bill has now been read. My amendment was partly to section 1 and partly to section 2. I think I could offer the amendment after the reading of section 2 as well as after the reading of section 1, as far as that is concerned. If I understand the ruling of the Chair correctly, the Chair sustained the point of order to my amendment, because the words "flood control" were included in the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct; flood control and navigation.

Mr. MOTT. Now, if that is the case, then I wish to offer this as an amendment to section 2, striking out the words which the Chair has held to be not germane, so that this amendment may be voted upon. I think I have the right to offer this amendment, with the objectionable words stricken out, to section 2 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. MOTT. In reporting the amendment I should like the objectionable words stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOTT: On page 2, beginning in line 7, strike out all of section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CULLEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 114, directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 69, noes 47.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 204, nays 137, not voting 89, as follows:

There was no objection.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

THE LATE ALBERT CLINTON WILLFORD

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I regret to announce that the Iowa delegation has just received the very sad news of the death of our former colleague, Bert Willford, a former Representative from the Third Iowa District. Many of you will remember him, and those of you who do remember him will share with us the sorrow that we feel. He was a warmhearted, sincere man, a loyal friend, one who loved life. During several weeks he has struggled bravely against the disease that finally cost him his life.

The Iowa delegation feels the greatest sympathy for his family, to whom he was a loving father and a kind and devoted husband.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SMITH of Virginia (at the request of Mr. BLAND), for today, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. ZIMMERMAN (at the request of Mr. WILLIAMS), indefinitely, on account of official business..

To Mr. RUTHERFORD, for Thursday, on account of business.

DECISIONS OF THE SUPREME COURT

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is entitled to be recognized for 10 minutes. Does the gentleman desire to use the time?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request. Because it is so late this evening, I ask unanimous consent that the 10 minutes given me now may go over until tomorrow morning.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, several Members have asked to be recognized to speak tomorrow, but I have told each and every one of them that I should appreciate his deferring his requests to a later date, as we want to finish the coal bill. The committee of which the gentleman is a member is going to have a bill up for consideration probably tomorrow afternoon, but certainly on Friday.

Mr. FISH. I will not insist. I will take the time now.

Mr. Speaker, I listened last night with much interest to the speech of the President of the United States over the radio. It was a masterpiece of propaganda to the people back home. He stressed his opposition to the 5-to-4 decisions, which almost everyone is against, including, I imagine, the Justices of the Supreme Court. He also evaded like the plague any reference to the N. R. A. decision, which was a unanimous decision of that Court, including the liberals and conservatives and the young and the older members.

I have always believed that the motive behind the President in his attacks upon the Supreme Court was the failure to pass the N. R. A. His speech last night was an indictment of the Justices of that Court, and not an indictment as ordained by the Constitution, and a trial in the Senate, but an indictment without hearing against the Justices over the radio and in the press holding them up as being unfit, incompetent, and unqualified to serve. It was not a very sportsmanlike proposition, as they cannot answer back, and was a disservice to representative and constitutional form of government by publicly undermining the faith of the American people in our judiciary.

Mr. Speaker, I have not asked for this time to defend the members of the Supreme Court, as they need no defense, but to offer a proposal. The President said last night that his was the only proposition that could go through in a limited time. I propose to submit a novel plan. It has no precedent whatever, but there is no precedent I know of that can be used against it. Yesterday I offered a bill, H. R. 5485, which reads as follows:

No act of Congress shall be invalidated by the Supreme Court of the United States except by a decision of two-thirds of the Justices.

This does not require a constitutional amendment. It would require simply a mere act of the Congress, which would become the law of the land when signed by the President of the United States. I sincerely believe the Supreme Court Justices themselves would be glad to be relieved of the responsibility for these 5-to-4 decisions or, if the President's plan goes through, the 8-to-7 decisions, a duty that even Justice Marshall rebelled against as being an awful responsibility to hold acts of Congress unconstitutional by 5-to-4 decisions.

As I said, there are no precedents either way. Literally there are none, but you may by inference say there are precedents in favor of it, because in order for the Congress to perform highly important acts it is written into the Constitution we must do it by a two-thirds vote. In order to override the President's veto or impeach a judge we have to do so by a two-thirds vote. To initiate a constitutional amendment a two-thirds vote is also required.

I submit my bill is sound and logical. It could be put through both Houses in a week's time if the majority wants to do it and thereby do away with what the President was speaking about last night—the unfortunate 5-to-4 decisions.

Sometimes the simplest, straightest, and shortest methods to accomplish the results desired are overlooked for devious and complicated plans of procedure.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman said that there was no constitutional question involved in his proposal which would require a two-thirds vote of the Court. May I ask would there be a constitutional question involved if his bill provided that in order to hold unconstitutional an act of Congress a unanimous opinion of the Court would be necessary?

Mr. FISH. I understand what the gentleman is aiming at. I do not believe any Congress would pass such a bill, as it is beyond the limits of reasonable action. However, I do not believe the Court would ever raise the constitutional question on an act of Congress requiring a two-thirds vote.

I believe it would respect the will of Congress, at least to that extent, and I think the Justices would welcome it, because it would do away with unpopularity that comes from 5-to-4 decisions and relieve them of a great responsibility.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman states the Court would not do that. The gentleman states the Supreme Court Judges are incapable of doing anything contrary to the Constitution. If in their judgment this was unconstitutional, they would be obliged to say so, would they not?

Mr. FISH. This law would be the law of the land if signed by the President, and it would not go before the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court could possibly ignore it, but I do not think it would want to ignore it, because it would be the law of the land.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does the gentleman say the Supreme Court would have discretion to ignore it if in their judgment it was unconstitutional? In other words, that the Supreme Court has the right to determine policies?

Mr. FISH. I do not know of any way this bill would come before the Supreme Court. There is no way of bringing it before the Supreme Court. How could you get anybody to bring it before that Court?

Mr. BOILEAU. An attorney on a question of rehearing before the Court could bring the question before the Court and say that it is unconstitutional.

Mr. FISH. I cannot guarantee what the Court would or would not do. All I can say is I believe we have the power to do this and that it is sound and logical and that the Court itself would welcome the measure. If we should go to the extent of requiring a unanimous decision, that would be an entirely different matter and utterly unreasonable, and the Court would or should find a way to resist it or ignore it.

Mr. BRADLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BRADLEY. The gentleman does not happen to believe that the American people have given him this mandate to present his plan?

Mr. FISH. Who?

Mr. BRADLEY. The American people.

Mr. FISH. Did I say my plan represents the viewpoint of the American people? I think the gentleman has been dreaming. I have been discussing a particular bill; and if he wants to vote for it, all right. If he does not, no one cares. At least I do not.

Mr. MOTT. Does the gentleman think we are ever going to have an opportunity to vote on the bill?

Mr. FISH. Not for the present; but I am hoping the majority side may later on find this is a rather complicated and dangerous question, and that the President's plan has powerful opposition from the people back home and within the ranks of the Democratic Party.

They might find that this proposal of mine is the easier way out of the dilemma, and that they can do it by an act of Congress and within a few weeks' time. That is why I am speaking here. I want to stimulate consideration of the status of the Court and not to soft pedal on any plan to do away with the unsatisfactory 5-to-4 decisions.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. LUDLOW. The gentleman is a good lawyer and a student of public affairs. Would not the Supreme Court have the right on its own initiative to institute this rule of which the gentleman is speaking?

Mr. FISH. I believe the gentleman is absolutely right.

The gentleman has asked whether the Court would have the right to act in this matter on its own initiative. Of course it would have such right. The Supreme Court determined to invalidate acts of Congress originally by a majority vote, but there was no precedent for that, and there was no particular reason for it any more than having it done by a two-thirds vote. The Justices could do that of their own accord tomorrow morning and do it within the Constitution.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. LUDLOW. I was impelled to ask that question by the gentleman's observation that he thought the Court would welcome such a change. It was my opinion that the Court on its own initiative could institute this change.

Mr. FISH. I believe that the Justices would welcome an expression from the Congress, and I submit in all sincerity that if Congress passed such a bill and it was made the law of the land, the Supreme Court would adhere to it and would adhere to it voluntarily. The Justices could do it of their own accord. But you know the Justices are not apt to change a majority rule of their own accord, particularly when they are under attack.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. FISH. I know where the gentleman stands on the Supreme Court question, but that question is not under consideration here.

The President, in order to avoid submitting constitutional amendments, seeks to pack the Supreme Court, destroy its independence, and make it subservient to his will. His plan would destroy the confidence and respect of the American people in the judiciary, and on a secret ballot would not muster one-third of the Democratic Members of Congress. It is a radical and revolutionary proposal, setting up partisan and prejudiced umpires in place of nonpartisan, impartial, and independent Justices, and thereby make the Court a "rubber stamp" to register the edicts of the Chief Executive.

In conclusion, the enactment of the bill I have introduced would not impair our representative and constitutional form of government or undermine our three separate and independent departments of government. By a simple act of Congress, passed by a majority vote and signed by the President, which would then become the law of the land and be so construed as binding on the Supreme Court, no act of Congress could be held unconstitutional except by a decision of two-thirds of the Justices of the Supreme Court.

I believe the bill I introduced today is a conservative proposal and a way out of the disastrous dilemma with which the Congress is confronted.

My bill would do away with the unpopular 5-to-4 decisions that do so much to undermine the confidence of the people in the authority of the Court. If enacted, it would tend to uphold the dignity and prestige of the Court with the American people.

The Congress has the right to override a veto of the President by a two-thirds vote and to initiate a constitutional amendment by a two-thirds vote. Why would it not be sound, proper, and logical to require a two-thirds vote of the Supreme Court to invalidate acts of Congress, thus maintaining the checks and balances of our American system without undermining the judiciary or destroying our representative and constitutional form of government?

Any objections that might be raised as to the power of Congress to legislate regarding the prerogatives of the Supreme Court can find ample precedents from the days of Jefferson, when the Court was forbidden to sit for a year, and numerous increases in the number of Justices, including the recent voluntary retirement bill on full pay for the Justices over 70. The Congress is invested with the power to legislate, and I do not believe, if my bill is enacted into law, it would be disregarded by the Supreme Court Justices or held unconstitutional, or that they would even be opposed to such a measure.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXHIBITION AT THE GREATER TEXAS AND PAN AMERICAN EXPOSITION

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 221, to permit articles imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the Greater Texas and Pan American Exposition, Dallas, Tex., to be admitted without payment of tariff, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is the usual resolution with respect to exhibits that come in from abroad?

Mr. SANDERS. It is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

House Joint Resolution 221

Resolved, etc., That all articles which shall be imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the international exposition to be held at Dallas, Tex., beginning in June 1937, by the Greater Texas and Pan American Exposition, a corporation, or for use in constructing, installing, or maintaining foreign buildings or exhibits at the said exhibition, upon which articles there shall be a tariff or customs duty, shall be admitted without payment of such tariff, customs duty, fees, or charges under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during or within 3 months after the close of the said exposition to sell within the area of the exposition any articles provided for herein, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles, when withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, shall be subject to the duties, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of their withdrawal; and on such articles which shall have suffered diminution or deterioration from incidental handling or exposure, the duties, if payable, shall be assessed according to the appraised value at the time of withdrawal from entry hereunder for consumption or entry under the general tariff law: Provided further, That imported articles provided for herein shall not be subject to any marking requirements of the general tariff laws, except when such articles are withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States in which case they shall not be released from customs custody until properly marked, but no additional duty shall be assessed because such articles were not sufficiently marked when imported into the United States: Provided further, That at any time during or within 3 months after the close of the exposition, any article entered hereunder may be abandoned to the Government or destroyed under customs supervision, whereupon any duties on such article shall be remitted: Provided further, That articles which have been admitted without payment of duty for exhibition under any tariff law and which have remained in continuous customs custody or under a customs exhibition bond and imported articles in bonded warehouses under the general tariff law may be accorded the privilege of transfer to and entry for exhibition at the said exposition under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: And provided further, That the Greater Texas and Pan American Exposition shall be deemed, for customs purposes only, to be the sole consignee of all merchandise imported under the provisions of this act, and that the actual and necessary customs charges for labor, services, and other expenses in connection with the entry, examination, appraisement, release, or custody, together with the necessary charges for salaries of customs officers and employees in connection with the supervision, custody of, and accounting for, articles imported under the provisions of this act, shall be reimbursed by the Greater Texas and Pan American Exposition to the Government of the United States under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and that receipts from such reimbursements shall be deposited as refunds to the appropriation from which paid, in the manner provided for in section 524, Tariff Act of 1930.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 5. An act to prevent the adulteration, misbranding, and false advertisement of food, drugs, devices, and cosmetics in interstate, foreign, and other commerce subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, for the purposes of safeguarding the public health, preventing deceit upon the purchasing public, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 936. An act to regulate the sales of goods in the District of Columbia.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, March 11, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

925. By Mr. ASHBROOK: Petition of William J. Sweeney and 41 other postal employees of Redbank, N. J., urging passage of House bill 167 and legislation extending retirement benefits to widows of postal employees; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

926. Also, petition of 13 citizens of Shelby, Ohio, protesting against the passage of any law that would disturb or abridge the religious rights and privileges of our people; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

927. By Mr. CARTER: Communication of the International Association of Machinists, Lodge No. 1117, Alameda, Calif., endorsing President Roosevelt's proposed judiciary reform plan; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

928. Also, Assembly Joint Resolution No. 3 of the State of California, memorializing Congress to make provision for widows of retired Federal civil-service employees; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

929. By Mr. COFFEE of Washington: Petition of the Seattle Chapter, National Aeronautic Association, petitioning Congress to amend its rules of procedure so as to provide for standing committees on civil aeronautics in both the Senate and the House; to the Committee on Rules.

930. Also, petition of the Seattle Chapter, National Aeronautic Association, endorsing the pending congressional bill calling for the assignment of two Civilian Conservation Corps camps to each naval district in the United States; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

931. Also, petition of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen of the United States, expressing support and categorical approval of the President's judiciary reform proposal, calling attention to the mandate of the electorate in November for the continuation and expansion of the New Deal, and urging each Member of Congress to vote therefor; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

932. By Mr. CURLEY: Resolution of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, representing a membership of 75,000, endorsing the President's proposal for reorganization of the judiciary; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

933. Also, petition of the New York State Flood Control Commission, opposing any Federal legislation designed to change the principles and policies of the 1936 Federal Flood Control Act, which change might in any way retard or delay expeditious action in prosecution of presently authorized Federal flood-control projects in New York State; to the Committee on Flood Control.

934. By Mr. HART: Petition of the Hudson County Newspaper Guild, urging support for President Roosevelt's New Deal program, and especially for the proposals regarding the judiciary, contained in his message of February 5; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

935. Also, petition of the Atlantic County Bar Association, expressing its disapproval of the President's proposals regarding the United States Supreme Court; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

936. By Mr. HOOK: Resolution of the Escanaba Chamber of Commerce, Escanaba, Mich., urging the continuation of the tax on foreign copper; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

937. Also, resolution adopted by the Common Council of the city of Hancock, Houghton County, Mich., urging the ratification of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway Treaty, which would promote commerce and stimulate industry and employment in the Great Lakes Basin and the entire Middle and Northwest; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

938. By Mr. KRAMER: Resolution of the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, pertaining to legislation to enact such legislation as may be necessary to abolish Federal gasoline sales tax, etc.; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

939. Also, resolution of the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California, pertaining to legislation to provide annuities for widows of retired Federal civil-service employees, etc.; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

940. By Mr. MAPES: Petition of 111 residents of the Fifth District of Michigan, protesting against the possibility of legislation suppressing the freedom of religious worship, free speech, and a free press; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

941. By Mr. LORD: Memorial of the Senate of the State of New York, respectfully urging the Congress of the United States of America to amend the War Risk Insurance Act so as to provide that the amounts payable for insurance to sailors for World War injuries be paid to soldiers and marines for like injuries; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

942. Also, petition of H. H. Woodburn and 14 residents of Binghamton, N. Y., protesting against the President's bill or any substitutes permitting the executive branch of the Government to control or subordinate the judicial or the legislative powers established under the Constitution, believing this bill would give to the President the power to remake the Supreme Court and to pack it with men to interpret the Constitution as he wishes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

943. Also, petition of Mabel A. Martin, M. D., and seven residents of Binghamton, N. Y., protesting against the President's bill, or any substitutes, permitting the executive branch of the Government to control or subordinate the judicial or the legislative powers established under the Constitution; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

944. Also, petition of George W. Young and 52 residents of Union, N. Y., opposing the President's bill, or any substitutes, permitting the executive branch of the Government to control or subordinate the judicial or legislative powers established under the Constitution, believing it would give the President power to remake the Supreme Court and to pack it with men to interpret the Constitution as he wishes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

945. Also, petition of Rev. Grant Robinson and 19 residents of Walton, N. Y., protesting against the President's bill, or any substitutes, permitting the executive branch of the Government to control or subordinate the judicial or the legislative powers established under the Constitution; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

946. By Mr. MEAD: Petition of the New York State Flood Control Commission, endorsing, with the view of safeguarding the lives, property, and welfare of the people of New York State from disastrous floods, the principles and policies of the 1936 Flood Control Act; to the Committee on Flood Control.

947. By Mr. MOTT: House Joint Memorial No. 13 of the Thirty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, petitioning the Congress of the United States to enact the Harrison-Black-Fletcher bill for Federal aid to education into law at an early date; to the Committee on Education.

948. Also, House Joint Memorial No. 1 of the Thirty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, petitioning the Congress of the United States to give a fair, full, and impartial hearing and consideration of the Townsend national-recovery plan, with a view to its enactment into law after the Members of Congress shall have settled the details of this legislation; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

949. Also, six petitions signed by citizens of the State of Oregon, urging that the Congress pass no law that would disturb or abridge the religious rights and privileges of all our people; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

950. By Mr. RICH: Petition of citizens of Williamsport, Pa., protesting against the President's plan to reorganize the judiciary; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

951. Also, petition of Colonel Hugh White Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of Lock Haven, Pa., protesting against the President's plan to change the judiciary; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

952. Also, petition of citizens of Williamsport, Pa., protesting against the President's plan to reorganize the judiciary; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

953. By Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey: Letter from Mrs. George A. Angle, regent, Peggy Warne Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, stating that 57 members of the chapter are opposed to the proposed increase in the membership of the Supreme Court; and a letter from Mrs. Charles

L. Hall, of Clinton, N. J., stating that the Woman's Republican Club of Clinton, N. J., desires to express its wishes that the Supreme Court be kept independent of the other departments of the Government, and also stating that the club is not in favor of the President's reorganization plan; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

954. Also, resolution of the Woman's Club of Hackettstown, N. J., opposing the plan to increase the number of members of the Supreme Court and any bill submitted to Congress or the Senate the effect of which would be to bring about such a plan, and likewise opposing any bill that would force any of the present or future members of the Supreme Court to retire at the age of 70; and a resolution adopted by the Woman's Club of Tenafly, N. J., opposing the plan to increase the number of members of the Supreme Court; and a resolution of the Warren County Association of the Patriotic Order Sons of America, Stewartsville, N. J., opposing the enlarging of the Supreme Court of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

955. Also, petition signed by 42 residents of Ridgewood, N. J., protesting against the President's bill, or any substitutes, permitting the executive branch of the Government to control or subordinate the judicial or the legislative powers established under the Constitution; and a resolution adopted by the Teaneck Woman's Republican Club, Teaneck, N. J., vigorously opposing President Roosevelt's projected plans for reorganizing the Supreme Court; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

957. Also, petition of four citizens of Columbia, Tenn., requesting that Congress pass no law that would disturb or abridge the religious rights and privileges of all our people; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

958. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Gallipolis (Ohio) Rotary Club, concerning flood control for the Ohio Basin; to the Committee on Flood Control.

959. Also, petition of the Iron City Lodge, No. 60, Brotherhood Railway Carmen of America, Birmingham, Ala., endorsing the President's proposed judiciary reform; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE

THURSDAY, MARCH 11, 1937

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in Heaven, who knowest our downsittings and our uprisings, who understandest our thoughts long before: grant to each one of us the temper of mind that rises up in the morning "to do Thy will, O God", and which says at eventide, "Father, into Thy hands I commend my spirit"; so shall our prayers become life in harmony with Thine.

May the deliberations of this day reflect the guidance of Thy holy Spirit, and while we beseech Thee to undo whatever we have done amiss, to repair the places we have laid waste, and to heal the hearts that we have wounded, do Thou, in Thy mercy, take up the mistakes of all our yesterdays into the light of Thy forgiveness and, transfiguring them there, weave them into Thy divine mosaic, that we may at length discover that, even against our will, we are fellow laborers with Thee. In our Savior's name we ask it. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Tuesday, March 9, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

NOTICE OF ADDRESS BY SENATOR NORRIS

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to announce that tomorrow, as soon as I can obtain recognition from the Chair, I shall address the Senate upon the subject of judicial amendment of the Constitution and government by injunction.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF UNOBJECTED BILLS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, at the conclusion of the morning business, the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LANDS FOR KANOSH BAND OF PAIUTE INDIANS, UTAH

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to reserve certain lands in the State of Utah for the Kanosh Band of Paiute Indians, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

LANDS FOR KOOSHAREM BAND OF PAIUTE INDIANS, UTAH

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to reserve certain lands in the State of Utah for the Koosharem Band of Paiute Indians, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REPORT OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a joint letter from the Chairman and Secretary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the Corporation, covering its operations for the fourth quarter of 1936, and for the period from its organization on February 2, 1932, to December 31, 1936, inclusive, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service:

To the President and Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the Senators and Representatives from this State:

On January 13, 1937, the California Legislature adopted the following:

Assembly Joint Resolution 3, relative to memorializing Congress to make provision for widows of retired Federal civil-service employees

Whereas there are many widows of retired Federal civil-service employees living in the State of California, some of whom are now obliged to live in State and county institutions for the poor, and many retired Federal civil-service employees receiving annuities are now living in California who have little or no savings and who will leave dependent widows surviving them; and

Whereas the civil service retirement and disability fund is made up of contributions of employees to the amount of 3½ percent of the annual salary received by each employee in addition to an annual appropriation by Congress, and said sums are placed on deposit and bear interest, and the present balance in the fund exceeds $300,000,000; and

Whereas it is estimated that there are about 5,000 widows of retired Federal civil-service employees living in the United States, and an annuity of $50 a month to each could readily be met as an obligation of the civil service retirement and disability fund, in that such widows do not outlive their husbands for an average period of more than 2½ to 5 years; and

Whereas under existing law on the death of a retired Federal civil-service employee any credit balance remaining to his account is returned to his estate, and such sum may be insufficient to support the widow and may be lost or dissipated by the widow, with the result that such widow will be the object of charity: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Congress be hereby memorialized to enact legislation to provide annuities for widows of retired Federal civil-service employees (including present living widows of such retired employees), who were married to the retired Federal employee for a period of at least 10 years prior to the death of said employee, at the rate of $50 a month under the operation of the civil service retirement and disability fund, to continue until the death or remarriage of the widow, such annuity, if granted, to be in place of payment in the future of the credit balance, if any, of the deceased employee to his estate; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly be hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the Senators and Representatives from this State.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Memorial to the Congress of the United States, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Director of the Budget, requesting the necessary appropriation for the continued operation of the dry-land demonstration stations at Moccasin and Huntley, Mont.

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States, the Honorable Secretary of Agriculture, and the Honorable Director of the Budget:

Your memorialists, the members of the Twenty-fifth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana (the senate and house concurring), respectively represent:

That whereas the dry-land demonstration stations located at Huntley and Moccasin, Mont., have been in operation for many years, and at each of said stations invaluable demonstrations and experimental work has been carried on for the benefit of those engaged in farming the semiarid lands in Montana, and such stations have proved to be of great assistance to many people of Montana and elsewhere; and

Whereas the said demonstration stations have been and are being operated on a cooperative plan with the State of Montana, of which the State of Montana matches funds appropriated by the United States for said stations; that the money appropriated by the United States for both of said stations amounts to the sum of $8,000 annually, and all of the national appropriation is expended for salaries; and

Whereas it has come to the attention of your memorialists that the current Budget prepared by the Director of the Budget omits and eliminates the appropriation for the continued operation of the above said stations in Montana, which if not restored will result in the closing of the same; and

Whereas conditions in the localities served by the said stations, the great need to continue the experimental and demonstration work at said stations, to improve farming methods, and to propagate or experiment with drought-resisting grasses and grains and other forage crops, and to render assistance in the resettlement plans now being carried on by the Government of the United States makes the continued operation of the above said stations necessary and imperative; and to now close, and to anywise hamper their operation, would result in great loss to those dependent on the result of their experimental work: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the necessary appropriation for the continued operation of the aforesaid dry-land demonstration stations be provided in the proper budget therefor; and that the Secretary of Agriculture continue to operate the said stations in conjunction with the State of Montana; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each Member in Congress from Montana, to the Secretary of Agriculture, and to the Director of the Budget.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following memorial of the Legislature of the State of Utah, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Memorial to Congress of the United States requesting the Congress to submit an amendment to the Constitution of the United States giving Congress the power to regulate the hours of labor in industry

Whereas there is an urgent need to end unemployment and its subsequent train of poverty and misery in Utah and other States; and

Whereas the expense of providing for the unemployed in direct and work relief is greater than the taxpayers of the State of Utah and other States can bear; and

Whereas there is no definite solution given at present that unemployment should be solved by a more equal distribution of the profits of production: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Utah in regular session assembled, That the Congress of the United States, by urgent request, submit an amendment to the Constitution of the United States giving Congress the power to regulate the hours of labor in industry; be it further

Resolved, That the Secretary of State forward copies of this memorial to the Congress of the United States and to Utah's delegation in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Joint resolution memorializing the President and Congress of the United States to amend the Federal law so as to permit the States to tax national banks upon a fair and equitable basis, and requesting the States to join in a similar memorial

Whereas the several States are prohibited from taxing the property, income, or shares of national banks except in the precise method prescribed by Congress (sec. 5219, R. S. U. S.); and

Whereas from 1866 to 1923 the only method by which Congress authorized the States to tax national banks was to tax upon their shares, and during such period such shares were taxed by the State at the property rate upon the same basis as the property of the farmer, merchant, manufacturer, and home owner, thereby securing equality of the burden of taxation among all property owners; and

Whereas, said Federal statute provided that the rate of such tax should not exceed the rate imposed by the State upon other monied capital in the hands of individual citizens of the States invested in notes, bonds, and other evidences of debt (money and credits) coming into competition with the business of banking; and

Whereas beginning in 1921 and continuing down to the present time there have been rendered various decisions of the United States Supreme Court and other Federal and State courts construing the above limitation, the effect of which decisions has been to practically destroy the power of the States to tax the shares of national banks, it being manifestly impossible to classify such investments into those competing and those not competing with the business of national banks. It is also clearly evident that there is no similarity or relationship between shares in a national bank which have a right to share in the profits of a going business arising from the income from all the deposits in the bank as well as the capital invested on shares, and also to share in the income received from other activities of such banks and a debt evidenced by a note or bond, the income from which is limited to the interest provided therein. It is absurd to claim that for purposes of taxation such wholly different types of property should be treated precisely alike; and

Whereas, although the Federal act in form permits States to tax the net income of banks or to levy a tax measured by or according to such net income, such method is entirely and wholly unjust, inequitable, and inadequate. Because, first, when such method is used by a State it is in lieu of all other forms of taxation. Second, any such bank is entirely tax free unless it makes a net profit, whereas all other persons, owners of property, must pay a tax whether they make a profit or loss. This places the national banks in a privileged class and exempts them from paying any share of the public burden during the period when they do not make a net profit, thus shifting their share of the tax burden upon other property owners. Third, in all the States where the net-income or measured-by-net-income methods have been used, the shrinkage in taxes collected from banks have ranged from 66⅔ to 90 percent, as compared to former tax collections under the share-tax plan; and

Whereas because of the decisions of courts holding void taxes upon the shares of national banks, the whole matter of taxing banks, both National and State, has been thrown into great confusion, and many of the States have been persuaded to abandon the share method of taxing banks and have either adopted low millage rates of from 3 to 5 mills on the dollar of value of such stock, or have adopted the income tax or measured by income-tax method, with the result that in the past 10 years the total tax of national banks has been reduced from $79,376,000 in 1922 to $48,080,000 in 1932, notwithstanding the fact that during such period the total capital and surplus of such banks increased from $2,356,427,000 to $2,828,408,000, and thus, during a period when taxes have increased upon all other forms of property and for all other persons, banks have secured reductions; and

Whereas in March 1927 the Supreme Court of the United States held bank taxes in Minnesota to the amount of approximately $1,200,000 void because the rate was higher than the rate on moneys and credits, and the legislature at once established the Bank Tax Commission of Minnesota for the purpose of obtaining such an amendment to the Federal law as would permit this and other States to tax bank stock upon its value as other property is taxed; said commission has in all practicable ways endeavored to secure such amendment by enlisting the cooperation of all other States and other taxing officials, by appearing before committees of the Senate and House of Representatives of Congress of the United States, by attending national tax conference, by correspondence with tax officials of all other States, and by conferences with them and otherwise; and

Whereas through the efforts of the said commission and the tax officials of other States bills have been introduced at every session of Congress providing for the necessary amendments to said Federal act, and by reason of the lobby maintained by the American Bankers Association all efforts to obtain such legislation have been unsuccessful; however, in June 1934 the Banking and Currency Committee of the House of Representatives reported favorably upon a bill introduced by Mr. STEAGALL, chairman of said committee, which bill would grant to the States all the relief required. Said report is an unanswerable argument in favor of restoring to the States the power to tax bank shares upon an equitable basis, the same as they were taxed for nearly 60 years; and

Whereas bills identical with the so-called Steagall bill have been introduced, and Representative STEAGALL has stated he will reintroduce the so-called Steagall bill and aggressively urge its passage in the present session of the Congress of the United States, provided he is given proper support from the various States, and it is of the utmost importance that all of the States join in an effort to secure the passage thereof: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, That the Congress of the United States and the President of the United States are hereby respectfully and earnestly urged to so amend section 5219, Revised Statutes of the United States, that the States may tax the shares of national banks upon the ad-valorem basis, with no other limitation thereof except that the rate be not greater than the rate imposed upon the shares of State banks; be it further

Resolved, That all of the United States are hereby earnestly urged and requested to adopt resolutions similar to this resolution memorializing Congress and the President of the United States to pass such legislation and to cooperate with the State of Minnesota for the purpose of securing the enactment of such legislation until the same is secured; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the State of Minnesota is authorized and requested to send copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, Vice President of the United States, Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Minnesota; also to send a duly authenticated copy hereof to the presiding officer of each House of the legislature of all the States of the Union and to the chairman of the tax committees of each house thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to use Minnesota products, wherever possible, in the construction of Federal buildings in the State of Minnesota, and in all other construction work in the State of Minnesota in which the United States Government is directly or indirectly interested

Whereas the United States of America is engaging in, and about to engage in, the erection of many Federal structures in the State of Minnesota; and

Whereas in all construction work by the United States Government in Minnesota the said United States Government has issued specifications that certain building materials be used in the erection of such structures; and

Whereas in such specifications building materials from localities outside the State of Minnesota have been given preference; and

Whereas there are in this State factories and deposits making available the use of building materials in this State, which said building materials are equal, if not better, in quality to the said building materials imported into the State; and

Whereas inasmuch as these structures are being erected within the State of Minnesota it is desirable that such building materials be purchased from producers in the State of Minnesota in preference to producers in other States and localities; and

Whereas the purchasing of such materials from local producers would, to a large extent, help to alleviate the unemployment situation in Minnesota, and also to give Minnesota communities the benefit of the products of this State: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the State of Minnesota memorialize the Congress of the United States of America to provide, by appropriate legislation or otherwise, that in the erection of all structures in the State of Minnesota by the United States Government, directly or indirectly, building materials produced in the State of Minnesota shall be used and given preference, wherever possible, over such building materials from other States of the Union or other localities in the erection of such structures; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of Minnesota be instructed to send copies of this resolution to both Houses of Congress and to each Member in Congress from the State of Minnesota.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

To His Excellency the President of the United States and to the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Thirty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, in regular session assembled, respectfully request and petition as follows:

Whereas the Congress of the United States has for consideration a measure known as the Harrison-Black-Fletcher bill for Federal aid to education; and

Whereas it is recognized as a fundamental principle that a democracy such as ours is dependent for its maintenance and welfare upon the intelligent participation in governmental affairs of an electorate properly trained through adequate opportunity for education in our public schools; and

Whereas there exists among the various States of the Union wide differences in financial ability to support an adequate State public-school system; and

Whereas the Federal Government has in recent years, through its power to secure revenue from various Nation-wide sources, encroached somewhat upon the field of taxation on liquor, incomes, inheritances, gasoline, and the like, previously reserved to the individual States, thus depriving them of available sources of revenue now required for the adequate maintenance of public schools; and

Whereas the increase in educational demands has emphasized the need of direct financial aid from the Federal Government to the States for the maintenance of public schools: Be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the senate jointly concurring therein), That we do most earnestly petition and memorialize the Congress of the United States in the name of the State of Oregon to make early enactment the Harrison-Black-Fletcher bill for Federal aid to education into law; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of the resolution be forthwith transmitted to the President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., and to each member of the Oregon delegation in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled:

We the memorialists, the Thirty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, convened in regular session, respectfully represent that—

Whereas a large group of the citizens and voters of the State of Oregon have expressed their deep convictions of the merits of the Townsend recovery plan; and

Whereas these members of the Townsend Clubs, as law-abiding American citizens, feel that their rights should be respected and that they should be given a hearing before your august body; and

Whereas the Townsend national recovery plan should be fully considered because the economic depression has continued for 7 years without solution: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the senate jointly concurring therein), That the Legislature of the State of Oregon hereby does petition the Congress of the United States to give a fair, full, and impartial hearing and consideration of the Townsend national recovery plan, with a view to its enactment into law after the Members of Congress shall have settled the details of this legislation.

Resolved, That a certified copy of this joint memorial be sent forthwith to the President of the United States and the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the members of the congressional delegation from the State of Oregon.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Thirty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Whereas the effectiveness of the national-defense structure is based upon the Army, the National Guard, and Organized Reserves; and

Whereas the Organized Reserves is held in a high degree of reliance by the Government of the United States; and

Whereas the officers of the Officers' Reserve Corps attain the highest degree of military fitness through individual training, inactive duty training, and partially through active duty; and

Whereas the expense involved in maintaining a Reserve commission actually exceeds the total amount received from the Government in the form of pay and allowances for active duty; and

Whereas each Reserve officer represents a Government investment of more than $1,000, which should be conserved and promoted; and

Whereas a form of inactive duty pay would provide an incentive for the personnel of the Officers' Reserve Corps to pursue various forms of inactive duty and study to keep at a high standard the esprit, morale, efficiency, and dependability; and

Whereas there is now legislation pending in the Congress of the United States in conformity with the substance of this memorial: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Oregon (the house of representatives jointly concurring therein), That this legislative assembly petition and memorialize the Congress of the United States of America, now in session at Washington, D. C., that immediate action be taken to appropriate such sums as may be necessary to provide a suitable pay based on the rank of each Reserve officer as may be appropriate for the maintenance, efficiency, and training of the Officers' Reserve Corps and to promote enactment into law such proposed legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota, favoring the enactment of legislation to provide for the care of needy aged and blind ward Indians and the dependent children of ward Indian families, and also making an appropriation therefor, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

(See concurrent resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. FRAZIER.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted at Huntington, W. Va., by the fourth annual convention of the Ohio Valley Conservation and Flood Control Congress, favoring the making of adequate appropriations for effective flood control of the Ohio River and its tributaries, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Church Aide of the First Spiritual Alliance Church, of Portsmouth, N. H., favoring the immediate enactment of legislation to provide a referendum on war and to take the profit out of war, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Buffalo (N. Y.) Junior Chamber of Commerce, favoring consideration of the proposed plan of the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce for the settlement of war debts, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Building Owners & Managers Association of Los Angeles, Calif., protesting against the enactment of legislation providing a reduction of the hours of labor from 8 to 6 for railway employees without reduction in wages now paid for 8 hours' labor, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Lodge No. 346, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Allentown, Pa., favoring the enactment of legislation to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I present memorials signed by 10,023 citizens, which are in addition to the memorials signed by 15,000 citizens that I presented the other day. These memorials are transmitted by Mrs. A. C. Mattei, president of the California Chapter, Pro-America, of San Francisco, and remonstrate against the court proposal now pending before this body. I ask that the memorials be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reference requested by the Senator from California will be made.

Mr. HALE presented memorials, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of the State of Maine, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to enlarge the membership of the Supreme Court, or any other legislation of a similar character, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of the State of Maine, praying that no law be enacted which would disturb or abridge religious rights or liberties, or close the mails to religious publications, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COPELAND presented a letter from the Rochester (N. Y.) Chamber of Commerce, with an accompanying report of their committee on Federal taxation, favoring and recommending a decrease in Federal appropriations, a balanced Budget, and a reduction in appropriations for work relief, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the New York City Housing Authority, favoring the enactment of the so-called Wagner low-cost housing bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Board of the Village of Webster, and Local Unions Nos. 33 and 464, Bridge, Structural, and Ornamental Iron Workers, of Rochester, in the State of New York, favoring the continuation of the Public Works Administration, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Schenectady (N. Y.) Junior Chamber of Commerce, favoring consideration of the plan proposed by the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce for the settlement of war debts, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of several citizens of Schenectady, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to repeal the long-and-short haul clause of the Interstate Commerce Act, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Division No. 87, of Salamanca, and Division No. 83, of Hornell, both of the Order of Benefit Association of Railway Employees, in the State of New York, favoring the enactment of legislation to repeal the long-and-short haul clause of the Interstate Commerce Act, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Sunnyside Branch, American League Against War and Fascism, of Woodside, N. Y., protesting against the passage of the bill (S. 25) to prevent profiteering in time of war and to equalize the burdens of war and thus provide for the national defense, and promote peace, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FRAZIER presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to provide for the care of needy aged and blind ward Indians and the dependent children of ward Indian families

Whereas there are several hundred ward Indians eligible to receive old-age and blind assistance and several hundred ward Indian children eligible to receive aid to dependent children in the State of North Dakota; and

Whereas because of their status as residents of Indian reservations they and their property are not subject to taxation by the State or county in which they reside; and

Whereas because of the heavy burden placed upon these counties in making payments of old-age and blind assistance and dependent children aid to qualified taxpaying residents, the counties are under excessive financial strain; and

Whereas it is an undue hardship upon the said State and counties to provide care for these ward Indians because of the facts above stated: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the members of the Twenty-fifth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota, respectfully memorialize

Congress to provide Federal funds for the care and relief of these above referred to needy aged and blind ward Indians and the dependent children of ward Indian families; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the United States Senate and the United States House of Representatives and to each of the Senators and Representatives of the State of North Dakota in the Congress of the United States.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 976) relating to labor preferences in connection with certain Public Works projects, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 169) thereon.

COMMEMORATION OF ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF CITY OF CHICAGO

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the city of Chicago is soon to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of its birth. I have been requested by the city council to tender to the Senate a bill which has for its object a law providing that there shall be struck off certain coins such as has been the custom in similar instances, this to be done at no expense to the Government of the United States, in commemoration of the anniversary of the city's birth. I ask that the bill be appropriately referred. I prefer to have the reference decided by the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill of the Senator from Illinois will be received and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The bill (S. 1820) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the establishment of the city of Chicago, Ill., as a city, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

POWER OF COURTS TO HOLD LAWS UNCONSTITUTIONAL

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I introduce a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and printed in full in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 98) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the power of the courts to hold laws unconstitutional, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the power of the courts to hold laws unconstitutional

Resolved, etc., That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by conventions in three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. No law of the United States or of any State shall be held to be unconstitutional by any inferior court, and not by the Supreme Court unless two-thirds of the members thereof shall specifically and by separate opinion find it so beyond a reasonable doubt.

"SEC. 2. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within 7 years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress."

AMENDMENT TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WALSH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 5232) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 40, after line 10, to insert the following:
"Navy Yard, Boston, Mass.: Addition to and accessories for the structural shop building, $500,000."

THE UNITED STATES NAVY (S. DOC. 35)

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a Senate document a factual statement prepared by me for the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate, the Members of the Congress, and the public entitled "The United States Navy." This compilation contains information as to the organization, personnel, fleet, the land establishments, and other facts about the Navy, and was prepared with the assistance and cooperation of the Navy Department. The document when printed will, I believe, contain the only complete information to be found in a condensed form relative to the activities and organization of the Navy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the article will be printed, as requested.

H. J. Res. 221. Joint resolution to permit articles imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the Greater Texas and Pan American Exposition, Dallas, Tex., to be admitted without payment of tariff, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 249. Joint resolution authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to grant further extensions of time for filing returns under title III of the Revenue Act of 1936; to the Committee on Finance.

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. Under the order adopted earlier today, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills, and the clerk will state the first order of business on the calendar.

The resolution (S. Res. 8) limiting debate on general appropriation bills was announced as first in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG and Mr. McKELLAR. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

NATIONAL GALLERY OF ART

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 73) providing for the construction and maintenance of a national gallery of art was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND and Mr. NORRIS. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. COPELAND subsequently said: Mr. President, a few moments ago I objected to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 73. I wish to state that, so far as I am concerned, I objected because of the wish of certain architects of my city to be heard on the matter and not because of any personal objection.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, of what calendar number is the Senator speaking?

Mr. COPELAND. I refer to the second measure on the calendar, which relates to the construction and maintenance of a national gallery of art.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the Senator withdrawn his objection?

Mr. COPELAND. No; I have not. I stated that I objected on behalf of certain architects in New York who are discontented about the measure.

Mr. NORRIS. I could not hear the Senator, and I did not know but that he had withdrawn his objection. I also have an objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution has been passed over.

Mr. CONNALLY subsequently said: Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] if there would be any objection to taking up at this time Senate Joint Resolution 73, providing for the construction and maintenance of a national gallery of art.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Texas I will state that the joint resolution was called a few moments ago upon the consideration of the calendar for unobjected bills, and objection was made by some Senators to its consideration. I have no personal objection.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that the Senator from Texas was detained at the meeting of the Judiciary Committee, and was not on the floor at the moment. If there is objection, I shall not renew the request.

BILL PASSED OVER

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next order of business on the calendar.

The bill (S. 761) for the relief of the State of Massachusetts was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, on a previous call of the calendar the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] objected. In his absence I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ELMER BLAIR

The bill (S. 294) for the relief of Elmer Blair was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, and their widows and dependent relatives, Elmer Blair, formerly private, Company B, Three Hundred and Thirtieth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private on March 13, 1918: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 548) for the relief of Dorothy White, Mrs. Carol M. White, and Charles A. White was announced as next in order.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice. I desire further information with reference to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

GOVERNMENT FOR AMERICAN SAMOA

The bill (S. 1095) to provide a government for American Samoa was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG and Mr. COPELAND. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. TYDINGS subsequently said: Mr. President, having been out of the Chamber a moment, I ask what objection was raised to Senate bill 1095, to provide a government for American Samoa.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I made objection in the absence of the Senator from Maryland. I am awaiting some information respecting the bill, and I know he will give it to us.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I also objected to the consideration of the bill, and I am sorry to say I must insist upon the objection.

Mr. TYDINGS. My purpose in rising was to bring on debate now, for I wished to find out from the Senator objecting what the objection was, in the hope that we could discuss the matter and clear up any obstacle there might be.

Mr. COPELAND. So far as I am concerned, I think this is a very important measure, which ought to receive the attention of the Senate at some future time. The bill deals with a controversial question, at least so far as I am concerned, and I interpose now the same objection I raised last year.

In due time, and on an appropriate occasion, I am perfectly willing to go into the merits of the bill; but I wish to have a little time to reprepare myself regarding the objections which I had last year.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I will state that there are very ample and extensive hearings and information upon this bill, and a copy of the document embodying them has already been sent to each Member of the Senate. It would take too long to enter into a discussion of the bill at this time; but if any Senator is interested in the merits of the matter, I shall be very glad to supply him with another copy of the document. I may further say that on three occasions the Senate has passed similar bills which were the result of the labors of a commission which went to American Samoa, composed of the Democratic leader of the Senate, the former chairman of the Territories Committee, Senator Bingham, and two or three other Members of the House and Senate.

I have no personal interest in the measure, except that from reading the hearings I received the definite impression that the commission felt that a larger measure of local self-government ought to be given to the natives of Samoa, and that this bill was the result of their visit.

I am very anxious that Senators who may be inclined to oppose the bill shall be familiar with the reasons for its enactment. My whole purpose in speaking now is to inform Senators that the hearings are available, and I shall be delighted to supply a copy of them to anyone who desires it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I shall be very happy to receive any material the Senator has. I hope to approach the consideration of the matter with an open mind, but I do wish to be informed about it.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1435) to create a board of shorthand reporting, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING and Mr. McKELLAR. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1436) providing for the employment of skilled shorthand reporting in the executive branch of the Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

W. B. GREELEY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 556) for the relief of W. B. Greeley, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the word "Treasury", to strike out "not otherwise appropriated" and insert "allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps"; in line 8, to strike out the numerals "$2,500" and insert "$908.50"; and on page 2, at the end of the bill, to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to W. B. Greeley, of Seattle, Wash., the sum of $908.50, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for damages for personal injuries sustained by him on February 1, 1935, near the Fourth Avenue Bridge, Olympia, Wash., when he was struck by a Civilian Conservation Corps motor truck driven by Owen E. Cole, an employee of the Civilian Conservation Corps, Camp Matlock, Wash.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EARL W. THOMAS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1068) for the relief of Earl W. Thomas, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, to strike out the numerals "$5,000" and insert "$1,500", and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropiated, to Earl W. Thomas, of Minneapolis, Minn., the sum of $1,500 in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for damages on account of injuries received while in the employ of the United States at Chillicothe, Ohio, on February 6, 1931: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY DALEY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 635) for the relief of Mary Daley, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "Treasury", to strike out "not otherwise appropriated" and insert "allocated by the President for the maintenance of operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to Mary Daley, of Syracuse, N. Y., the sum of $225 in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States for personal injuries sustained by her as a result of a collision of a Civilian Conservation Corps motor vehicle with her automobile on Highbridge Road near Lyndon, N. Y., August 19, 1935: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 1096) for the relief of Michael E. Sullivan was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill? If not, let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BROOK HOUSE, LTD.

The bill (H. R. 1097) for the relief of Brook House, Ltd., of Sydney, Australia, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Brook House, Ltd., of Sydney, Australia, a sum equivalent at the rate of exchange current at the time of payment to 101 pounds, 8 shillings, Australian currency, in full settlement of its claim against the United States on account of rental of space for the period of July 1 to December 31, 1933, inclusive, in connection with a lease of quarters to the agricultural commissioner of the United States at Sydney, New South Wales, Australia, said lease dated April 17, 1931, and there is hereby reappropriated for the purposes of this act so much of the unexpended balance as may be necessary, of the appropriation "34303—Salaries and expenses, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, 1934", which has heretofore been covered into the surplus fund of the Treasury.

WILLIAM L. JENKINS

The bill (H. R. 1098) for the relief of William L. Jenkins was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $481.50 to William L. Jenkins, formerly American consul at Trebizond, Turkey, in full settlement of his claim against the United States for his failure to receive a like amount appropriated for his relief in Public Law No. 519, approved July 3, 1930 (46 Stat. 886), such sum representing the value of personal property lost by him during 1919 as a result of civil disturbances at Trebizond, and which sum was used by the General Accounting Office as a set-off against his then-existing indebtedness to the United States in the amount of $2,000, but subsequently credited to his accounts by authority of Private Law No. 30, approved May 8, 1935: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

MALINDA J. MAST AND WILLIAM LEE MAST

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1245) for the relief of Malinda J. Mast and William Lee Mast, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "Treasury", to strike out "not otherwise appropriated" and insert "allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to Malinda J. Mast and William Lee Mast, of McKinley, Oreg., the sum of $350 in full satisfaction of their claim against the United States for damages for personal injuries suffered on May 19, 1934, about 1 mile north from where the Norway-Lee County Road leaves the Coquille-Myrtle Point State Highway, in Coos County, Oreg., when the automobile in which said Malinda J. Mast and William Lee Mast were riding was struck by a motor truck owned by the United States and driven by Lem Reynolds, an employee of the Civilian Conservation Corps: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

GEORGE W. HANNA AND BERTHA M. HANNA

The bill (S. 315) for the relief of George W. Hanna and Bertha M. Hanna was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George W. Hanna and Bertha M. Hanna, of Paxton Springs, N. Mex., the sum of $5,000 in full satisfaction of their claim against the United States on account of the death of their minor son, David Hanna, who was killed on October 1, 1935, when a truck which he was driving turned over in a ditch which had been dug across the Oso Ridge Forest Foad in the Cibola National Forest in the State of New Mexico and left unmarked by employees of the Forest Service: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

EDNA M. CALLAHAN AND ANNA SCOTT

The bill (H. R. 601) for the relief of Edna M. Callahan and Anna Scott was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Edna M. Callahan the sum of $3,500 and to Anna Scott the sum of $1,500. Such sums shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of injuries sustained by the said Edna M. Callahan and Anna Scott on or about the 10th day of October 1932 while aboard a boat provided by the Navy Department of the United States plying between the Fifth Street Landing at San Pedro, Calif., and the U. S. S. Relief, lying in the harbor of San Pedro, at San Pedro, Calif.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be demed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

JOSEPH A. GANONG

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1057) for the relief of Joseph A. Ganong, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to add at the end of the bill a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Joseph A. Ganong, office cadastral engineer at Portland, Oreg., the sum of $51.24, representing payments made by John L. Day, United States marshal for the district of Oregon, for traveling expenses incurred by said Joseph A. Ganong as a witness for the Government in the case of United States against State of Oregon, which payments were disallowed by the Comptroller General of the United States and were subsequently refunded by said Joseph A. Ganong: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS ARISING OUT OF CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS ACTIVITIES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2773) to authorize the settlement of individual claims for personal property lost or damaged, arising out of the activities of the Civilian Conservation Corps, which have been approved by the Secretary of War, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "Treasury", to strike out "not otherwise appropriated" and insert "allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to Associated Indemnity Corporation, Portland, Oreg., $131.83; to Walter A. Dunlop, Roslindale, Mass., $11.25; to Eggert Coal Co., Morristown, N. J., $12.50; to L. L. Farrell, Escanaba, Mich., $10.66; to Francis H. Finn, Waterbury, Vt., $16.25; to Norman W. Foster, Florida, Mass., $30; to Wade Hawk, Greeneville, Tenn., $10.70; to Norman C. Horne, Mount Union, Pa., $26; to William Long, Channahon, Ill., $33.50; to Oregon State Highway Commission, Salem, Oreg., $102.25; to Redding Creamery, Redding, Calif., $35.10; to San Joaquin Light & Power Corporation, Fresno, Calif., $37.11; to Henry Simonsen, Farmington, Minn., $40.25; to S. W. Siemons, Bullsgap, Tenn., $18.40; to Paul Traglio, Salem, Oreg., $100; to Bert Tucker, Stamping Ground, Ky., $148; and to the Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., Richmond, Va., $18.86, in full settlement for damages sustained by reason of the operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, which claims have been approved by the Secretary of War: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of a member of the committee. Are the appropriations, which are being made to pay for injuries caused through negligence of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States or out of the large fund which has been allocated to the Civilian Conservation Corps?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I can answer the Senator's question. The committee has taken the position and has uniformly insisted on amending all bills of this character so as to provide that payments shall come out of the allocation of funds to the Civilian Conservation Corps.

Mr. KING. Does the bill now before us make such a provision?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I have not examined this particular bill, but the amendment which the clerk just read does so provide.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the amendment in the bill contemplates payment of these claims out of funds allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps. I observe also in this connection that the claims are for relatively very small amounts.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

EXTENSION AND COMPLETION OF UNITED STATES CAPITOL

The bill (S. 1170) to provide for the extension and completion of the United States Capitol was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let the bill go over.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this bill seems to call for a direct appropriation. It should merely authorize an appropriation, and I think the bill ought to go to the Appropriations Committee before it is acted upon by the Senate. I call the attention of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the author of the bill, to that fact.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection has been made to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, one moment before the bill goes over. I call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee to the fact that this is a legislative bill rather than an appropriation bill, and I do not think the Appropriations Committee would have jurisdiction of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. It fixes the amount of the appropriation, however, in case a contract is awarded.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is an authorization, as is required under all circumstances to give the Appropriations Committee jurisdiction.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection having been made, the bill will be passed over.

HARRY D. M'INTOSH

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 118) for the relief of Harry D. McIntosh, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to add at the end of the bill a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Harry D. McIntosh, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $84, in full settlement of any and all claims against the Government for medical expenses incurred as a result of personal injuries suffered by his son, Douglas McIntosh, when he was struck by an Army school bus at Mount Clemens, Mich., on December 5, 1935: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GUY F. ALLEN

The bill (S. 843) for the relief of Guy F. Allen, chief disbursing officer, Division of Disbursement, Treasury Department, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of Guy F. Allen, chief disbursing officer, Division of Disbursement, Treasury Department, without charge against the certifying officer of the Department of Justice, for the sum of $126.40, representing the disallowed portion of the sum of $138 paid by him on August 17, 1934, on voucher no. 102336, from the appropriation, "15746, Salaries and expenses, Division of Investigation, 1935", to the Airline ticket office, Municipal Airport, Oklahoma City, Okla., for the charter of a special airplane by an assistant director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, for transportation from Oklahoma City, Okla., to Springfield, Mo., in connection with an emergency investigation.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 792) for the relief of Sam Larson, guardian of Margaret Larson, a minor, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

That completes the calendar.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FILING RETURNS—REVENUE ACT OF 1936

Mr. GEORGE. From the Committee on Finance, and by request of the chairman of the committee, who is temporarily absent from the Chamber, I report back favorably without amendment House Joint Resolution 249, authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to grant further extensions of time for filing returns under title III of the Revenue Act of 1936. This joint resolution is identical with Senate Joint Resolution 91. I invite the attention of the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] to the House joint resolution, and I request unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a moment ago the able Senator from Georgia spoke to me briefly about this matter. If an emergency situation requires the consideration of the joint resolution at this time, I should like to have him state what it is.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, under title III of the Revenue Act of 1936 the so-called "unjust enrichment" tax, or "windfall" tax, was imposed. Returns were required to be made within the discretion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and, of course, the time for making returns will expire on March 15. It appears that the Commissioner is not given discretion to grant further extensions of time for filing returns by these taxpayers; and the joint resolution merely gives the Commissioner, in his discretion, the power to make additional reasonable extensions of time.

The joint resolution has the recommendation and approval of the Treasury Department; and, inasmuch as the returns must be filed by Monday, March 15, unless this joint resolution be passed and approved, I understand that the distinguished leader of the minority interposes no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 249) authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to grant further extensions of time for filing returns under title III of the Revenue Act of 1936, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant additional reasonable extensions of time for filing returns under title III of the Revenue Act of 1936 for the calendar year 1935 and any fiscal year ending on or before August 31, 1936: Provided, That, except in the case of taxpayers who are abroad, no such extension shall be made beyond June 15, 1937.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, in view of the emergency, I ask unanimous consent that the Vice President be authorized to sign House Joint Resolution 249 after the recess or adjournment of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICES AND POST ROADS

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY—SURGEON GENERAL

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, at the last session of the Senate the nomination of Rear Admiral Perceval S. Rossiter to be Surgeon General and Chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery of the Navy Department was confirmed. The present term of office of Admiral Rossiter will expire on Monday. In order that there may be no period when the office will be vacant, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified that the nomination was confirmed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

Are there further reports of committees? If not, the calendar is in order.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

ADJOURNMENT

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate stand adjourned until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, March 12, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MARCH 11, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We desire, Father in Heaven, to lift up our voice in thanksgiving and praise. As we pray, may we together remember with gratitude the never-failing mercy and goodness of an infinite God. Thy servant has said: "Blessed are those who are undefiled in the way and walk in the law of the Lord. Blessed are they that keep His testimonies and that seek Him with a whole heart." Oh, that we might always be animated by Thy holy word. Do Thou write it within us. We pray that all our duties may weigh with sacredness upon our hearts. Strengthen our faith in the eternal verities and inspire us to live up to the ideals and teachings of the Master. Merciful Father, permit us to carry into the evening shadows the sweet assurance that we have won love by deserving it and happiness by bestowing it. Through Christ our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday, Wednesday, March 10, 1937, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Crockett, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 601. An act for the relief of Edna M. Callahan and Anna Scott;

H. R. 1097. An act for the relief of Brook House, Ltd., of Sydney, Australia;

H. R. 1098. An act for the relief of William L. Jenkins; and

H. J. Res. 249. Joint resolution authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to grant further extensions of time for filing returns under title III of the Revenue Act of 1936.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 11, 1937.

The SPEAKER, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: From the State Board of Election Commissioners of the Commonwealth of Kentucky I have received the certificate of election of Hon. B. M. VINCENT as a Representative-elect to the Seventy-fifth Congress from the Second Congressional District of that State, to fill the unexpired term caused by the death of Hon. Glover H. Cary.

Very truly yours,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The Member-elect will come forward and take the oath of office.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks with respect to a depository library.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by including an address of the Honorable James Landis, Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the gentleman Chairman of the Commission at the present time?

Mr. MAVERICK. He is the Chairman right now—the "big shot."

Mr. RICH. The "big shot"? Well, we want some "big shot" addresses and we will see what this is.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

BOOKER T. WASHINGTON AND THE TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it is the custom of this great deliberative body to pause in its work and do homage to the memory of its great men and women, and especially those who have made large and lasting contributions to the growth and welfare of the Nation. It was only a few weeks ago when we assembled in this Chamber and listened to a most eloquent address delivered by one of our Members in memory of the great work done by Abraham Lincoln. On February 22 we dispensed with all of the business of the House and listened with rapt interest to the reading of George Washington's Farewell Address. In this way the Nation shows its appreciation for the work done by its statesmen and benefactors.

I wish to call your attention to April 5, which is the birthday of the late Booker Washington, founder and builder of the great Tuskegee Institute at Tuskegee, Ala. No man of our time has made a larger and more lasting contribution to character and citizenship building than Booker Washington. The 5th of April has been set aside not only to commemorate his birthday, but to bring to the attention of the country the wonderful work that is being done at this great institution. I therefore ask unanimous consent of this body that on April 5, after we shall have listened to the reading of the Journal and disposed of the special matters on the Speaker's desk, that I be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes on the life and work of Booker Washington and the great Tuskegee Institute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

REGULATION OF BITUMINOUS COAL IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4985) to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4985, with Mr. MAY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL BITUMINOUS COAL COMMISSION

SEC. 2. (a) There is hereby established in the Department of the Interior a National Bituminous Coal Commission (herein referred to as Commission), which shall be composed of seven members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for a term of 4 years. The Commission shall annually designate its chairman, and shall have a seal which shall be judicially recognized. Any person appointed to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of his predecessor in office. The Commission shall have an office in the city of Washington, D. C., and shall convene at such times and places as the majority of the Commission shall determine. Two members of the Commission shall have been experienced bituminous coal mine workers, two shall have had previous experience as producers, but none of the members shall have any financial interest, direct or indirect, in the mining, transportation, or sale of, or manufacture of equipment for, coal (whether or not bituminous coal), oil, or gas, or in the generation, transmission, or sale of hydroelectric power, or in the manufacture of equipment for the use thereof, and shall not actively engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. Not more than one commissioner shall be a resident of any one State, and not more than one commissioner shall be a resident of any one of the districts hereinafter established, but a change in any of the boundaries of the districts, made by the Commission as hereinafter provided, shall not affect the tenure of office of any commissioner then serving. Any commissioner may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. The Commission is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation and duties of a secretary and necessary professional, clerical, and other assistants. With the exception of the secretary, a clerk to each commissioner, the attorneys, and such special agents, technical experts, and examiners as the Commission may require, all employees of the Commission shall be appointed and their compensation fixed in accordance with the provisions of the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. No person appointed without regard to the provisions of the civil-service laws shall be related to any member of the Commission by marriage or within the third degree by blood. The Commission is authorized to accept and utilize voluntary and uncompensated services of any person or of any official of a State or political subdivision thereof. The members of the Commission shall each receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per year and necessary traveling expenses. Such Commission shall have the power to make and promulgate all reasonable rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act and shall annually make full report of its activities to the Secretary of the Interior for transmission to Congress. A majority of the Commission shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, and a vacancy in the Commission shall not impair the right of the remaining members to exercise all the power of the Commission. No order which is subject to judicial review under section 6, and no rule or regulation which has the force and effect of law, shall be made or prescribed by the Commission, unless it has given reasonable public notice of a hearing, and unless it has afforded to interested parties an opportunity to be heard, and unless it has made findings of fact. Such findings, if supported by substantial evidence shall be conclusive upon review thereof by any court of the United States. The Commission may establish divisions deemed necessary for the proper dispatch of its business, and may refer any matter to an individual commissioner, who shall exercise all the powers and authority of the Commission in the premises: Provided, That any person in interest may, upon written petition, secure a review by the Commission of the report, findings, or order of such commissioner.

(b) (1) There is hereby established an office in the Department of the Interior to be known as the office of the consumers' counsel of the National Bituminous Coal Commission. The office shall be in charge of a counsel to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The counsel shall have no financial interest, direct or indirect, in the mining, transportation, or sale of, or the manufacture of equipment for, coal (whether or not bituminous coal), oil, or gas, or in the generation, transmission, or sale of hydroelectric power, or in the manufacture of equipment for the use thereof, and shall not actively engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. The counsel shall receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per year and necessary traveling expenses.

(2) It shall be the duty of the counsel to appear in the interest of the consuming public in any proceeding before the Commission and to conduct such independent investigation of matters relative to the coal industry and the administration of this act as he may deem necessary to enable him properly to represent the consuming public in any proceeding before the Commission. In any such proceeding before the Commission the counsel shall have the right to offer any relevant testimony and argument, oral or written, and to examine and cross-examine witnesses and parties to the proceeding, and shall have the right to have subpena or other process of the Commission issue in his behalf. Whenever the counsel finds that it is in the interest of the consuming public to have the Commission furnish any information at its command or conduct any investigation as to any matter within its authority, the counsel shall so certify to the Commission, specifying in the certificate the information or investigation desired. Thereupon the Commission shall promptly furnish to the counsel the information or promptly conduct the investigation and place the results thereof at the disposal of the counsel.

(3) The counsel is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation and duties of necessary professional, clerical, and other assistants. With the exception of a clerk to the counsel, the attorneys, and such special agents and experts as the counsel may from time to time find necessary for the conduct of his work, all employees of the counsel shall be appointed and their compensation fixed in accordance with the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. The counsel is authorized to make such expenditures as may be necessary for the performance of the duties vested in him.

(4) The counsel shall annually make a full report of the activities of his office directly to the Congress.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAPES: Page 3, beginning with line 9, strike out lines 9 and 10, and line 11, except the word "all", so that the sentence will read "all employees of the Commission shall be appointed and their compensation fixed in accordance with the provisions of the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended."

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, the President, in his message to the Congress on January 12, 1937, submitting the Brownlow Reorganization Committee report, in summarizing the recommendations of that committee said:

> The committee presents an integrated 5-point program which you will find set out in its report. It includes these major recommendations—

And, without attempting to read the others, I shall read only the one pertinent to this amendment:

> No. 3. Extend the merit system upward, outward, and downward to cover practically all nonpolicy determining posts.

Let me read it again:

> Extend the merit system upward, outward, and downward to cover practically all nonpolicy determining posts.

Mr. Chairman, to carry out this recommendation literally the Congress in this bill should provide that these commissioners should be selected according to the civil-service laws and regulations and not appointed by the President as provided in the bill. They will not occupy any "policy determining posts." However, my amendment does not go as far as that. It does not apply to the commissioners themselves, but simply goes to the employees of the commission.

My amendment proposes to strike out, on page 3, line 9, the words "with the exception of the Secretary, a clerk to each commissioner, the attorneys, and such special agents, technical experts, and examiners as the commission may require."

The bill proposes to take all those out from under civil service, as well as the commissioners, so it is evident that this bill is not in harmony with the recommendation of the Brownlow committee in that respect. The President endorses the recommendation of the Brownlow committee. The President specifically says in his message:

> I endorse this program and feel confident that it will commend itself to you also, with your knowledge of government, and to the vast majority of the citizens of the country.

Mr. Chairman, here is an opportunity to adopt and to put into practice the merit system now. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, it is well for my friend from Michigan to keep up the record. This is a matter with which every member of this House is familiar. I feel that the House is perfectly competent to take up the recommendations of any committee when the time comes for consideration of legislation based upon that support. The Coal Commission has had some experience in operating, and, according to their experience, they tell us that the Secretary, their own clerks, the attorneys, and the technical experts, as in many other agencies of the Government, should not be included in the civil service. I trust that the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan will be voted down.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am in hearty accord with the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES]. I referred to this matter in some remarks I made on the floor 2 or 3 days ago when the bill was under discussion, and, if I understand that gentleman's amendment correctly, it practically means that, on lines 10 or 11, the words "the attorneys and special agents, technical experts, and examiners as the commission may require" will be stricken out.

Mr. MAPES. That is correct.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is exactly what I referred to the other day—the absolute uselessness of pretending to have any civil service with that language in the bill. It is as big a piece of sarcasm as we could possibly perpetrate right now. By the way, that seems to be the favorite word—"now." You could not make a bigger bluff than now to say that those people should not be under civil service. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FRED M. VINSON] has referred to the experience of the Coal Commission. What experience have they had other than drawing their salaries? They have been doing that mighty well. The actual authority of the Coal Commission was stopped by the Supreme Court decision, and they have done well in keeping $400,000 in circulation in the way of employees since then, probably not one of that number being under the civil service. Now, if you are going to pass this legislation and make it the law of the land, and say that attorneys and such special agents and technical experts and examiners as the commission may require should not be under civil service, why say anything about civil service? Maybe you could get a $25 file clerk or something who would have to go through the ceremony of the civil service, but $1,400,000 will be expended to people who enjoy the patronage that your Postmaster General can so ably dispense. Let us face the thing now as the circumstances actually are. There is the truth of the case, plainly stated.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Why not wait until after the bill is passed and they have been put into this commission, and then get them all under the civil service?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; put them into this group of 275,000 who are now waiting to be put under the civil service, after being appointed under patronage. That is consistency, if I ever heard of it. So it seems to me that if we want to be honest with ourselves, and honest with our convictions, we should show whether we are for civil service or against it now. If you are against it now, vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, and if you are for civil service, vote to strike out that language. I know the answer that my colleagues of the committee will make to me. They will say, why did you not propose it in the committee? We had that discussion up the other day, the chairman and I. A fat chance a man has to offer an amendment, when he is one of 7 as against 18. This bill is satisfactory to those who want to put the bill through. I am not one of those and I am not one of those who want to be a hypocrite about the civil service. That is what you are doing and what you will mean when you say that I should have offered the amendment in committee. What good would it do? It would only waste my breath and your time, and there is time enough wasted in the Committee with talk now. It would be foolish to offer the amendment, because you gentlemen never would agree to it in the wide world. That is my answer to the question that I am quite sure the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FRED M. VINSON] will ask me or refer to in answering what I have to say, but here is a straight-cut civil-service proposition. If you are for it, you are for it now. If you do not believe in civil service and prefer patronage, then vote down the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I am in favor of the Mapes amendment, not for the reason stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], because, if I remember correctly, he did not vote to put postmasters under civil service. I think the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], however, did, and I think he is sincerely in favor of civil service, but I call the attention of the members of the Committee to the fact that when we established the Social Security Board we made the same exception proposed in this bill which the gentleman from Michigan would strike out. Most of the trouble that the Social Security Board has had about appointments has grown out of that very exception. We have the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Veterans' Administration, and a number of agencies who select their attorneys and all their employees through the civil service, and it has worked very satisfactorily—much more satisfactorily, according to my information, than has the exception in the Social Security Act. They have had much trouble in the Social Security Board about attorneys and experts, and there is hardly a Member of Congress on our side of the House who has not had his difficulties about appointments of so-called experts and attorneys, which are excepted from the civil service.

The Comptroller General has ruled that under this type of exception you cannot appoint a man as an expert where the position may be filled by civil-service examination. The result is that the Social Security Board today has quite a number of experts who are perhaps going to be kept on the pay roll, where they are not needed, or else they will lose their jobs, because the Comptroller General has ruled that those positions can be filled by civil-service examinations.

We have a lot of lawyers on the Social Security Board, and from what I know of the type of men who have been selected, I do not think they will measure up to the attorneys in the Interstate Commerce Commission or in the Veterans' Administration or any of the other agencies where they have been selected by civil service.

I hope the House will adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan. It is in accordance with the President's recommendation in his reorganization message, and I think we ought to adopt it.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I assume the gentleman has transacted business with the departments of Government here?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Has the gentleman had an opportunity to make some comparisons in the different departments, for instance, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, where they are excepted from the civil service, in the efficiency of service and the courtesy of the employees, as against those departments which are under civil service?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes; I have.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Does not the gentleman find that where the civil-service rules do not apply they are more courteous and they are more efficient in the conduct of the business?

Mr. RAMSPECK. No. I cannot say that has been my experience. I think the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is a very efficiently managed agency, but I find that the regular, old-line agencies that have been under civil service for years are more cooperative with Members of Congress, and know better how to help us transact our business than these new agencies, where the positions have been filled under the patronage system. That has been my experience.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Would the gentleman like to have the civil service extended to the secretarial force in his own office?

Mr. RAMSPECK. No. I do not think you can extend it there, because that is a confidential relationship. It is a political relationship.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Does not the gentleman think he will find confidential relationships all through the departments?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Not in the same respect that you do in your own office, where you are a political officeholder and must be elected, and you must have people that you can control. That is a very different proposition. I think we get better service from the old line agencies that are under civil service, and the people are better satisfied and render better service to the Government.

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Men who have had experience in the administration of legislation similar to this testify that you can have too much civil service. Enough of anything is enough. Those who testified before our committee, who have had experience and who are familiar with the administration of this and similar legislation, state that the examiners, lawyers, and experts should not be under civil service. Of course, the examiners occupy the same relation to the law as experts. They are nothing but experts. The commission will be in a better position to select men who are capable, efficient, and well-qualified to discharge the duties of examiners if they are unhampered.

We have an illustration, a rather sad one, in respect to the administration of the Social Security Act.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman understands this is the recommendation of the Brownlow committee and of the President. Does the gentleman desire to take a position antagonistic to their recommendation?

Mr. DOUGHTON. We will cross that bridge later in the day. That has no connection with what I am talking about.

Any Member of the House can find out, and many Members have already found out, that the Social Security Board, in the administration of that act, has been and is now being hampered on account of the strict civil-service requirements.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman has a different opinion about that than the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. RAMSPECK], chairman of the Committee on the Civil Service?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman from Georgia admitted that he did not want the clerks in his office to be selected under civil service rules and regulations. Carried to its last analysis, that is exactly what should be done. You can talk about anything and study about it until it becomes an obsession. With all due respect to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK], who is one of the ablest Members of this House, that is his hobby. I believe in civil service, as far as reasonable, but we can go too far with anything.

I trust this amendment will be voted down in the interest of the legislation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

TAX ON COAL

SEC. 3. (a) There is hereby imposed upon the sale or other disposal of bituminous coal produced within the United States when sold or otherwise disposed of by the producer thereof an excise tax in an amount equal to one-half of 1 percent of the sale price at the mine in the case of coal disposed of by sale at the mine or in the case of coal disposed of otherwise than by sale at the mine, and coal sold otherwise than through an arms' length transaction, one-half of 1 percent of the market value of such coal.

(b) In addition to the tax imposed by subsection (a) of this section, there is hereby imposed upon the sale or other disposal of bituminous coal produced within the United States, when sold or otherwise disposed of by the producer thereof, which would be subject to the application of the conditions and provisions of the code provided for in section 4, or of the provisions of section 4–A, an excise tax in an amount equal to 19½ percent of the sale price at the mine in the case of coal disposed of by sale at the mine, or in the case of coal disposed of otherwise than by sale at the mine, and coal sold otherwise than through an arms' length transaction, 19½ percent of the market value of such coal. In the case of any producer who is a code member as provided in section 4 and is so certified to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue by the Commission, the sale or disposal by such producer during the continuance of his membership in the code of coal produced by him shall be exempt from the tax imposed by this subsection.

(c) The taxes imposed by this section shall be paid to the United States by the producer, and shall be payable monthly for each calendar month on or before the first business day of the second succeeding month, under such regulations and in such manner as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

(d) In the case of coal disposed of otherwise than by sale at the mine, and coal sold otherwise than through an arms' length transaction, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall determine the market value thereof. Such market value shall equal the current market price at the mine of coal of a comparable kind, quality, and size produced for market in the locality where the coal so disposed of is produced.

(e) The taxes imposed by this section shall not apply in the case of a sale of coal for the exclusive use of the United States or of any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or any political subdivision of any of them, for use in the performance of governmental functions. Under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, a credit against the tax imposed by subsection (a) of this section or a refund may be allowed or made to any producer of coal in the amount of such tax paid with respect to the sale of coal to any vendee, if the producer has in his possession such evidence as the regulations may prescribe that such coal was resold by any person for the exclusive use of the United States or of any State, Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, or any political subdivision of any of them, for use in the performance of governmental functions.

(f) No producer shall, by reason of his acceptance of the code provided for in section 4, or of the exemption from the tax provided in subsection (b) in this section, be held to be precluded or estopped from contesting the constitutionality of any provision of this act or of the code, or the validity or application of either to him or to any part of the coal produced by him.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MERRITT: On page 6, line 24, after "amount equal to", strike out "one-half" and insert in lieu thereof "one-quarter."

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the Clerk will report the gentleman's second amendment for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 4, after the word "transaction", on line 13, strike out "one-half" and insert "one-quarter."

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, I voted for the Guffey coal bill passed at the last session. I wish to be consistent and I shall vote for the Vinson coal bill. I am confident that the coal people need some sort of legislation to give them stability and protection. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FRED M. VINSON] the other day when he explained the bill—and I wish to compliment him on his explanation—said among other things that the amount that will be provided for the administration of this legislation by the assessment of the tax of one-half of 1 percent would be more than adequate.

In the report of the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means (Rept. No. 294), on page 2, it is stated as follows:

First, a tax of one-half of 1 percent on the sale of or other disposal of bituminous coal by every producer. On the basis of a production of 4,000,000 tons annually the average price of which at the mine would approximate $2 per ton, this tax is estimated to yield $4,000,000 annually, which is more than adequate to cover the administrative costs of the bill.

That $4,000,000 would be "more than adequate" to cover the costs of administering this bill would seem to be considerably of an understatement. There is no reason why this bill should not be administered for less than $2,000,000 per year, which could be obtained by a tax of one-quarter of 1 percent—instead of one-half of 1 percent—upon tonnage produced in the United States each year. It would seem to be somewhat inconsistent to attempt to rehabilitate a supposedly sick industry by saddling the producers with a tax of one-half of 1 percent upon the selling price of their coal when a tax of one-half that amount should return more than sufficient for the purposes for which imposed.

With this in mind I have offered an amendment that will produce about $2,000,000 a year. For the sake of economy, if for no other reason, I am confident that the people of the country, especially the coal industry, will be satisfied with this amount of money to administer this legislation.

The State of New York, which it is my honor and distinct pleasure to represent, is comprised entirely of consumers, and if this industry, as has been pointed out, has been a very sick one, I believe this is a step in the right direction to put it on its feet, making the tonnage price insofar as the consumers are concerned that which will meet with their entire satisfaction.

I sincerely trust that the committee will find this a very agreeable amendment, and ask for their favorable consideration.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I wish we were in position to agree with the amendment of the gentleman from New York. I know that those who are interested in the bill and in the benefits that we hope will come from it would like to see the least possible burden placed upon the industry, but it must be remembered that the industry has stoutly maintained that they wanted the administration of this act without any dollar burden upon the Treasury of the United States.

In the previous bills, the Guffey-Snyder bill of 2 years ago, the tax per ton of coal was 1½ percent, and that was the rate carried in the bill of last year, H. R. 12800, introduced by me, which passed the House, but failed in the Senate by reason of a filibuster. It has been pointed out that the 1½-percent tax carried in the bills heretofore, and in the original bill as introduced by me on the first day of the session, would raise $12,000,000. The committee, after due consideration, decreased the 1½-percent tax, that of $12,000,000, to a one-half of 1-percent tax, or $4,000,000.

We are not able to know exactly how much will be required to administer this law, but the committee felt that they should be on the safe side and fix the tax at one-half of 1 percent. It may be that in the future, when the administration has had longer experience, a reduction could be made in the tax.

Mr. Chairman, I trust that the amendment will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The provisions of this section shall be promulgated by the Commission as the "Bituminous Coal Code", and are herein referred to as the code.

Producers accepting membership in the code as provided in section 5 (a) shall be, and are herein referred to as, code members, and the provisions of such code shall apply only to such code members.

For the purpose of carrying out the declared policy of this act, the code shall contain the following conditions and provisions, which are intended to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal and which shall be applicable only to matters and transactions in or directly affecting interstate commerce in bituminous coal:

PART I—ORGANIZATION

(a) Twenty-three district boards of code members shall be organized. Each district board shall consist of not less than 3 nor more than 17 members. The number of members of the district board shall, subject to the approval of the Commission, be determined by the majority vote of the district tonnage during the calendar year 1936 represented at a meeting of the code members of the district called for the purpose of such determination and for the election of such district board; and all code members within the district shall be given notice of the time and place of the meeting. All but one of the members of the district board shall be code members or representatives of code members truly representative of all the mines of the district. The number of such producer members shall be an even number. One-half of such producer members shall be elected by the majority in number of the code members of the district represented at the aforesaid meeting. The other producer members shall be elected by votes cast in the proportion of the annual tonnage output of the code members in the district for the calendar year preceding the date of the election: Provided, That not more than one officer or employee of any code member within a district shall be a member of the district board at the same time. The remaining member of each district board shall be selected by the organization of employees representing the preponderant number of employees in the industry of the district in question. The term of district board members shall be 2 years and until their successors are elected.

The district boards shall have power to adopt bylaws and rules of procedure, subject to approval of the Commission, and to appoint officers from their own membership, to fix their terms and compensation, to provide for reports, and to employ such committees, employees, arbitrators, and other persons necessary to effectuate their purposes. Members of the district board shall serve, as such, without compensation but may be reimbursed for their reasonable expenses. The territorial boundaries or limits of the 23 districts are set forth in the schedule entitled "Schedule of Districts" and annexed to this act.

Whenever the Commission upon investigation instituted upon its own motion or upon petition of any code member, district board, State or political subdivision thereof, or the consumers' counsel, after hearing finds that the territorial boundaries or limits of any district or minimum-price area are such as to make it substantially impracticable to establish minimum prices in accordance with all the standards set forth in subsections (a) and (b) of part II of this section, and that a change in such territorial boundaries or limits or a division or consolidation of such districts or minimum-price areas would render the establishment of minimum prices in accordance with all such standards more practicable, it shall by order make such changes, divisions, and consolidations as it finds will substantially aid in such establishment of minimum prices.

(b) The expense of administering the code by the respective district boards shall be borne by the code members in the respective districts, each paying his proportionate share, as assessed, computed on a tonnage basis, in accordance with regulations prescribed by such boards with the approval of the Commission. Such assessments may be collected by the district board by action in any court of competent jurisdiction.

(c) Nothing contained in this act shall constitute the members of a district board partners for any purpose. Nor shall any member of a district board be liable in any manner to anyone for any act of any other member, officer, agent, or employee of the district board. Nor shall any member of a district board, exercising reasonable diligence in the conduct of his duties under this act, be liable to anyone for any action or omission to act under this act except for his own willful misfeasance or for nonfeasance involving moral turpitude.

(d) No action complying with the provisions of this section taken while this act is in effect, or within 60 days thereafter, by any code member or by any district board, shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws of the United States.

PART II—MARKETING

The Commission shall have power to prescribe for code members minimum and maximum prices, and marketing rules and regulations, as follows:

(a) All code members shall report all spot orders to such statistical bureau hereinafter provided for as may be designated by the Commission and shall file with it copies of all contracts for the sale of coal, copies of all invoices, copies of all credit memoranda, and such other information concerning the preparation, cost, sale, and distribution of coal as the Commission may authorize or require. All such records shall be held by the statistical bureau as the confidential records of the code member filing such information.

In each district there may be established by the Commission a statistical bureau which shall be an agency of the Commission. Each statistical bureau shall be under the direction of a manager, who shall be appointed by the Commission. No producer, employee, or representative of a producer, and, except as the Commission may specifically approve, no member of a district board or employee or representative thereof shall be an employee of any statistical bureau.

Each district board shall, from time to time on its own motion or when directed by the Commission, propose minimum prices free on board transportation facilities at the mines for kinds, qualities, and sizes of coal produced in said district, and classification of coal and price variations as to mines and consuming market areas. Said prices shall be proposed so as to yield a return per net ton for each district in a minimum price area, as such districts are identified and such area is defined in the subjoined table designated "minimum price area table", equal as nearly as may be to the weighted average of the total costs, per net ton, determined as hereinafter provided, of the tonnage of such minimum price area. The computation of the total costs shall include the cost of labor, supplies, power, taxes, insurance, workmen's compensation, royalties, depreciation and depletion (as determined by the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the computation of the Federal income tax) and all other direct expenses of production, coal operators' association dues, district board assessments for Board operating expenses only levied under the code, and reasonable costs of selling and the cost of administration.

MINIMUM PRICE AREA TABLE

Area 1: Eastern Pennsylvania, district 1; western Pennsylvania, district 2; northern West Virginia, district 3; Ohio, district 4; Michigan, district 5; Panhandle, district 6; Southern no. 1, district 7; Southern no. 2, district 8; that part of Southeastern district 13, comprising Van Buren, Warren, and McMinn Counties in Tennessee.

Area 2: West Kentucky, district 9; Illinois, district 10; Indiana, district 11; Iowa, district 12.

Area 3: Southeastern, district 13, except Van Buren, Warren, and McMinn Counties in Tennessee.

Area 4: Arkansas-Oklahoma, district 14.

Area 5: Southwestern, district 15.

Area 6: Northern Colorado, district 16; southern Colorado, district 17; New Mexico, district 18.

Area 7: Wyoming, district 19; Utah, district 20.

Area 8: North Dakota and South Dakota, district 21.

Area 9: Montana, district 22.

Area 10: Washington and Alaska, district 23.

The minimum prices so proposed shall reflect, as nearly as possible, the relative market value of the various kinds, qualities, and sizes of coal, shall be just and equitable as between producers within the district, and shall have due regard to the interests of the consuming public. The procedure for proposal of minimum prices shall be in accordance with rules and regulations to be approved by the Commission.

A schedule of such proposed minimum prices, together with the data upon which they are computed, including, but without limitation, the factors considered in determining the price relationship, shall be submitted by the district board to the Commission, which may approve, disapprove, or modify such proposed minimum prices to conform to the requirements of this subsection, which shall serve as the basis for the coordination provided for in the succeeding subsection (b): Provided, That all minimum prices proposed for any kind, quality, or size of coal for shipment into any consuming market area shall be just and equitable as between producers within the district: And provided further, That no minimum price shall be proposed that permits dumping.

As soon as possible after its creation, each district board shall determine, from cost data submitted by the proper statistical bureau of the Commission, the weighted average of the total costs of the ascertainable tonnage produced in the district in the calendar year 1936. The district board shall adjust the average costs so determined, as may be necessary to give effect to any changes in wage rates, hours of employment, or other factors substantially affecting costs, exclusive of seasonal changes, so as to reflect as accurately as possible any change or changes which may have been established since January 1, 1936. Such determination and the computations upon which it is based shall be promptly submitted to the Commission by each district board in the respective minimum-price area. The Commission shall thereupon determine the weighted average of the total costs of the tonnage for each minimum-price area in the calendar year 1936, adjusted as aforesaid, and transmit it to all the district boards within such minimum-price area. Said weighted average of the total costs shall be taken as the basis, to be effective until changed by the Commission, for the proposal and establishment of minimum prices. Thereafter, upon satisfactory proof made at any time by any district board of a change in excess of 2 cents per net ton of 2,000 pounds in the weighted average of the total costs in the minimum-price area, exclusive of seasonal changes, the Commission shall increase or decrease the minimum prices accordingly. The weighted average figures of total cost determined as aforesaid shall be available to the public.

Each district board shall, on its own motion or when directed by the Commission, propose reasonable rules and regulations incidental to the sale and distribution, by code members within the district, of coal. Such rules and regulations shall not be inconsistent with the requirements of this section and shall conform to the standards of fair competition hereinafter established. Such rules and regulations shall be submitted by the district board to the Commission with a statement of the reasons therefor, and the Commission may approve, disapprove, or modify the same for the purpose of coordination.

(b) District boards shall, under rules and regulations established by the Commission, coordinate in common consuming market areas upon a fair competitive basis the minimum prices and the rules and regulations proposed by them, respectively, under subsection (a) hereof. Such coordination, among other factors, but without limitation, shall take into account the various kinds, qualities, and sizes of coal, and transportation charges upon coal. All minimum prices proposed for any kind, quality, or size of coal for shipment into any common consuming market area shall be just and equitable, and not unduly prejudicial or preferential, as between and among districts, shall reflect, as nearly as possible, the relative market values, at points of delivery in each common consuming market area, of the various kinds, qualities, and sizes of coal produced in the various districts, taking into account transportation methods and charges and their effect upon a reasonable opportunity to compete on a fair basis, and the competitive relationships between coal and other forms of fuel and energy; and shall preserve as nearly as may be existing fair competitive opportunities. The minimum prices proposed as a result of such coordination shall not, as to any district, reduce or increase the return per net ton upon all the coal produced therein below or above the minimum return as provided in subsection (a) of this section by an amount greater than necessary to accomplish such coordination, to the end that the return per net ton upon the entire tonnage of the minimum price area shall approximate the weighted average of the total costs per net ton of the tonnage of such minimum price area. Such coordinated prices and rules and regulations, together with the data upon which they are predicated, shall be submitted to the Commission. The Commission shall thereupon establish the effective minimum prices and rules and regulations in accordance with the standards set forth in subsections (a) and (b) of part II of this section.

(c) When, in the public interest, the Commission deems it necessary to establish maximum prices for coal in order to protect the consumer of coal against unreasonably high prices therefor, the Commission shall have the power to establish maximum prices free on board transportation facilities for coal in any district. Such maximum prices shall be established at a uniform increase above the minimum prices in effect within the district at the time, so that in the aggregate the maximum prices shall yield a reasonable return above the weighted average total cost of the district: Provided, That no maximum price shall be established for any mine which shall not yield a fair return on the fair value of the property.

(d) If any code member or district board, or any State or political subdivision of a State, or the consumers' counsel, shall be dissatisfied with such coordination of prices or rules and regulations, or by a failure to establish such coordination of prices or rules and regulations, or by the maximum prices established pursuant to subsection (c) of part II of this section, he or it shall have the right, by petition, to make complaint to the Commission, and the Commission shall, under rules and regulations established by it, and after notice and hearing, make such order as may be required to effectuate the purpose of subsections (b) and (c) of part II of this section. Pending final disposition of such petition, and upon reasonable showing of necessity therefor, the Commission may make such preliminary or temporary order as in its judgment may be appropriate, and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

(e) No coal subject to the provisions of this section shall be sold or delivered or offered for sale at a price below the minimum or above the maximum therefor established by the Commission, and the sale or delivery or offer for sale of coal at a price below such minimum or above such maximum shall constitute a violation of the code: Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to a lawful and bona-fide written contract entered into prior to January 6, 1937.

A contract for the sale of coal at a price below the minimum or above the maximum therefor established by the Commission at the time of the making of the contract shall constitute a violation of the code, and such contract shall be invalid and unenforceable.

From and after the date of approval of this act, until prices shall have been established pursuant to subsections (a) and (b) of part II of this section, no contract for the sale of coal shall be made providing for delivery for a period longer than 30 days from the date of the contract.

No contract shall be made for the sale of coal for delivery after the expiration date of this act at a price below the minimum or above the maximum therefor established by the Commission and in effect at the time of making the contract.

The minimum prices established in accordance with the provisions of this section shall not apply to coal sold and shipped outside the domestic market. The domestic market shall include all points within the continental United States and Canada, and car-ferry shipments to the island of Cuba. Bunker coal delivered to steamships for consumption thereon shall be regarded as shipped within the domestic market. Maximum prices established in accordance with the provisions of this section shall not apply to coal sold and shipped outside the continental United States.

(f) All data, reports, and other information in the possession of any agency of the United States in relation to coal shall be available to the Commission for the administration of this act.

(g) The price provisions of this act shall not be evaded or violated by or through the use of docks or other storage facilities or transportation facilities, or by or through the use of subsidiaries, affiliated sales or transportation companies or other intermediaries or instrumentalities, or by or through the absorption, directly or indirectly, of any transportation or incidental charge of whatsoever kind or character, or any part thereof. The Commission is hereby authorized, after investigation and hearing, and upon notice to the interested parties, to make and issue rules and regulations to make this subsection effective.

(h) The Commission shall prescribe the price allowance to and receivable by persons (whether or not code members) who purchase coal for resale, and resell it in not less than cargo or railroad carload lots; and shall require the maintenance by such persons, in the resale of coal, of the minimum prices established under this act.

UNFAIR METHODS OF COMPETITION

(i) The following practices with respect to coal shall be unfair methods of competition and shall constitute violations of the code:

1. The consignment of unordered coal, or the forwarding of coal which has not actually been sold, consigned to the producer or his agent: Provided, however, That coal which has not actually been sold may be forwarded, consigned to the producer or his agent at rail or track yards, tidewater ports, river ports, or lake ports, or docks beyond such ports, when for application to any of the following class: Bunker coal, coal applicable against existing contracts, coal for storage (other than in railroad cars) by the producer or his agent in rail or track yards or on docks, wharves, or other yards for resale by the producer or his agent.

2. The adjustment of claims with purchasers of coal in such manner as to grant secret allowances, secret rebates, or secret concessions, or other price discrimination.

3. The prepayment of freight charges with intent to or having the effect of granting a discriminatory credit allowance.

4. The granting in any form of adjustments, allowances, discounts, credits, or refunds to purchasers or sellers of coal, for the purposes or with the effect of altering retroactively a price previously agreed upon, in such manner as to create price discrimination.

5. The predating or postdating of any invoice or contract for the purchase or sale of coal, except to conform to a bona-fide agreement for the purchase or sale entered into on the predate.

6. The payment or allowance in any form or by any device of rebates, refunds, credits, or unearned discounts, or the extension to certain purchasers of services or privileges not extended to all purchasers under like terms and conditions, or under similar circumstances.

7. The attempt to purchase business, or to obtain information concerning a competitor's business by concession, gifts, or bribes.

8. The intentional misrepresentation of any analysis or of analyses, or of sizes, or the intentional making, causing, or permitting to be made, or publishing, of any false, untrue, misleading, or deceptive statement by way of advertising, invoicing, or otherwise concerning the size, quality, character, nature, preparation, or origin of any coal bought, sold, or consigned.

9. The unauthorized use, whether in written or oral form, of trade marks, trade names, slogans, or advertising matter already adopted by a competitor, or any deceptive approximation thereof.

10. Inducing or attempting to induce, by any means or device whatsoever, a breach of contract between a competitor and his customer during the term of such contract.

11. Splitting or dividing commissions, brokers' fees, or brokerage discounts, or otherwise in any manner directly or indirectly using brokerage commissions or jobbers' arrangements or sales agencies for making discounts, allowances, or rebates, or prices other than those determined under this act, to any industrial consumer or to any retailers, or to others, whether of a like or different class.

12. Selling to, or through, any broker, jobber, commission account, or sales agency, which is in fact or in effect an agency or an instrumentality of a retailer or an industrial consumer or of an organization of retailers or industrial consumers, whereby they or any of them secure either directly or indirectly a discount, dividend, allowance, or rebates, or a price other than that determined in the manner prescribed by this act.

(j) The Commission shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine written complaints made by any code member, district board, State or political subdivision of a State, or the consumers' counsel, which charge any violation of the code specified in part II of this section. It shall make and publish rules and regulations for the consideration and hearing of any such complaint, and all interested parties shall be required to conform thereto. The Commission shall make due effort toward adjustment of such complaints and shall endeavor to compose the differences of the parties, and shall make such order or orders in the premises, from time to time, as the facts and the circumstances warrant. Any such order shall be subject to review as are other orders of the Commission.

(k) In the investigation of any complaint or violation of the code, or of any rule or regulation the observance of which is required under the terms thereof, the Commission shall have power by order to require such reports from, and shall be given access to inspect the books and records of, code members to the extent deemed necessary for the purpose of determining the complaint. Any such order shall be subject to review as are other orders of the Commission.

(l) The provisions of this section shall not apply to coal consumed by the producer or to coal transported by the producer to himself for consumption by him.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU: Page 25, line 15, after the period, insert a new sentence as follows:

"It shall not be an unfair method of competition or a violation of the code or any requirement of this act: (1) To sell to or through any bona fide and legitimate farmers' cooperative organization duly organized under the laws of any State, Territory, the District of Columbia, or the United States, whether or not such organization grants rebates, discounts, patronage dividends, or other similar benefits to its members; (2) to sell through any intervening agency to any such cooperative organization; or (3) to pay or allow to any such cooperative organization or to any such intervening agency any discount, commission, rebate, or dividend ordinarily paid, or allowed, or permitted by the code to be paid or allowed to other purchasers for purchases in wholesale or middleman quantities."

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I call the committee's attention to the fact that this amendment would add a new sentence on page 25 at line 15 as a part of paragraph 12.

The sole purpose of this amendment is to provide that the restrictions of paragraph 12 shall not apply to farmers' cooperatives and farmers' cooperatives only. This provision is, I believe, in identical terms, or substantially so, with a similar provision in the original Guffey Act. The Guffey Act exempted farm cooperatives. This identical provision was also contained in the original bill introduced during this session by the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky. I copied the language from his original bill. The Committee on Ways and Means struck out this language before they introduced the new bill and before the new bill was reported to the House during this session.

This amendment merely provides that farmers' cooperatives which are organized under the laws of the United States or the laws of the various States may buy this coal for distribution among its own members without going through the ordinary selling agencies.

Paragraph 12 as now written includes among unfair trade practices the sale to or through any broker, jobber, commission account, or sales agency which is in fact or in effect an agency or an instrumentality of a retailer or industrial consumer or of an organization of retailers or industrial consumers whereby they get these price benefits, rebates, discounts, or, in other words, a smaller price than they would otherwise receive.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered merely exempts from the provisions of this bill the farmers' cooperatives so that these cooperatives may buy coal in a community where they have cheese factories and distribute that coal to the various cheese factories, thereby being able to secure the coal at a lower price. It does not mean, as I understand it—and if I am in error I would appreciate it if the gentleman from Kentucky would correct me—that they will be exempted from the payment of the tax. It means they will be exempted from the provisions of the law and the code, which would prohibit the cooperatives from being selling organizations. They would still pay the tax. Because of the fact these cheese factories, owned by farmers, are quite far removed from cities, where there is the opportunity to buy this coal, they should be able to buy a carload of coal, perhaps, and sell it among the farmers in the community, saving an amount that would otherwise be paid to the broker or agent.

This is not a great departure and it is not an unreasonable advantage to give to farmers' cooperatives. It is just good common sense. Those people are not living in a city. They live out in the country and they should have the advantage of this lower price by being able to buy coal in larger quantities and distributing it among their own members. I want to emphasize this fact, and if I am in error I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will correct me. This amendment does not exempt them from paying the tax. It merely gives them the opportunity to distribute coal among the members of the cooperatives without the middleman's profit. May I say again this paragraph appeared in the original Guffey Coal Act and it was also contained in the bill introduced during this session by the gentleman from Kentucky, and I refer to the original bill introduced by him.

Mr. Chairman, the adoption of this amendment is just good, sound common sense. It will not disrupt the philosophy of the bill and I hope therefore the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. May I say to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] I received a letter the other day from A. G. Keeney, president of the Farmers Union in Nebraska, who is very much interested in retaining this section in the bill. The members of that organization were satisfied with the section when it appeared in the original bill and they are very much interested in seeing that the section is retained in this bill; therefore they asked me to say something to the membership of the House on this question.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I want to emphasize the fact that the farmers' cooperatives and the farmers themselves will still pay this tax. They will still be paying for the operation of this bill through the increased price of coal. We are not asking to be exempted from that particular provision.

We recognize the need for this type of legislation in the coal industry and there is no attempt on the part of the cooperative farm organizations of this country to disrupt or do anything that will impair the efficiency of this bill. We are all for it and we are going to support it. We merely ask for this one small concession that will not in any sense disrupt the smooth working of the bill. It will give the farmers' cooperatives an advantage they should have. I hope the members of the committee may see their way clear to adopt this amendment.

Mr. FORD of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FORD of California. I think this is a good amendment, but may I ask the gentleman, might it not impair the bill before the Court on the ground of discrimination, because this bill will come before the Court again?

Mr. BOILEAU. I do not believe it will, I will say to the gentleman from California. I do not see how it could. This merely exempts them. As a matter of fact, there are other provisions in the bill that exempt the United States, States, municipal governments, and so forth. This does not exempt the farmers to the same extent that Government units are exempted, for instance, because the latter are exempted from payment of the tax. We are paying the tax and my amendment merely provides that this bill shall not prevent the cooperatives from the orderly marketing of this commodity among their own members, and it is of great importance to the farmers. It does not provide that these cooperatives shall not pay the tax. Out in the country where these farmers' cooperatives want to buy coal and distribute it among the cheese factories, in which considerable coal is used, and they are not individually able to buy in carload lots, this will result in a considerable saving.

Mr. Chairman, I appeal to the members of the committee to accept this amendment, and I may say in accepting the amendment you will be making a very fine gesture to the cooperative movement in this country which is trying to cooperate with you and are willing to support this measure.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Would this amendment affect city people who happened to belong to a cooperative?

Mr. BOILEAU. My amendment applies only to farmers' cooperatives. It is the same language as appeared in the original Guffey bill and in the bill as originally offered by the gentleman from Kentucky. I anticipate the gentleman's question—why should it not apply to the cities?

Mr. O'MALLEY. That is right.

Mr. BOILEAU. We are out in the country. We do not have a coal agent out there in every community of the country. They want the right to buy the coal in large lots, and the right to distribute it to the individual members of the cooperatives.

Mr. O'MALLEY. We have buying cooperatives in the city. Why should they not receive the same advantage as the farm cooperative?

Mr. BOILEAU. This is an entirely different situation, because it applies to a commodity that is not readily available out in the country, whereas it is readily available in the cities. The only way to make a decent saving is to buy by carload lots.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin stated that this provision was in the original Guffey bill. In that respect the gentleman is unintentionally mistaken. This provision was not in the original Guffey bill but was inserted as a amendment in the Senate.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I will be glad to.

Mr. BOILEAU. I mean the bill passed last year. If I am in error in that respect, I will accept the statement of the gentleman, who knows more about it than I do. I thought such a provision was in the act that was passed by the Congress. It was not in the original Guffey bill as introduced in the House, but it was in the act.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is correct in that respect.

Mr. BOILEAU. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. What does this provision mean? It means nothing. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] included it in the bill he introduced this year, which was a natural thing to do. I would hesitate to ask my friend the gentleman from Kentucky if he knows what it means. Nobody on the committee knows what it means.

Let us assume that it means what the gentleman from Wisconsin says it does—to give the farmer cooperatives an advantage. Why should they have any advantage over the consumer cooperatives? If you include both, you are going to seriously affect this bill.

Section 12 relates to hidden agreements, hidden understandings on the part of the producer with the retailer or the wholesaler or the agency which takes coal orders.

Paragraph 12 is aimed at one of the vicious practices of unfair competition. Yet, my friend asks that his amendment be adopted, which will permit the farmers' cooperatives to enter into such agreements. I know the gentleman does not mean that. What the gentleman has in mind, as I understand, is that farmer cooperatives may be enabled to buy coal at a lower rate. His amendment will not accomplish that. The farmer cooperative, it is true, will pay the one-half of 1 percent the same as anyone else, but the farmer cooperative has to pay the producer the minimum price, as does anybody else. This amendment gives no advantage to the farmer cooperative; and if it did, the same advantage should be given to the consumer cooperatives. There is no reason why we should make fish of one and flesh of another.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Certainly; I will be glad to yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. If it is effective, as the gentleman from Wisconsin claims, it violates every fundamental principle of this bill, does it not?

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly.

Paragraph 12 relates "to selling to or through any broker, jobber, commission account, or sales agency." By whom? By the producer, from and purchased of the producer at the mine. And, remember, this bill applies only to coal mined. It does not at all apply to the middleman. If there are any secret or hidden agreements, as herein stated, made by a producer with a middleman, it constitutes unfair competition. Naturally we want to prevent that. Paragraph 12 is for that purpose.

If this amendment, which is intended to relate to paragraph 12, is adopted, it means that the farmer cooperatives are asking for something the members do not want and certainly would not want. They do not want to have the right, in my opinion, to enter into secret agreements with the producers of coal—

Whereby they or any of them secure, either directly or indirectly, a discount, dividend, allowance, or rebates, or a price other than that determined in the manner prescribed by this act.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Gladly.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman agree with me that the only purpose that could be served by this amendment would be to permit the farm cooperatives to buy directly from the mines?

Mr. McCORMACK. They can do it now.

Mr. BOILEAU. They cannot do it now if they sell to others, because it says that this shall be an unfair trade practice, and unfair trade practices shall include—

Selling to or through any broker, jobber, commission account, or sales agency which is in fact or in effect an agency or an instrumentality of a retailer or an industrial consumer or of an organization of retailers or industrial consumers.

Mr. McCORMACK. But then continue. I know; wait a while. Whereby they do what? They secure, either directly or indirectly, advantages which constitute unfair competition.

Mr. BOILEAU. "Or a price other than that determined in the manner prescribed by this act."

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOILEAU. I want to clarify this.

Mr. McCORMACK. I realize what the gentleman has in mind, but the gentleman's amendment will seek, if anything, an objective for which the gentleman does not stand for—the permitting of unfair competition.

Mr. BOILEAU. I agree with the gentleman on that principle. As far as unfair competition is concerned, I am perfectly willing to have those provisions in the act. But under this paragraph 12, as I understand it, if a group of farmers——

Mr. McCORMACK. A group of farmers who have formed a cooperative.

Mr. BOILEAU. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. All right.

Mr. BOILEAU. If a group of farmers in conjunction with other groups of farmers who have other cooperatives should buy coal to distribute directly from the mine to these cooperative cheese factories in the community, they could not buy in that way because they would be buying through——

Mr. McCORMACK. Absolutely, they can.

Mr. BOILEAU. Another agency.

Mr. McCORMACK. No; that is not true. My friend has it wrong. We will assume we are two farmer cooperatives. The gentleman from Kentucky, or any gentleman here, let us say the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS], is a producer. You and I can go and buy of this gentleman, but we have to pay the minimum price. That is all. He pays the tax; we do not. We can go to him, and if the minimum price of his district is $1.90 a ton f. o. b. mine, we can both buy of him. There is nothing to stop us.

Mr. BOILEAU. If a broker or agent buys coal and sells to various cooperatives who are industrial consumers, he would be prohibited from carrying on that operation under paragraph 12 if he gave any price discrimination or any lower price because of the volume.

Mr. McCORMACK. I have just explained to the gentleman that cooperatives can go and buy, for instance, of the gentleman from California, who is a producer, but cannot buy lower than the minimum price. Neither can anyone else, and neither should they be able to do so, and I am sure the gentleman would not want them to be able to do so.

Mr. BOILEAU. That is right.

Mr. McCORMACK. You can go and buy at the minimum price, and you can sell to the members of your cooperative at a fair profit if you want to.

Mr. BOILEAU. If it is an industrial consumer, under this provision I cannot sell to him and give him the advantage of the lower price which I would be able to give him otherwise.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Let me explain to my friend that this bill does not apply at all to the consumer. This bill does not at all apply to the middleman who has no secret agreements with a producer. This particular paragraph only applies to a sales agent, where such sales agent and the producer have made a hidden agreement to give the sales agent an advantage which is not given to those who are buying at the mine.

Let me go further. If the gentleman represented a farm cooperative, and the minimum price in the district where the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] has a mine is $1.90 per ton, the gentleman can go and buy as an individual sales agent of the gentleman from California at the same price of $1.90. The gentleman or the farm cooperative, unless there is a hidden agreement, can sell this coal for $1.50 a ton to the consumer, if it wants to take a 40-cent loss, if there are no hidden agreements that violate this bill; but if there are any hidden agreements, the law should apply to farm cooperatives the same as to individuals.

There is nothing about this bill, I assure the gentleman from Wisconsin, that prevents a farm cooperative from paying the minimum price, and if it has not had a hidden agreement with the producer the cooperative can sell the coal in any way it wants and for any price it wants to. This bill does not prevent a cooperative from distributing any profits made out of the sale of bituminous coal, just the same as it distributes its profits now. If I understand my friend correctly, he fears, under this bill, that that could be done. In this respect the gentleman is in error. A farm cooperative is in no way affected unless it makes hidden agreements, which no such organization wants or intends to do. Neither does my distinguished friend from Wisconsin.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconin [Mr. BOILEAU].

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU)—ayes 15, noes 45.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts: On page 20, lines 24 and 25, strike out the words "January 6, 1937", and insert in lieu thereof the words "the day of approval of this act."

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I am certain we all appreciate the necessity for legislation in the coal industry, but I am equally certain that each one of us is anxious to obtain for the coal industry the best kind of legislation.

It has been true in the past that oftentimes we have criticized the Supreme Court when such criticism was not justified. Sometimes this criticism could be leveled at ourselves because of the hasty enactment of a bill.

We have here on page 20 a statement that says:

The provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to a lawful and bona-fide written contract entered into prior to January 6, 1937.

I now address my remarks particularly to those in the House who are legally minded, because, as I understand the original coal bills, they practically invalidated contracts which did not conform with them. This is the first time we have this change in any coal bill to a date certain. Why was that date picked upon to set the dead line as to whether or not contracts would be valid or invalid? The reason, Mr. Chairman, is this: January 6, 1937, was the date upon which Senator GUFFEY introduced his bill (S. 1) in the Senate. Obviously, setting a date certain, after which contracts are declared to be invalid, does not make it a legal proposition any more than the provisions in the former coal bills which the gentleman evidently felt was unconstitutional.

Now, I do not think the unconstitutional setting of a date here that invalidates contracts from that time until the passage of the bill will render this entire bill unconstitutional.

But I do think the Supreme Court will strike it out, and I think it is our duty to send through this House the most efficient kind of legislation. If we are going to select a date upon which, prior thereto, contracts shall be valid, and after which they shall be invalid, and we do set that date as when any Representative or Senator shall drop a bill in the hopper, then I say the businessmen of this country cannot enter into even the ordinary affairs of business with any sense of security, and the business affairs of this country will be in a sorry state. I hope the Members will adopt this amendment, not only because it is good common sense, but also because it is legal, and it is our duty to pass the most efficient and legal measures that we can, and keep them within the Constitution.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The only difference between constitutional and unconstitutional are two letters, "u" and "n." I grant that Members are privileged to throw rocks at other Members' efforts, whether they are pebbles or brickbats. I say this particularly for the RECORD, in behalf of the Ways and Means Committee which gave this particular section very careful consideration, and somewhat in defense of myself as the author of the bill, this section was very closely scrutinized, and we concluded it meets the legal test. My good friend CASEY—and I think he is one of the most splendid young chaps I have known since I have been here—is a rather late convert to coal stabilization. He means well, I feel certain, but the crowd around him do not want coal legislation at all.

This section is vital to the bill. As a matter of fact, I am inclined to think that the date should be moved back further than January 6, 1937, but the committee, after careful consideration, fixed that date, and my friend, lovable as he is, does not know why that date was fixed. It was fixed because that was the date that two bills were introduced—H. R. 2015 in the House, by myself, and an identical bill introduced in the Senate by Senator GUFFEY. This language was prepared by Mr. John Dickinson, Assistant Attorney General. It takes the place of language that I had in the former act dealing with the same thought. Personally, I thought the other language was somewhat better, but I yielded to the opinion of the Assistant Attorney General, who argued the case before the Supreme Court. It is customary in order to protect legislation such as this to fix a dead line as notice to the country that this sort of legislation is being considered, so that people cannot go out and make long-term contracts below the minimum price and defeat the purpose of the bill. Upon January 6, 1937, notice was served that this legislation might be enacted.

I shall read now the language of the Supreme Court in support of our argument that this section is valid. Nothing could be plainer, nothing can be clearer, than that Congress has the right to include this kind of language to protect its legislation. There are a number of cases that I might cite, but more particularly I refer to the case of the L. & N. Railroad v. Motley (219 U. S., 467) and the cases of the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co. v. Schubert (224 U. S., 603), Radio Commission v. Nelson Bros. Co. (289 U. S., 266, 282), and Norman v. B. & O. R. R. Co. (294 U. S., 240, 306).

The case of the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co. against Schubert is particularly in point. The second Employers' Liability Act provided:

That any contract, rule, regulation, or device whatsoever, the purpose or intent of which shall be to enable any common carrier to exempt itself from any liability created by this act, shall to that extent be void: Provided, That in any action brought against any such common carrier under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this act, such common carrier may set off therein any sum it has contributed or paid to any insurance, relief benefit, or indemnity that may have been paid to the injured employee or the person entitled thereto on account of the injury or death for which said action was brought.

I am quoting the statute because that is the background for the discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentuck has expired.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. The Court construed this section as intended to apply to existing as well as to future contracts, and, as thus construed, the section was held valid. The Court said, at page 613:

The power of Congress, in its regulation of interstate commerce, and of commerce in the District of Columbia and in the Territories, to impose this liability was not fettered by the necessity of maintaining existing arrangements and stipulations which would conflict with the execution of its policy. To subordinate the exercise of the Federal authority to the continuing operation of previous contracts would be to place, to this extent, the regulation of interstate commerce in the hands of private individuals and to withdraw from the control of Congress so much of the field as they might choose by prophetic discernment to bring within the range of their agreements. The Constitution recognizes no such limitation. It is of the essence of the delegated power of regulation that, within its sphere, Congress should be able to establish uniform rules, immediately obligatory, which as to future action should transcend all inconsistent provisions. Prior arrangements were necessarily subject to this paramount authority.

Certainly. The Supreme Court said that was necessary to be done in order to defeat the "prophetic discernment to bring within the range of their agreements."

In other words, the Supreme Court recognizes what would be done if you did not protect against "prophetic discernment." Men would go out and make long-term contracts and defeat the purposes of the act.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FORD of California. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I supported the original Guffey bill, which was invalidated by the Supreme Court. I also supported the second Guffey coal bill, which passed this House but was defeated the last night of the previous session of Congress in another body. I still support H. R. 4985 because it will, I believe, serve to bring order out of chaos in the bituminous coal regions of the United States, and because I believe it will effectively, as did the N. R. A., bring to that industry a decent measure of order; and because I believe that it will also enable the 400,000 men who work in the coal regions to secure a decent wage and an opportunity to enjoy a decent American standard of living.

I am not particularly interested in the profits of the coal-mine owners; they are able to take care of that. But I am vitally interested in the welfare of these 400,000 miners who, with their families, constitute a population of approximately 2,000,000 people. It is my hope that this House will pass H. R. 4985 so that these miners and their families will be given a decent opportunity to once more work in an industry of which they are a vital part by reason of the fact that they have been employed in it practically all their lives.

The coal industry has been one of the sore spots socially. Through the blind greed of its owners and its lack of consideration for the men who are employed in it, it has become economically unsound. By reason of this condition and of its interstate character, it has become necessary for the Federal Government to take some action to try to help these coal barons save themselves and the industry, because they do not seem to have the social vision or the business foresight to do it themselves.

I am therefore supporting H. R. 4985 because its objectives, though limited to meet the objections of the Supreme Court—a Court which apparently is determined to base its legal decisions solely on its economic predilections.

These objectives will, I believe, inure to the social and economic welfare of 2,000,000 human beings. It is in their welfare that I am interested.

For that reason I am supporting H. R. 4985.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise only to address an inquiry to the Committee. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FRED M. VINSON] that I had intended to offer an amendment, and I was afraid it might commend itself to the grace of the Committee and might be adopted.

I notice in the language on page 10, beginning in line 22, that safeguarding language has been included in the bill to prevent more than one officer or employee of a code member within a district from becoming a member of the district board at the same time.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. What is the gentleman's understanding as to the membership of the board?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I understand exactly the language of the bill, but here is the question that I think will be raised as time goes on, and I wondered whether the committee had given some attention to it. Let us assume four good-sized coal companies, operating as corporate entities under their own names, and all four of them controlled by a larger corporation, through the ownership of 51 percent of the stock. Manifestly, you have five large mines under one control. If it were possible for the subsidiary companies to be represented on the district board at one and the same time, a condition is created whereby a single coal unit, for instance, in a separate district, would exercise more control than is contemplated in the language of the bill. I had in mind an amendment in line 23, using this language:

Provided, That not more than one officer or employee of any code member or of any subsidiary of a code member within a district shall be a member of the district board at the same time.

Not knowing whether the matter had been considered before the committee, I was rather reluctant to offer the amendment.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I believe the gentleman will agree with me that the language in the bill will do a pretty good job to start with.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think it will, but I will say to the gentleman that question is going to come up in my own State sometime, because that condition exists there right now.

Some other refinements in the text of the bill have occurred to me, but taken as a whole I favor the enactment of this measure. I recall the debate on the Guffey coal bill, both in the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses. I voted for both measures. I shall vote for the pending measure because of a conviction that something must be done for the bituminous-coal industry and because I feel that the present Guffey-Vinson bill can be constitutionally sustained.

Coal has had a hard row. Little more than 150 years ago coal was not used as fuel. Only after the wood supply for use in the iron smelters of England had been exhausted did they turn to coal for fuel. The labor of keeping the mines free from water by means of hand pumps was so onerous that it furnished the incentive to James Watt for inventing a steam engine hitched to a pump to do this work. Coal begot steam and steam fathered coal, and its use in steamships, on locomotives, and in industry built the empire of coal.

It is a huge industry. The average annual output of coal would make a cube one-half mile in each dimension. Coal is an absolute necessity. To anyone who disputes that fact, he need but witness the dismay in some humble household in the colder regions of the country that is without coal on a winter day. It is worth all the logic in the books to establish that it is a necessity. So we look at an industry which supplies one of the basic necessities to ascertain why it is a sick industry. That it is a sick industry can hardly be disputed either.

Consider the unemployment in the coal industry, the ruinous price competition, the abandoned mines, the ghost towns that result from abandoned mines, the shifting production, the exhaustion of coal resources, the unrestricted latitude in opening up new mines in an industry already overproduced, the present effort to keep up an overproduction that began during the war, the mining of the most accessible coal for the purpose of meeting price competition and thereby wasting vast coal resources, the ruination of abandoned mines by water and you get a dismal picture that readily justifies the contention that the coal industry is sick.

A concrete evidence of its malady can be obtained in any coal-producing State. Contemplate, if you will, the meaning of the figures in this brief table:

Coal statistics for Illinois

Year	Average days worked	Base wage	Average annual wage	Tons	Men employed
1918	238	$5.70	$1,356.60	89,291,105	85,965
1922	120	7.50	900.00	58,467,796	96,336
1927	114	7.50	855.00	46,848,224	76,970
1932	107	5.00	535.00	33,474,553	47,597
1935	160	5.50	880.00	45,013,278	49,100

That table needs little explanation. It explains itself. Note the fluctuation in the working days in the coal industry in Illinois. Note the change in the basic wage. Note particularly the range of average annual income from a high of $1,356.60 in the war year of 1918 to the low of $535 in the depression year of 1932. Note the change in annual tonnage and note also that about one-half as many miners were employed in 1935 as in 1922. What happened to the rest of the miners? Unless they found employment in other lines, they have been compelled to go on relief. Truly, the coal industry has been and is a sick industry.

What made it a sick industry? Many factors furnish the answer. First, consider the effect of competitive fuels on the coal industry. Electric energy now provides about 11 percent of the Nation's heat and power. Promotion of electric power has been generously subsidized by hundreds of millions of dollars from the Federal Treasury. Muscle Shoals, Boulder Dam, Bonneville Dam, and the Grand Coulee Dam bear witness to that fact. In interstate commerce, electric energy is regulated by the Federal Power Commission. In intrastate commerce, rates are fixed by the various utility commissions. Every electric utility is guaranteed a rate that will yield a definite income on invested capital. Why not give "coal" a break? Fixing rates is but another name for fixing prices. While the growth of generation of electric energy has already contributed to the chaos in coal, it is but a circumstance to the tribulation that may be in store for the coal industry when the many subsidized power dams get into operation. Grand Coulee when completed will be able to produce eight billion kilowatts of firm power annually and more than four billion of secondary power. Boulder Dam has a capacity of more than four billion kilowatts of firm power and one and one-half billion of secondary power. Having been so generous in building up vast resources of electric energy by dipping into the Federal Treasury, is it not time to do something in behalf of the chaotic coal industry?

Now consider the competition from natural gas. It is produced in more than 24 States and consumed in 35 States. The record discloses that 1,765 billion cubic feet are produced annually which show a revenue of almost $400,000,000 per year. Transportation charges alone on natural gas aggregate $260,000,000 per year alone. There are approximately 8,000,000 consumers of natural gas; 50,000 miles of pipe lines now underlie the surface of the Nation. Natural gas, like electric energy has been the object of Government solicitude. In the Seventy-fourth Congress, the United States Senate passed a companion bill to H. R. 12,680 introduced by Representative LEA, of California, which gave the Federal Power Commission jurisdiction over natural gas in commerce. This bill conferred authority upon the Federal Power Commission to hold hearings, fix rates, and suspend rates, whereas in intrastate commerce, State utility commissions can fix rates that guarantee a fair return. Here then is price fixing for natural gas, a competitor of coal. Why not give coal a "break"?

The third important competitor of coal is petroleum. Today we have domestic-oil burners, oil-burning locomotives, and oil-burning vessels, not to speak of Diesel motors, which are gradually replacing steam plants for a vast variety of uses. In 1910 we produced but 175,000,000 barrels of petroleum; in 1934 production had reached 908,000,000 barrels. Imports of petroleum, ranging up to 125,000,000 barrels in 1921, further aggravate the lot of the coal industry. Ninety-three thousand miles of pipe lines now convey this black gold into interstate commerce. Shall we stand idly by as petroleum usurps the markets of the coal industry and confess that we are helpless to aid coal?

In addition to competition from competitive fuels, the coal industry has suffered from increased industrial efficiency in the use of coal. From 1919 to 1930 the amount of coal required to generate a kilowatt of electric energy has decreased by 49 percent. Sir Frank Edward Smith, K. C. B. and noted British engineer, reports as follows:

> In 1913 it took 1,083 tons of coal to produce a million units of electric energy; in 1934, it took 661 tons.

Yes; our efficiency, desirable as it is, has only helped to aggravate the instability in the bituminous-coal industry. Competitive fuels and greater efficiency can put a coal mine out of business; but what of the miners, what of the invested capital? You can abandon a mine, but you dare not abandon the miners. They are entitled to our consideration.

If you concede that coal is a sick industry, what kind of a remedy shall we apply? We might nationalize the coal industry, as has been suggested, but who would care to project the Government into the coal business? We might suggest industrial self-government, but how effective would it be over a wide area; with differing wage scales, different grades of coal, different shipping facilities? That is the heart of the trouble now. We might follow a laissez-faire policy, but that is only the law of the jungle with a fancy name. If none of these will do, there remains some form of Federal regulation.

The broad basis for such regulation should be a constant supply of coal at prices that are consistent with mining costs, a decent livelihood for the miners, and a proper regard for the conservation of coal resources. Once wasted, these resources can never be replaced.

The pending bill for the regulation of the sale and distribution of bituminous coal by a Federal commission with plenary power, armed with an excise tax that is substantial in amount, appears to be the best solution for the moment. At least it is worthy of a trial and can be improved as time goes on.

It is objected that the tax is a penalty. What other means of enforcement is available in securing cooperation within the industry to dispel chaos and instability? It is contended that it constitutes price fixing. So it does. But what of price fixing today for coal's competitors, electricity and gas? It is contended that it will raise prices to the consumer. It probably will. Nobody wants the coal miner to work for a starvation wage, nor wants the employers to operate their mines at a loss. Only recently labor and steel reached an accord. The next day the price of steel was increased from $3 to $8 per ton. If there is to be prosperity for the miners and a decent profit for management and stockholders, it can be achieved only at a price; and I believe the public will share this reasonable view. This plan has been called a little "N. R. A.", and it is said that it will effect monopoly. If that were true, can it not be said that we have monopolies in petroleum, gas, and electricity today, all of which share generously in the bounty of State and National Governments?

When all is said and done, we are faced with the stern fact that you cannot move a coal mine as you would an industrial plant in order to meet competition. The existing mines must be operated or abandoned. If a mine is to be operated, it is entitled to a fair return on the investment. If it is to be abandoned, what about the miners? We cannot abandon them. I have seen too many of these ghost towns that are in distress today because mines were abandoned. You cannot abandon to its fate an industry whose product slipped from 580,000,000 tons in 1918 to 209,000,000 tons in 1932, and the value of whose product slipped from $2,000,000,000 in 1918 to $406,000,000 in 1932. Something must be done, and this appears to be the best remedy that we can apply. It constitutes a beginning and can be improved as time goes on.

Now comes the bogeyman of constitutionality. I, along with others, have examined the decision in the Carter Coal Co. case in which the original Guffey Act was invalidated. Clearly the Court stated that Congress had no power to control hours and wages. The Chief Justice concurred in this view, but stated that Congress did have power to fix prices in interstate commerce. The three dissenting judges stated that the opinion of the Court began at the wrong end and that the complainants were crying before they were hurt. It appears also that the matter of price fixing is an open one.

Under such circumstances, what should be the rule of a Member of Congress where the question of constitutionality is one which each must decide for himself? Obviously it is a perplexing question, and no Member of this body would care to record himself in favor of a measure which might be patently unconstitutional. I believe that James Bradley Thayer, noted writer on law and author of an essay on the Origin and Scope of the American Doctrine of Constitutional Law, has this to say on page 22 of his essay:

> This rule recognizes that, having regard to the great complex, ever-unfolding exigences of government, much which will seem unconstitutional to one man or body of men, may reasonably not seem so to another; that the Constitution often admits of different interpretations; that there is often a range of choice and judgment; that in such cases the Constitution does not impose upon the Legislature any once specific opinion but leaves open this range of choice; and that whatever choice is rational is constitutional.

As a Member of this body I am persuaded that this is a rational application of a rational remedy and that it will square with our organic law, and therefore I shall support it.

May I add one word about the increase in the excise tax from 13½ to 19½ percent. I believe this increase is in the interest of the better and more effective enforcement of the act. We are witnessing today a great expansion in the production of coal by strip mining. It has now become practicable for strip-mining operations to remove 15 feet of overburden for every foot of underlying coal. That means that 60 feet of earth can be removed to dig up a 4-foot vein of coal with huge electric shovels of 20-cubic-yard capacity, and do so at a profit. The advantage has been on the side of strip-mine operators as against pit mines, and hence an effective tax is necessary to bring all coal production into line. May I add parenthetically that the matter of strip-mine operations must one day have the diligent attention of the various States. Not only is a vast acreage of land completely destroyed by such operations but in addition a vast amount of taxable property is destroyed. Once the coal is taken out, the operations are abandoned, leaving only vast fields of high ridges that cannot be taxed. Today most progressive municipalities have zoning ordinances under which the use and the intensity of use of property is carefully regulated. Is it too much to hope that in the days to come States, too, will give attention to strip-mining operations if it can be demonstrated that there is need for regulation in the public interest?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts: Page 26, line 15, add the following:

"(m) Anything herein to the contrary notwithstanding, no producer of bituminous coal shall be required to sell the coals produced by him at prices higher than will be sufficient to realize for such producer the aggregate costs of production and sale of such coals."

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, lest there be any confusion, I think that every bill at present in either the Senate or the House has for its purpose helping the producers achieve a reasonable profit. None of these bills attempt to help the coal miner directly. They all attempt to help him indirectly, because the labor provisions in the original coal bill were stricken out by the Supreme Court. What you have here in all of these bills is an attempt to help the coal industry by helping the producer arrive at a reasonable profit.

The pending bill bases practically everything upon costs of production. It does not base it, however, upon the individual producer's cost of production; it bases it upon pooling all of the producers in a given area—the good, the bad, and the indifferent together—and taking an average minimum price.

My amendment merely states that the individual producer who is efficient, who can operate his mine efficiently, who has the right kind of machinery, up-to-date machinery, will not be required to sell above the aggregate cost of production. In other words, it does not deprive the individual producer of the profit which he should get because he can operate his mine efficiently, but it does accomplish what every bill touching this subject has sought to accomplish, the elimination of cutthroat competition.

What does cutthroat competition mean? It means that a producer sells below his cost of production in order to get business away from a fellow producer. This is what cutthroat competition means. No man can be accused of cutthroat competition who sells at a profit or at or above his cost of production. That is a matter of fair business methods. But if you allow this bill to go through without this amendment, you are going to have a great variance in the price of coal, because in minimum-price area no. 1 the N. R. A. statistics show that the weighted average cost was approximately $1.85 per ton, whereas the individual producers' costs varied from $1.52 to $3.18 per ton. I want you particularly to notice this spread in prices. The pending bill, therefore, would require the $1.52 producer to sell his coal on a $1.85 basis simply because other producers in his area were so inefficient as to have higher costs. Now, I say the consumers ought to be considered. The public should be allowed to buy coal at lower prices from those producers who, because of good business management, are able to show a profit at a lower price than their competitors operating under inefficient methods. The consuming public and the farmers, who buy farm implements, are entitled to the benefits of this amendment.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman has been talking a great deal about producers. What effect will his amendment have upon the price of coal to the consumer?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. This amendment, if adopted, would greatly aid the consumer in buying coal at a reasonable price. If it is not adopted, there will be greatly increased prices for the consumer to pay. The consumer should get the benefit of the individual producers' efficiency with his modern machinery; but the bill without this amendment will make the consumer pay the spread between the efficient producer and the inefficient producer.

Mr. TREADWAY. Then the gentleman feels that this measure accomplishes mere stabilization of price and that it will mean increased prices for the consumer, does he?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I certainly do.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORGANIZATION OF THE CODE

SEC. 5. (a) Upon the appointment of the Commission it shall at once promulgate said code and assist in the organization of the district boards as provided for in section 4, and shall prepare and supply to all coal producers forms of acceptance for membership therein. Such forms of acceptances, when executed, shall be acknowledged before any official authorized to take acknowledgments.

(b) The membership of any such coal producer in such code and his right to an exemption from the taxes imposed by section 3 (b) of this act, may be revoked by the Commission upon written complaint by any code member or district board, or any State or political subdivision of a State, or the consumers' counsel, after a hearing, with 30 days' written notice to the member, upon proof that such member has willfully violated any provision of the code or any regulation made thereunder; and in such a hearing any code member or district board, or any State or political subdivision of a State, or the consumers' counsel, or any consumer or employee, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, shall be entitled to present evidence and be heard: Provided, That the Commission, in its discretion, may in such case make an order directing the code member to cease and desist from violations of the code and regulations made thereunder and upon failure of the code member to comply with such order the Commission may apply to a circuit court of appeals to enforce such order in accordance with the provisions of subsection (c) of section 6 or may reopen the case upon 10 days' notice to the code member affected and proceed in the hearing thereof as above provided.

The Commission shall keep a record of the evidence heard by it in any proceeding to cancel or revoke the membership of any code member and its findings of fact, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive upon any proceeding to review the action and order of the Commission in any court of the United States.

In making an order revoking membership in the code as in this subsection provided, the Commission shall specifically find (1) the day or days on which the violations occurred; (2) the quantity of coal sold or otherwise disposed of in violation of the code or regulations thereunder; (3) the sales price at the mine or the market value at the mine if disposed of otherwise than by sale at the mine, or if sold otherwise than through an arms' length transaction, of the coal sold or otherwise disposed of by such code member in violation of the code or regulations thereunder; (4) the minimum price established by the Commission for such coal and in effect at the time of such sale or other disposal; (5) the amount of tax required to be paid by the code member as a condition to reinstatement to membership in the code as in subsection (c) hereof provided.

(c) Any producer whose membership in the code and whose right to an exemption from the tax imposed by section 3 (b) of this act shall have been revoked and canceled may apply to the Commission and shall have the right to have his membership in the code restored upon payment by him to the United States of one and one-half times the amount of the tax provided in section 3 (b) upon the sales price at the mine, or the market value at the mine if disposed of otherwise than by sale at the mine, or if sold otherwise than through an arms' length transaction, of the coal sold or disposed of by the code member in violation of the code or regulations thereunder (but in no case shall such sales price or market value be taken to be less than the minimum price established by the Commission for such coal and in effect at the time of such sale or other disposal), as found by the Commission under subsection (b) hereof. The Commission shall thereupon certify to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and to the collector of internal revenue for the internal revenue collection district in which the producer resides the amount of the required payment as found under clause (5) of subsection (b), and upon payment of such amount of the Commissioner or the collector such officer shall notify the Commission thereof.

(d) Any code member who shall be injured in his business or property by any other code member by reason of the doing of any act which is forbidden or the failure to do any act which is required by this act or by the code or any regulation made thereunder, may sue therefor in any court of competent jurisdiction where the defendant resides, or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

SEC. 6. (a) All rules, regulations, determinations, and promulgations of any district board shall be subject to review by the Commission upon appeal by any producer and upon just cause shown shall be amenable to the order of the Commission; and appeal to the Commission shall be a matter of right in all cases to every producer and to all parties in interest, including any State or any political subdivision thereof. In the event that a district board shall fail, for any reason, to take action authorized or required by this act, then the Commission may take such action in lieu of the district board. The Commission may also provide rules for the determination of controversies arising under this act by voluntary submission thereof to arbitration, which determination shall be final and conclusive.

(b) Any person aggrieved by an order issued by the Commission in a proceeding to which such person is a party may obtain a review of such order in the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States, within any circuit wherein such person resides or has his principal place of business, or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, by filing in such court, within 60 days after the entry of such order, a written petition praying that the order of the Commission be modified or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon any member of the Commission and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record upon which the order complained of was entered. Upon the filing of such transcript such court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to affirm, modify, and enforce or set aside such order, in whole or in part. No objection to the order of the Commission shall be considered by the court unless such objection shall have been urged below. The finding of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commission, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive, and its recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of the original order. The judgment and decree of the court, affirming, modifying, and enforcing or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the Commission shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiarari or certification as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 346 and 347).

The commencement of proceedings under this subsection shall not, unless specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the Commission's order.

(c) If any code member fails or neglects to obey any order of the Commission while the same is in effect, the Commission in its discretion may apply to the circuit court of appeals of the United States within any circuit where such code member resides or carries on business, for the enforcement of its order, and shall certify and file with its application a transcript of the entire record in the proceeding, including all the testimony taken and the report and order of the Commission. Upon such filing of the application and transcript the court shall cause notice thereof to be served upon such code member and thereupon shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein, and shall have power to make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in such transcript a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside the order of the Commission. The findings of the Commission as to facts, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the proceeding before the Commission, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper.

The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts or make new findings, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which if supported by substantial evidence shall be conclusive, and its recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of its original order, with the return of such additional evidence. The judgment and decree of the court shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court upon certiorari or certification as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 346 and 347).

(d) The jurisdiction of the circuit court of appeals of the United States or the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, as the case may be, to enforce, set aside, or modify orders of the Commission shall be exclusive.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts: Page 28, at the end of line 16, add the following:

"The code shall be declared by the Commission to be and shall become effective whenever acceptances for membership therein shall have been received from the producers of two-thirds percent of the aggregate tonnage of bituminous coal determined by the Commission to be subject to the provisions of this act."

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, it has become increasingly apparent to me that Members on the majority side prefer to follow this bill in its entirety. If this be so, then I should not be a lone voice crying in the wilderness. I call your attention, however, for the last time to inequities in the bill, for this is the last amendment I am going to offer. I ask you to consider whether or not this amendment has merit? After all, we were elected as men of judgment to exercise our faculties and not to follow blindly any particular crowd. If we are going to exercise our individual judgments, then I think this amendment will get somewhere; if we are not, then it will meet the fate of the previous amendments.

The proponents of this bill say the industry wants it. They are trying to help the coal industry. It has been said here that the coal producers whom we are trying to help want this bill. If this be an accurate statement, if this be so, if this be correct, then what harm can there be in submitting it to the coal industry, and if 66⅔ percent of the coal industry want this code, that it become a law?

Obviously if you cannot get a majority of 66⅔ percent to favor the code established under this bill, then you are going to run into the same proposition you ran into in the matter of prohibition, that of trying to force down the throats of an industry something they do not want and which will be in disfavor.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. I represent one of the largest coal-mining communities in western Indiana. Both operators and miners have been in my office and said that they wanted the bill passed just as it has been presented to the House. I hope this will be helpful to the gentleman.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. On the other hand, if two-thirds of the membership of the coal industry accept the code, then you are going to have cooperation from the industry itself. You are going to have an effective piece of legislation. It can be made operative over a recalcitrant number of only one-third, whereas now you have no opportunity of knowing how many favor and how many do not favor it. I think the proponents of this bill ought to have the courage to submit this code to the industry and see whether the industry we want to help desires this or does not desire it.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman would not suggest that method with all types of legislation for each industry we would seek to help?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I certainly would agree to the proposition. When we are trying to help any particular group we ought to find out whether or not that group wants it and whether or not the group favors the legislation we are passing.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

When the original coal bill was up for consideration I voted against it. I believe, however, we have a much better bill before us at this time; and realizing the problem of the coal operators, the miners, and those interested in the coal fields of the country at this time, as well as the problem of the consumer in buying coal at a fair price, I am going to vote for this bill. In other words, this is a problem in the various States wherein are located coal mines. We have not any coal mines in my State, South Carolina.

Mr. Chairman, we have similar problems to this in our agricultural States, and I shall speak on one or two of these problems at this time.

One of these problems, and perhaps the most important, is the need of an up-to-date marketing and distributing system whereby farmers' products may be properly distributed when and where there is a demand, and with some bargaining power on the part of farmers, as to a fair price for their products, which they have not today. This is one of the things that will solve many of the problems of agriculture, as far as the South is concerned. I believe that this is true also in other agricultural sections of the United States. Farmers, being unorganized, and because of their financial condition, are unable to properly control production or properly market their farm products. You who represent agricultural districts and I know and the Secretary of Agriculture understands the great need of the Federal Government assisting farmers along this line.

All other well-organized groups, composed of usually few in number, are able to do what I am talking about. Take General Motors: They not only have complete control of their business, but they keep posted as to the trend of business, and they govern their production up or down, accordingly. Not only do they do this, but they are able to market their products from the factory on down to the various States, counties, cities, and small towns to the actual consumer, or purchaser, and at a fixed price. The International Harvester Co., one of the largest manufacturers of farm machinery and farm implements in the United States, is able to do this very same thing. In fact, this is true with all well-organized industries. As a general supply merchant, back in the old days, I used to handle the International Harvester Co.'s line. I was one of their select agents, so to speak. They refused to sell their goods to Tom, Dick, and Harry. Thereby, as stated, they controlled the distribution of their products in an orderly manner, and at fixed prices. This concern made a contract with me, not only fixing the price of farm machinery and implements to me as their agent, but they actually fixed in that contract the price that I had to sell these products for to my farmer customers. I could have sold them cheaper than the fixed price, and still have made a fair profit. But if I did not maintain this fixed price, the contract would have been given to some other merchant who would comply with the requirements of the contract. These well-organized groups are doing the same thing today. These groups, also, properly label their goods, and they spend millions in advertising annually, all of which is charged along with every other item of cost, including a fair profit, and, as stated, their products are properly distributed when and where needed right down to the actual consumer or purchaser at a fixed price.

Farmers are not posted as to the trend of business, or perhaps the actual demand for their various products, and if they were, they could never tell when they planted their various crops just what the harvest would be. They not only have to pay fixed prices on that which they purchase, but they have everything else on the face of the earth, as well as under the earth, the elements and the various insects, to contend with. If for any reason the crop is cut short, and for this reason the price should prove to be fair, they have not the products, and it is no fault of theirs. If the good Lord is willing and they have proper seasons, and happen to have a splendid yield and a good crop, they still have to go to these various agencies and groups that absolutely control the marketing of their products and the fixing of the prices thereon, and ask them: "What will you give me for my vegetables, fruit, or cotton?"

The thing that I want you who are interested in being of service to agriculture to do is to answer me this question: How do you expect farmers to succeed, in that they have to pay fixed prices, while, on the other hand, they have no control or say-so about the price that they receive for that which they produce?

These well-organized groups have been able to wipe out all unnecessary agents and middlemen, and the old haphazard method of marketing and distributing. Farmers cannot do this, and up to this good hour Congress has done nothing to remedy this important and sad situation which applies to the marketing of farm products.

Now, let us see what is going on under the present old wasteful and disgraceful marketing system of farm products. There is nothing wrong with farmers when it comes to producing crops. They can produce, all right. But when it comes to properly grading, labeling, and properly distributing their products when and where needed, in line with demand, and with some bargaining power as to price, they cannot do it. We are spending millions through the Extension Service and agricultural colleges, in advising farmers as to improved methods of farming, soil fertility, and the improving of the quality of farm products.

However, when we attempt to pass legislation to assist farmers to do that which all of these well-organized groups do, whether they do so under legislation or in the face of the anti-trust laws, we have numerous Members of Congress standing upon the floor of this House, opposing this type of legislation. They admit that these other groups are doing the very thing that we are talking about, but their contention is—let the farmers alone—let them do it themselves. And yet, they know that because farmers are unable to organize, and because of their financial condition, they are helpless, and I want to say to you, they are hopeless, unless we can do something to insure those who feed and clothe the world, that they are going to get a fair price for that which they produce when it is offered on the market for sale. Let me state at this point: We are now considering before the Agricultural Committee what is known as the farm-tenant bill. The purpose of this bill is to spend millions to purchase land to be sold to tenants and sharecroppers for the purpose, as stated by those in the Department of Agriculture who are interested in spending this money, to make landowners out of tenant and sharecrop farmers. For the past 50 years farmers have been losing their lands under foreclosure at the rate of from forty to fifty thousand farms annually. These farmers, and many of them were good farmers, many of them who inherited their farms from their fathers and grandfathers, have been passing into tenant and sharecrop farming.

I want to state emphatically to you at this time, that this situation was not brought about because of any fault on the part of thousands of these farmers. They have labored long hours. They have been able to produce, but, in that they had to pay fixed prices and accept anything that anyone would offer them for their products, they have been forced into this position, and thousands of them today are living in poverty and misery, and many of them are actually filling untimely graves. I want to ask you this question: In that we have not done anything up to this good hour, in that the Supreme Court has canceled every farm bill that would tend to help farmers control their business, to insure a fair price to the farmers for their products, how are you going to make landowners out of tenant farmers under the present situation?

If, and until we pass definite legislation by the Congress that will give farmers an assurance under crop insurance that they will have a crop, and a fair price in line with prices they have to pay for that which they purchase, which cannot be done at this time, it would be futile to spend the taxpayers' money, attempting to make landowners out of tenant and sharecrop farmers. I am for this class of people because I have served as a tenant farmer. They have my deepest sympathy in their struggles for a square deal. However, I do not want to hold out to them some hopes of making them the happy possessors of a home under a bill that would only take care of about 5,000 tenant and sharecrop farmers, annually, when at the same time under the present program forty to fifty thousand farmers are losing their lands and going into tenant and sharecrop farming annually.

Much has been said and done in trying to have farmers grow a better staple of cotton. A staple ranging from one inch to one and a sixteenth, one and an eighth and up to one and a quarter inch. However, as stated, under the present marketing system there are thousands of farmers who do not get paid for actual quality or a proper premium for staple length in selling their cotton. If this is true, then the thing that most of these farmers are interested in is the growing of just as many bales of cotton as they can produce, regardless of the length of the staple. The United States Standard Cotton Grading Act, introduced by me during the Sixty-seventh Congress, has meant millions to the South in that all cotton now exported is graded and certified to by the Government and accepted by all foreign buyers. But, as stated, farmers generally are not getting what they are entitled to, and therefore why should they be interested in growing an inch or an inch and a sixteenth cotton only for someone higher up in the cotton industry to get the premium on this type of cotton?

I realize that many farmers who are in a position to actually demand payment for proper grading and the length of staple for their cotton are receiving these benefits, and we are improving the staple length of our cotton. However, as stated, many of these farmers do not get just what is coming to them. But after this cotton passes into the hands of the large cotton merchants and exporters, they receive the full benefits under the grading act in that all cotton received by them is properly graded as to color and as to length of staple and sold to the cotton mills, or for export, accordingly. Now, what I am interested in is doing this very thing for farmers in that they cannot, as stated, do it themselves. The way to have farmers plant a uniform type of cotton, producing the very best staple length that they can produce in their territory, is to do the thing that I am talking about so that the farmer, when he receives the premium on staple lengths above seven-eighths inch, he will realize immediately what it will mean to him to do the thing that is being advocated by the agricultural colleges and the extension service in the South, and then we will get results.

We of the South grow the finest fruits and vegetables to be found in any section of the United States. Go down to the Washington markets, and they will tell you that we have quality and the finest flavor to be had anywhere, but the grading and packing is miserable.

Farmers in many of the Southern States, and I am especially referring to South Carolina, on account of the iodine content in vegetables and fruits in that State, have practically a gold mine if they were able to do that which is being done, as previously stated, by these well-organized groups. They, also, should advertise to the world the quality, flavor, and the large iodine content in their products, which the people in many States would love to have because of these valuable qualities. However, as previously stated, in that they have no control whatsoever in fixing a fair price they are unable to do this advertising.

I want to give you a list of just a few vegetables and fruits grown in South Carolina showing the iodine content that is not known to the rest of the country, and, if so, only in a very few instances.

Green vegetables:
Asparagus	285
Beet tops	657
Cucumbers	530
Kale	287
Lettuce	912
Onions	222
Spinach	692
Summer squash	625
Carrots	213
Irish potatoes	211
Rutabagas	200
Turnips	271
Fruits:
Blueberries	206
Strawberries	181
Watermelons	402
Feed for cattle: Cottonseed meal	140

Going back to the grading and marketing problem, what is the use for farmers to improve their grading and packing if it were possible for them to do so under the present system of marketing?

I grow on my farm just lots of vegetables and sweetpotatoes. I ship these, especially vegetables, largely by truck to Washington and Baltimore. I have no way of knowing, as a farmer, the real condition of either of these markets—that is, whether the markets are glutted with the same type of farm produce that I am sending up, or just what kind of price I will receive for same.

I am sure that many of you, who have not had this kind of experience, do not understand just what I am talking about. Communicate with your farmer friends and find out just how helpless they are and how they are being robbed. I have gone down to some of the chain store managers and to many commission merchants in trying to sell these products, only to have them make some statement, in a great many instances, that perhaps the market is glutted with these vegetables at this time, or that the demand is very slow, and then they proceed to fix their own price. Naturally, I have to accept that price or leave the products for sale with some commission merchant, hoping that when I receive their invoice of sale that I may be able to get at least a sufficient amount to pay for the expense of trucking these products to the city of Washington or Baltimore. I put my sweetpotatoes in a curing house, and there are just lots of other farmers who do this, and when I ship them out in the spring I have them properly packed and graded.

I find, however, that because of the manner in which potatoes are shipped into the market, brought into the market by trucks or railroads, that I do not get any advantage in properly grading, for the reason that these potatoes of quality and proper grade have to compete with all kinds of potatoes and with shipments that are not graded at all. In other words, there are just lots of fruits and vegetables that are placed on the markets that should never be offered for sale, because of the type of quality and grading. These should be canned or fed to the livestock on the farms. If this cannot be done, they should be thrown on a waste pile, thereby saving freight, expense of hampers, and packing.

This improper grading of fruits and vegetables, when placed on the market, naturally reduces the price to the farmer and the ultimate consumer has to pay a higher price to take care of the waste brought about by this type of marketing. Then, in the next place, what would be the use on the part of farmers in improving quality and properly grading their products if they are unable to have some bargaining power in seeing to it that they receive a price in line with quality and grade?

The thing that farmers generally are interested in now, in that they have no say-so as to price, is to be able to offer for sale just as many bushels of potatoes or hampers of fruits and vegetables as they possibly can, with the hope that if they should get even a reasonable price, the larger will be the amount of the check because of the number of bushels and hampers.

As previously stated, the marketing and distributing of farm products are absolutely in hands other than farmers', many of which are middlemen, nothing more or less than real parasites, sapping the very lifeblood out of farmers and consumers. I do not mean by this that there is not need for many, legitimate agencies operating between the farmers and the consumer. However, if we had an up-to-date marketing and distributing system, naturally there would be no need for all of these different types of agencies and middlemen, and, naturally, it would tend to wipe out many of these useless agencies, as has been the case with the marketing system established by well-organized groups.

The marketing system that I am interested in would tend to give farmers a proper guidance as to demands so as to bring about an orderly production somewhat in line with actual supply and demand. This system should be composed of agencies from the township, county, State, and National agencies. Farmers, perhaps, would do the best they could in grading their products before going to their local agency. Their products would then be delivered to their local agency where they would be properly graded, properly labeled, and they would be sold either to truck buyers, or would be shipped to the actual buyer, chain stores and merchants, on the advice and under the instructions received from State or National agencies. This would tend to bring about orderly distribution where these products were actually needed, and it would enable the handlers of these products who sell direct to the consumers to be able to buy just what they want and when they were in need of any of these products. Under the present system, farmers or shippers, for instance, in my State, receive prices on watermelons, vegetables, and fruits, and, believing that these prices are fair, they proceed to make shipments, not knowing just how many carloads from the same section or the same State are going into that one market center.

In other words, if they had this up-to-date marketing system, as stated, these shipments would be properly distributed in line with demand, all of which would bring about a fair price, both to the producer and to the consumer.

We hear a great deal about what Denmark and a few other foreign countries are doing along these lines. The thing that I am interested in is bringing about orderly production, proper grading, proper marketing, distributing, and the securing of a fair price in line with what is being done in Denmark and these other countries. However, it can only be done in line with the manner in which it is being done in these countries, that is, with the assistance of the Federal Government. Farmers cannot do it.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am prompted, by the statement of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER], to say a word. I supported the original bill as well as the bill that was defeated in the Senate, and I am going to support this bill. My chief reason for this is because it is a price-fixing measure. I believe in price fixing within reasonable limits for basic commodities like coal, cotton, and wheat. As our colleague from South Carolina stated, the farmers' problems can only be solved by price fixing, with a control of production. I was a raiser of wheat in quantity, and for 3 years, when the price was fixed by the Government, I knew what that wheat was going to bring me when I sowed it. I knew what it was going to be worth when I threshed it. I paid my men accordingly. Wages that were $1 a day before the Government fixed the price went as high as $5 a day. We are approaching that period of price fixing, whether we want to or not.

Mr. FULMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. FULMER. At this time the Agricultural Committee of the House, and I suppose the Senate, are working on a number of bills, one of which will make landowners out of tenants and sharecroppers. Is it not a fact that unless you can give the farmers some assurance as to a fair price for that which they produce you are not going to stop them from going into tenant farming, and in the meantime you will not bring the tenants and sharecroppers up to the point of owning land?

Mr. PIERCE. The bill we have been considering in the Agriculture Committee does not solve the problem, but one along the line suggested by the gentleman, I think, will help materially.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I appreciate the gentleman's support of the pending bill. In connection with the price-fixing features of this legislation, it is to be remembered we have had an increased consumption in the last year of 2 percent and an increase in wages paid to the miners since 1935 of 10 percent; yet within the last year the price paid to the producer of coal was slightly under that which existed before those increases went into effect. Certainly a small price increase would not be objectionable.

Mr. PIERCE. This bill will undoubtedly raise the price of coal to the consumer. I cannot go along with those who say there will not be any increase to the consumer. I realize there must be an increase as a natural result of this legislation, but that is sure to come in this age of price fixing, which is right ahead of us. While we of the West are voting with you people of the coal-mining States on this bill, do not forget us when we come upon this floor with a real bill which will do something for the farmers of South Carolina, Oregon, and other agricultural States.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I am glad my good friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY], has thrown his last brick. I want to speak on the amendment just offered as well as refer to the one that has just been defeated. The philosophy behind the prior amendment, as well as this one, is the philosophy of the large operator, the operator of the low-cost mine, and him who is well financed. There are other operators in this country who must be cared for. There are operators that are average both in regard to cost of production and as to their financial structure; and then there are operators who are not so favorably situated, both in regard to cost of production and financial structure. Those of us who have been in this war for some time know the line of demarcation between amendments helpful to the industry and those helpful to a few—mostly those who need it least.

The amendment that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY] offers does not say anything about the number of operators. I may say that from the best information I have, 90 percent of the operators favor H. R. 4985. So I am asking the committee to vote down the amendment, which is the last brickbat this good, fighting chap is going to throw at us.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. Before the gentleman takes his seat, will the gentleman comment on the speech just made by our friend, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE], in which he stated that he is going to vote with the coal-producing States, but he expects them to cooperate with him when he asks something for the farmers?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I may say that if one cares to make a study with respect to increase in cost to the consumer, there is much in this debate that will dispel the thought there is going to be any material increase, if any increase at all. Certainly, my good friend from Oregon, in referring to legislation sponsored by him, could only have in mind that which my friend from Massachusetts had in mind in days gone by when he espoused certain legislation, and that it was good legislation, righteous legislation, which commended itself to his colleagues in the House——

Mr. GIFFORD. My question is whether there is any other industry that is in a fix comparable with this and would the gentleman favor this principle's being applied to other industries?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I think every case must stand upon its own foundation. I may say frankly to my friend from Massachusetts that the Supreme Court has taken into consideration the history of the industry and its condition in construing legislation passed by Congress.

Mr. GIFFORD. My last question is, The gentleman cannot assure the farmers, then, that he can reciprocate?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I am going to support the legislation that is presented by the gentleman from Oregon or the gentleman from Massachusetts if I think it is good legislation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the very brief remarks I shall make at the conclusion of the reading and consideration of this bill will not be prompted by any fear upon my part of its passage by this House; but understanding that there is a possibility there may be no final record vote upon the passage of the bill, and because of the fact I was an earnest advocate of the passage of the bill in its original form and upon its second passage through the House, I desire very briefly to go on record in this fashion to give this bill and its purposes my support and endorsement.

I happen to live in a district, and particularly in a county, where the bituminous-coal industry is one of our major industries, and for the last few years I have been made very unhappy to witness constant decadence in the prosperity and extent of this former great enterprise in the district which I have the honor to represent. I think it has well been said many times, if there is any great industry in America that has been sick—if not, indeed, almost paralyzed—it is the bituminous-coal industry of America, and what those of us have had in mind who have advocated the previous bills is to undertake to do what we conceive to be legitimate and prudent and, indeed, constitutional in undertaking to solve this problem.

I am pleased that those of us who favor this proposal are now having the opportunity to vote for it for another adventure along the line of the Senate and, possibly, for another decision by a certain august tribunal in this country.

I wish to congratulate the Committee on Ways and Means for the very fine fashion in which it has framed the latest draft expressing the purposes we have in mind, and I particularly desire to congratulate the co-author of this bill, the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FRED M. VINSON] upon the fine thought, the diligence, the energy, and the courage with which he has pursued the objectives he has had in mind in connection with this proposed legislation. [Applause.] I was glad also to name Mr. MAY, who has shown such great interest in the passage of the bill, to preside as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole during its passage.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, this bill will pass the Senate, and if passed and approved by the President, as I am sure it will be, and any contest should be made as to its validity before the Supreme Court of the United States, I still indulge the hope it may run the gamut of the decision of that Court. I express this earnest hope for the reason that I know the necessities for this legislation. I feel it is a fair bill. I feel it will not work any injustice or unfairness to any interest that is represented, and I believe if we have an opportunity to see it put into operation it will tend to revive to a very large extent this great industry which, in recent years, has so greatly languished because of the conditions this bill seeks to correct. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the resolution heretofore adopted, the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MAY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 4985, and, in pursuance of House Resolution 146, he reported the same back to the House.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is ordered by the resolution. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. TREADWAY. I am.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TREADWAY moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to that committee to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment: Strike out, on page 3, lines 9, 10, and all of line 11 except the word "all", so that the sentence will read: "All employees of the Commission shall be appointed and their compensation fixed in accordance with the provisions of the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended."

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-nine Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 29]

Andrews	Driver	Maloney	Sweeney
Boykin	Fish	Meeks	Tinkham
Buckler, Minn.	Gasque	O'Connell, Mont.	Tobey
Buckley, N. Y.	Goodwin	O'Connell, R. I.	Tolan
Cannon, Wis.	Hill, Okla.	Pettengill	Wadsworth
Chandler	Holmes	Rutherford	White, Idaho
Coffee, Nebr.	Hunter	Sadowski	White, Ohio
Cole, N. Y.	Kleberg	Scott	Whittington
Cooley	Kvale	Scrugham	Wigglesworth
Crosser	Lesinski	Shannon	Zimmerman
Crowther	Lord	Smith, Conn.
Curley	Luckey, Nebr.	Smith, Va.
Doxey	McGehee	Sullivan

The SPEAKER. On this roll 382 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands the yeas and nays. All in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Thirty-nine Members have risen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts to recommit the bill.

The motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was ordered to lie on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by Hon. James A. Farley, Postmaster General, on the occasion of the dedication of the new Federal building at Reidsville, N. C., March 9, 1937.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is this gentleman the Postmaster General who served in the last term or the new Postmaster General?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. He is the greatest and most efficient Postmaster General in the history of our Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by inserting a statement by my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. MCGROARTY].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain excerpts from an address that I delivered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their own remarks on the bill H. R. 4985.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(Mr. FORD of California, Mr. PIERCE, Mr. MAY, and Mr. KENNEY were each granted leave to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

CONTINUOUS DISCHARGE BOOKS

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5487) to amend section 4551 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. II, title 46, sec. 643), which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill dealing with what has been known in the newspapers as the Copeland continuous discharge book, which has caused strikes.

We held hearings last week for the entire week in the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. At the conclusion of those hearings we brought together the representatives of labor, representatives of the Department of Commerce, representatives of the Department of Labor and put them around a table. They agreed in substance upon the bill which is now presented to you.

The bill makes very few changes in the original law. It leaves the continuous discharge book intact. However, if a seaman does not care to accept a continuous discharge book, we provide a certificate of identification with all of the identifying marks in it that are contained in the continuous discharge book, but without the record of discharges. Since such a seaman has no discharge book, we provide for a separate certificate of discharge that shall be given to him at the end of the voyage. In this bill we have gotten for the Government everything that is needed for the protection of the Government, and yet we have met the fear of blacklisting on the part of those seamen who objected to the continuous discharge book.

When we entered upon consideration of this bill I had no hope that we would be able to reach a solution of this kind. We expressly provide that entries shall contain no reference to character or ability. The old discharge books would not have permitted any such entries, but we desired it should be affirmatively shown upon the legislation.

A question was raised as to "rating" of the seaman which was required to be shown. We added language to make certain that rating should refer only to the capacity in which the seaman served on the ship. To avoid any question we wrote that into the law. Then to provide that there should be no discrimination against either class of seamen—that is, those taking the discharge books or those taking certificates—we provided against blacklisting in favor of those who hold one character of book or certificate or the other. We then were confronted with a problem which had to be met if the ships were to continue to move. So we provided that until the date when this law would have finally gone into effect, temporary certificates of identification, and temporary certificates of discharge should be issued pending the issuance of permanent certificates. We have protected the Government, we have met the principal objections urged by the seamen, and all seem to be satisfied.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. WELCH. Will our chairman also state that the bill was reported unanimously by this committee?

Mr. BLAND. The bill was reported unanimously by the committee. It has the endorsement of the Director of the Bureau of Marine Navigation and Inspection, to whom great credit is due for bringing about this settlement. They met around the table and finally adjourned in the spirit of a love feast. The committee unanimously reported the bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What provision is there in the bill which provides for some entry being made on the discharge book with reference to the character and integrity of the seaman?

Mr. BLAND. None.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That has been eliminated?

Mr. BLAND. Absolutely. It never was in the discharge book, but there was a fear on the part of some that it was in there. So that there might not be any question in the future, we have affirmatively written into the law that that record shall not be made.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman is to be congratulated for bringing such a happy outcome to such a controversial issue. I want to congratulate the gentleman.

Mr. BLAND. The committee is to be congratulated. Much of the work was done while I was in the chair presiding over the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4551 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. II, title 46, sec. 643), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4551. (a) Every seaman upon a merchant vessel of the United States of the burden of 100 gross tons or upward, except vessels employed exclusively in trade on the navigable rivers of the United States, shall be furnished, at the option of the seaman, with a book to be known as a continuous discharge book or with a certificate of identification, which book or certificate shall be retained by the seaman and shall contain the signature of the seaman to whom it is so furnished and a statement of his nationality, age, personal description, photograph, thumbprint, and home address. Such books or certificates shall be issued by the shipping commissioners, or, at ports where no shipping commissioners have been appointed, by collectors or deputy collectors of customs or United States local inspectors of steam vessels, in such manner and form as the Director of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, shall determine. Any individual, firm, partnership, corporation, or association which shall issue any such book or certificate, or make any statement or endorsement therein, except as authorized by the provisions of this section, or issue any imitation of any such book or certificate, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be imprisoned not less than 1 month nor more than 3 months, in the discretion of the court.

"(b) Any person applying for such book or certificate and claiming to be a citizen of the United States shall furnish satisfactory evidence of such citizenship.

"(c) No seaman shall be employed on any vessel to which this section applies until he has exhibited a certificate of identification or a continuous discharge book to the shipping commissioner, or in cases where seamen are not signed on before the shipping commissioner, to the master of the vessel: Provided, That the provisions of this subsection shall not apply to the employment of seamen at a foreign port or place, in which case seamen so employed shall be furnished a continuous discharge book or a certificate of identification, in accordance with the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, at the first port of entry in the United States or its territories at which the vessel arrives after such seamen are so employed.

"(d) Upon the discharge of any seaman and the payment of his wages, the shipping commissioner shall enter in the continuous discharge book of such seaman, if the seaman carries such a book, the name and official number of the vessel, the nature of the voyage (foreign, intercoastal, or coastwise), the class to which the vessel belongs (steam, motor, sail, or barge), the date and place of the shipment and of the discharge of such seaman, the rating (capacity in which employed) then held by such seaman, and the signature of the person making such entries and nothing more. Whenever a seaman is discharged in any collection district where no shipping commissioner has been appointed, the master of the vessel shall perform the duties of such commissioner and shall make the proper entries in such continuous discharge book; and when the seamen are not required by law to be signed on and discharged before a shipping commissioner, the master shall make such proper entires in the discharge book. Any master who fails to make such entries shall be fined the sum of $50 for each such offense.

"(e) For the purpose of furnishing evidence of sea service in the case of seamen preferring the certificate of identification instead of the continuous discharge book, the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation shall provide a certificate of discharge, printed on durable paper, in such form as to specify the name and citizenship of the seaman to whom it is issued, the serial number of his certificate of identification, the name and official number of the vessel, the nature of the voyage (foreign, intercoastal, or coastwise), the class to which the vessel belongs (steam, motor, sail, or barge), the date and place of the shipment and of the discharge of such seaman, and the rating (capacity in which employed) then held by such seaman. Where the seaman is discharged before a shipping commissioner such shipping commissioner shall make the proper entires in such certificate, which shall be signed by the seaman and the master of the vessel, and witnessed by such shipping commissioner. Whenever a seaman is discharged in any collection district where no shipping commissioner has been appointed, the master of the vessel shall perform the duties of such commissioner and shall make the proper entries in such certificate of discharge; and when the seamen are not required by law to be signed on and discharged before a shipping commissioner, the master shall make such proper entries in the certificate of discharge. Any master who fails to make such entries shall be fined the sum of $50 for each such offense.

"(f) There shall be maintained in the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation in Washington, D. C., a record of every continuous discharge book, certificate of identification, certificate of discharge, and any other certificate issued by the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, together with the name and address of the seaman to whom it is issued and of his next of kin, and certified copies of all entries made in continuous discharge books or certificates of discharge, which entries shall be forwarded to the Bureau by the shipping commissioner or other person making such entries in accordance with the provisions of this section. Records so maintained shall not be open for general or public use or inspection.

"(g) Any person, partnership, company, or corporation who shall require any seaman employed or applying for employment to possess, produce, or carry a continuous discharge book, if and when such seaman possesses or carries an identification certificate, or to carry an identification certificate, if and when such seaman possesses and carries a continuous discharge book, or who shall exchange or give to any other person, partnership, company, or corporation information to cause discrimination against a seaman for electing to carry either an identification certificate or a continuous discharge book, or to prevent a seaman from obtaining employment on that account, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, at the discretion of the court.

"Seamen shall apply for certificates of identification or continuous discharge books hereunder; and if any application contains any statement known by the applicant to be false, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof before any district court of the United States shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, in the discretion of the court.

"(h) In case of the loss of a continuous discharge book, a certificate of identification, or of any certificate of discharge by shipwreck or other casualty, the seaman shall be supplied with a duplicate of such continuous discharge book, certificate of identification, or certificate of discharge, in which shall be entered all data that may be available from the copies of records kept by the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation. In other cases of loss the seaman may obtain a duplicate of such continuous discharge book, certificate of identification, or certificates of discharge, containing the same entries, upon a payment of a sum equivalent to the cost thereof to the Government to be determined from time to time by the Secretary of Commerce.

"(i) The provisions of this section shall not apply to fishing or whaling vessels or yachts.

"(j) The Secretary of Commerce shall enforce this section as to all vessels of the United States subject to the provisions hereof through collectors of customs and other Government officers acting under the direction of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, and shall make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this section."

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect as to vessels within the provisions of section 4551 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, as follows: (a) Upon its enactment in the case of such vessels engaged in foreign or intercoastal voyages, and (b) on June 25, 1937, in the case of all other such vessels: Provided, That the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized, pending the issuance of permanent certificates of identification and permanent certificates of discharge under such section, to provide for temporary certificates of identification and temporary certificates of discharge, which shall have the same force and effect as the permanent certificates.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 3, beginning with the word "when", in line 21, strike out all of lines 22, 23, 24, 25, and lines 1 to 5, both inclusive, on page 4. In line 18 on page 4, after the word "seaman", insert: "Records of service entered in either continuous discharge books or certificates of discharge shall contain no reference to the character or ability of the seaman." Strike out all the remainder of line 21 and all down to and including the word "commissioner", in line 25, and insert "The shipping commissioner shall issue such certificate of discharge and make the proper entries therein, which certificate shall be signed by the seaman to whom it is issued and the master of the vessel and shall be witnessed by such shipping commissioner."

On page 5, strike out the remainder of line 5 and all down to and including line 14 on page 5.

On page 7, in line 22, strike out the word "section" " and insert the word "section."

Page 7, line 23, insert:

"(k) Where vessels are required to sign on and discharge the crew before a shipping commissioner and no shipping commissioner is appointed or is available the functions and duties required by subsections (d) and (e) of this section to be performed by such shipping commissioner may be performed by a collector or deputy collector of customs; and where vessels are not required to sign on and discharge the crew before a shipping commissioner the duties and functions required by subsections (d) and (e) of this section to be performed by the shipping commissioner shall be performed by the master of such vessel. Any master who shall fail to perform such duties or functions shall be fined in the sum of $50 for each offense."

Page 8, line 16, after the word "that", insert "until June 25, 1937."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion by Mr. BLAND, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FLOOOD CONTROL

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, on next Monday morning at 10:30 o'clock there will be a meeting in the caucus room of the old House Office Building of Members from those areas that suffered from floods in 1936. The purpose of the meeting is to discuss several bills proposing to amend the Disaster Loan Corporation Act. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain tables on the prices and the consumption of coal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

REGULATION OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE IN BITUMINOUS COAL

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. Will the Speaker be so kind as to explain why no action was taken on the request of several Members for a roll call on the passage of the bituminous coal bill? A great many Members were standing in support of the request.

The SPEAKER. In answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania the Chair states that we had reached the stage in the proceedings involving the question on the passage of the bill. The ayes had been put to the House. Before the noes could be put, the gentleman from Missouri rose in his place in the rear of the Hall and asked for the yeas and nays. It is contrary to the rules of the House to interrupt proceedings pending a division or vote on a question. For that reason the Chair then put the negative and thereafter announced that the ayes had it. No request then being made for the ayes and noes, the Chair announced that the bill was passed. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. I thank the Speaker.

SITE FOR VETERANS' HOSPITAL, DETROIT, MICH.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 272, to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to accept title for the United States to certain real property to be donated by Mr. Henry Ford and wife for Veterans' Administration facility purposes, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will not the gentleman tell us something about the bill?

Mr. RANKIN. Certainly. I may say to the gentleman from New York that we have provided for a veterans' hospital in Detroit, Mich., one that is very much needed; but when the Board of Hospitalization went there to make the investigation they found it impossible with the funds we had to secure a proper site. Mr. Henry Ford and his wife propose to donate 38 acres of ground for this hospital, and this is a bill giving the right to the Veterans' Administration to accept it. Let me say further to the gentleman from New York that this land is to be donated, but if we ever abandon it for this purpose it will, of course, revert to the original owner.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. I understand certain restrictions were placed around the gift. Have the restrictions been removed or have they been agreed to?

Mr. RANKIN. The only restriction that is on the offer at all is that if we abandon it for this purpose it reverts to the original owner.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. It is a splendid site and one that it has been very difficult to get. It is right near the Ford estate and is ideal for hospital purposes. We are very fortunate, indeed, to have Mr. Ford give it to us.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I merely wanted to inquire if the Henry Ford mentioned in this instance is the motor manufacturer.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman wants to know if Henry Ford is the man who make automobiles. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAY. No; I want to know if Henry Ford, the man who makes automobiles, is the man who is making this gift.

Mr. RANKIN. He is the same Henry Ford.

Now, let me say to the Members of the House that, in my opinion, this measure ought to pass. I think it is a very generous offer. It will enable us to build a veterans' hospital in Detroit where one is very much needed. The Board of Veterans' Hospitalization says that the veteran population in southern Michigan is one of the largest to be found in any similar area in the United States.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. Can the gentleman tell us what the name of the hospital is to be?

Mr. RANKIN. No. I do not suppose it has been named.

Mr. BOILEAU. Are there any plans for any particular name?

Mr. RANKIN. Not that I know of. There has been no legislation to that effect and there is nothing in this bill with reference to naming the hospital.

Mr. HOOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOOK. Is it not a fact that as soon as this is authorized and the bill passed the Veterans' Bureau may proceed with the construction of this hospital?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes. The construction of this hospital is being held up until they can acquire a suitable site; and, with property values as high as they are in Detroit and the surrounding area, this is about the only way we can really get a suitable site.

Mr. HOOK. In other words, the money has been appropriated and allotted by the Veterans' Bureau for the project?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. HOOK. And approved by the President?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. What is the estimated value of the site to be donated?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Michigan can probably give the gentleman more accurate information than I can on that. I understand it is above $100,000.

Mr. DONDERO. May I say, if it is 38 acres at Dearborn, Mich., belonging to Henry Ford, it is worth a lot of money. I would not be prepared to say what the value is, but it would have a very high value.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Could not the Government acquire the site, or is the price too high?

Mr. RANKIN. There is no other property available.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman inform the House as to the amount of money appropriated for this hospital at Detroit, Mich.?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; it is $1,400,000.

Mr. DONDERO. I may say to the gentleman I hope this bill passes, because the State of Michigan and the veterans of that State need a hospital very badly up there.

Mr. RANKIN. When we had this proposition up for consideration, the veterans' organizations appeared before the committee, and General Hines, representing the board of hospitalization, came before the committee. All parties were satisfied, if I remember, with the amount allocated for the construction of this hospital.

Mr. DONDERO. I understood it was $2,000,000, but I wanted that figure confirmed, if the gentleman knew.

Mr. RANKIN. I have just been informed that it is $1,400,000.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I know the need for a hospital in Detroit. How many beds will the hospital provide?

Mr. RANKIN. Three hundred and fifty.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. This has the approval of the Veterans' Administration?

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, yes; it has the approval of the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. BIERMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BIERMANN. Is this a general hospital?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. BIERMANN. Does the gentleman think it is good policy to build general hospitals throughout the country when there are many private and church hospitals, as well as other hospitals, that have plenty of empty beds which are not being used?

Mr. RANKIN. The question before the House now does not involve a policy, because this money has already been appropriated and allocated for this purpose. The veterans' organizations from the State of Michigan appeared before the committee and showed the necessity for this hospital 2 years ago. Of course, it took some time to get the funds allocated and make arrangements to build the hospital.

Mr. BIERMANN. As a general proposition, all over the country, as far as I know, these general hospitals are to a large degree surplus hospitals. There are, as I said a minute ago, private hospitals, church hospitals, and other hospitals that have vacant beds which could take care of these veterans, and, as far as the veteran himself is concerned, he would rather be treated in his home town, by his home doctor and his home corps of nurses than go 200 or 300 miles to some hospital where he is treated as he might be in a factory. As far as I am concerned, I would a good deal rather vote against any more general hospitals for veterans and take that money so that the veterans could be taken care of in their own home towns, by their home doctors, at a place where their families could visit them.

Mr. RANKIN. In the first place, Detroit is a city of more than a million people. These veterans have come there from all sections of the country. They are in that area now, and they need this hospital. Besides, the defeat of this resolution would simply cause us to have to go to some other area around there and take property less desirable and pay a considerable price for it.

Mr. BIERMANN. I do not mean to say I expect to vote against the resolution, but I think as a policy, for the good of the veterans and for the good of the general hospital situation in the country, we ought to stop building these general hospitals. It is a different thing if you have to build a psychopathic hospital, a tubercular hospital, or a hospital for some special disease that may require special treatment, but so far as a general hospital is concerned, a veteran would be better off if he could be treated in his home town, by his home doctor, and be taken care of by his home-town nurses.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. May I say to the gentleman, if we followed that principle we could not get any of the doctors from Johns Hopkins, who come over here to certain diagnostic centers. The veterans could not get the facilities at home. Some of these men have been operated on 20 or 25 times. You cannot get big surgeons, who would charge $3,000 for an operation, to do this work out there.

Mr. BIERMANN. I may say to the gentleman, you can attach a surgeon from the Johns Hopkins Hospital to a private hospital to treat a veteran just as well as you can attach him to the veterans' hospital.

Mr. CONNERY. But you cannot get them to go from New York out to Iowa.

Mr. BIERMANN. You cannot get them to go from Baltimore to Iowa to go to a veterans' hospital either.

Mr. CONNERY. But you can get them to go to the big diagnostic centers, and that is why this hospital is being built at Detroit. You will get the surgeons there.

Mr. BIERMANN. My point is, there are plenty of vacant beds in the private hospitals and other hospitals all over the country. These hospitals in some instances are supported by churches. They are supported by donations in other instances, and they need the business. They ought to have this veterans' business, especially when the veteran can get just as good treatment in that hospital as far as the veteran himself is concerned.

Mr. CONNERY. I may say I am in entire accord with the gentleman so far as cases other than surgical cases are concerned and as far as taking care of the veteran in his home town is concerned so much the better. He will get good service there and the veteran will be taken care of.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept on behalf of the United States title to a triangular tract of land bounded by Southfield Road, Snow or Pepper Road and Outer Drive, in Ecorse Township, Wayne County, State of Michigan, containing approximately 38 acres, to be donated by Mr. Henry Ford and Clara J. Ford, his wife, upon the condition that such property be used for the purpose of constructing, operating, and maintaining what is now designated as a Veterans' Administration facility or which may hereafter be so designated or similarly designated by or in accordance with law, which may include domiciliary, hospital, regional office, and such other activities essential to the functioning of the facility, and when no longer used for this purpose the property donated to revert to the grantors, their heirs, executors, or assigns, the said tract of land being described as follows:

Lands lying in private claim 31, Ecorse Township, Wayne County, Mich., and described more particularly as follows:

Commencing at the point of intersection of the easterly line of Southfield (formerly known as Town Line) Road, of 204-foot width and the northerly line of Outer Drive of 150-foot width; thence easterly along the northerly line of said Outer Drive 193.48 feet along the arc of a curve of radius 274.21 feet to a point which is south 78°19'30" east 189.45 feet from the last previously mentioned point; thence north 81°27'50" east 1,790.64 feet along the said northerly line of Outer Drive; thence easterly 156.89 feet measured along the arc of a curve of 575.54 feet radius to a point on the center line of Snow (formerly Pepper) Road, which bears north 89°16'20" east 156.14 feet from the last previously mentioned point; thence northwesterly along the center line of said Snow Road north 37°4'00" west 1,566.96 feet and north 27°3'10" west 253.61 feet to the point of intersection with the said easterly line of Southfield Road; thence southerly along the said easterly line of Southfield Road south 31°44'00" west 2,003.69 feet to the point of commencement, containing 38.930 acres, more or less.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to address this House of Representatives on a most important subject.

My good name and my service as a Member of the Congress has been ridiculed.

The following statements appeared in print as a news item in the February 12, 1937, edition of the Washington (D. C.) Times. The article is as follows:

JENCKES CLAIM RIDICULED

Replying to charges hurled yesterday in the House of Representatives by Mrs. VIRGINIA E. JENCKES, Democrat, of Indiana, that the Board of Education is "lobbying and propagandizing on a national scale" for legislation that would permit the advocacy of communism in District schools, Mr. Henry I. Quinn, Washington attorney and school board member, said: "Everything Mrs. JENCKES is reported to have said is as baseless as the charge she made last year that I and other board members were bigoted against the people of my church. Her charge will not be taken seriously by any thinking person.

Now, for the information of this House of Representatives, as well as every Member of the Congress, I made definite written charges against the Board of Education of the District of Columbia, charging the Board of Education of the District of Columbia with inefficient handling of the money which Congress appropriated for the purposes of the Board of Education. I charged that the Board of Education employed, at the rate of $50 per day, a professor who was associated with the University of Moscow, Russia, to teach character education. I charged the Board of Education with permitting the circularization of a magazine which carried an article advertising and praising a book containing vile, sacrilegious, and filthy utterances. The Board of Education has never answered these charges, which I filed in writing before a subcommittee of this House of Representatives. Instead, individual members of the Board of Education have ridiculed the charges, but did not answer them.

The friends and propagandists of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia propagandized against me in my own congressional district just before the recent primary and election and at both times when Democrats and Republicans learned the truth I was renominated and reelected by an outstanding majority because both Democrats and Republicans quickly recognized the false propaganda which was put out against me and voted for me.

Notwithstanding the fact that during the sessions of the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses, I have been active in denouncing the Board of Education as a board for their inefficient administration of a public trust, I have never mentioned any individual member by name.

However, due to the untruthful statements which are accredited to Mr. Quinn, member of the Board of Education, and published in one of the leading newspapers of our Nation's Capital, I desire to read to this House of Representatives a letter dated Notre Dame College, Baltimore, Md., February 16, 1937.

This letter is from Father J. F. Reilly, formerly pastor of St. Ann's Roman Catholic Church, Wisconsin Avenue, Washington, D. C. The statements made by Father Reilly definitely indicate the standing Mr. Quinn has in the estimation of Father Reilly, who was pastor of St. Ann's Roman Catholic Parish at the time I made the written charges against the Board of Education. The letter from Father Reilly reads as follows:

DEAR MRS. JENCKES: Several years ago, when I was pastor of St. Ann's Church in Northwest Washington, D. C., about 300 of our children, American boys and girls, sons and daughters of American fathers and mothers, were attending school in an old frame building that was literally a fire trap—a situation that was merely tolerated by the Commissioners because for the time being there seemed to be no alternative. Adjoining us on Wisconsin Avenue was the old Tenley School, completely abandoned by both school board and District, furnace torn out, every bench removed, more than 600 windowpanes broken, the building itself in the hands of a wrecker to be torn down.

Then it was, Mrs. JENCKES, that you explained to Congress the danger of fire in the old frame building, where 300 school children were housed, the tremendous saving to the District if St. Ann's people were permitted to purchase the abandoned Tenley School, for, as you made clear, if that large pupil group was turned over to the District for public-school facilities, there was the expense of new buildings, new equipment, and salaries of at least eight teachers.

Congress was very reasonable in spite of much opposition, not the least of which came from the School Board of the District of Columbia, whose members argued that the Tenley School might some day be needed for what they termed an "overflow." This same building, let us not forget, which they had marked for wreckage and which had been saved from destruction only because of your untiring efforts in behalf of our 300 future American citizens.

The members of that school board who voted constantly against your constructive plan, and I understand Mr. Quinn was one of them, were worse than bigots, for bigots are usually reasonable according to their light and not in spite of it.

Even after Congress passed your bill permitting the sale to us of the property in question, and after the President had affixed his signature in May or June, that same school board, by strange, if not devious tactics, prevented the actual sale of the building until a day in the fall of that year—a delay which forced us to open school a month later than schedule required.

For some of the opposition who now object to the name "bigot" I feel that "traitor" would be a much more suitable tag.

You did a great work then, Mrs. JENCKES, not only for that little army of future American citizens but also in the cause of fairness and for the District of Columbia, too, as witness the improvements of all that property under discussion. God speed you in the same kind of patriotic work that you are doing now for future American citizens, for the District of Columbia, and for the good old U. S. A.

Sincerely,

Father J. F. REILLY.

The statements of Father Reilly are a definite answer to the untruthful and misleading statements accredited to Mr. Quinn.

Now, I ask every Member of this House of Representatives to secure from the Library of Congress a copy of the magazine which the Board of Education of our Nation's Capital permitted to be circulated among teachers and pupils. The name of this magazine is Scholastic National High School Weekly, published in Pittsburgh, Pa., on October 6, 1934. On page 11 is a special article lauding and praising a book entitled "Boy and Girl Tramps of America", by Thomas Minehan. This book was published in 1934 by Farrar & Rinehart, Inc., New York City, N. Y.

I ask every Member of this Seventy-fifth Congress to get a copy of Boy and Girl Tramps of America from the Library of Congress and read the filthy, lascivious, and irreligious utterances contained in this book. Then determine for yourselves whether you would like to put this book in the hands of young boys and young girls of your family or acquaintance.

The Board of Education strongly defended Scholastic National High School Weekly against the charge that another Member of Congress and I made and finally withdrew the magazine. It is withdrawn at the present time.

The Board of Education has not made a satisfactory reply why they permitted this magazine to be circulated among our children.

This magazine carried a laudatory article about this filthy book which was advertised to our young children. So much for that.

The Board of Education ignored and refused to pay any attention to a petition which was sent to the Board of Education and which was signed by many Members of the House of Representatives and Members of the Senate who were members of the District of Columbia Committees of the House and Senate. This petition appealed to the Board of Education to save $20,000 a year by leasing or renting the old Tenley School to St. Ann's Roman Catholic parish for parochial school purposes. The Board of Education abandoned this building; they ordered this building to be torn down, and the Board of Education urged the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to make haste in tearing the building down. As soon as St. Ann's parish indicated a desire to rent or buy this building the Board of Education immediately said that they might need it at a future time; that it might be needed for playground purposes; that the building might be turned into a library; or the National Capital Park and Planning Commission might need the property for park purposes at some future time.

The Board of Education directly and indirectly lobbied against the bills which were introduced in the House and Senate authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to sell this property.

The Board of Education attempted to get the President of the United States to withhold his signature to the bill after the Congress had passed it.

I ask every Member of the Seventy-fifth Congress to drive out Wisconsin Avenue NW., in our Nation's Capital, and visit St. Ann's Parish School in the 4400 block of Wisconsin Avenue NW.

Take along with you an architect or a builder. Ask the architect or builder whether the Tenley School was in such shape that it should have been destroyed. I am satisfied to rest my case on what any responsible architect or builder says. As a matter of fact, the action of the Congress and the President saved the taxpayers of the District of Columbia and the Nation at least $20,000 a year by selling this abandoned building to St. Ann's Roman Catholic parish.

It would be interesting to this House of Representatives to know how many other abandoned school buildings have been destroyed by the Board of Education of the District of Columbia, which might have been salvaged in order to save money for the taxpayers.

The Board of Education in opposing the McCormack amendment to H. R. 148, directly exposed themselves as desiring to legalize the advocacy of communism in the public schools in the Nation's Capital. The Board of Education has made a great hue and cry about the "red rider." The Board of Education's propagandists, local and national, have flooded the country with statements that school teachers were being insulted. It is not a "red rider"—it is a "red herring" the Board of Education is using to hide the real issue. The McCormack amendment does away with the provisions in H. R. 148 which compel school teachers to take an oath that they have not taught or advocated communism prior to getting their salary. The McCormack amendment permits the teaching about communism in the public schools and it does not require that the teachers or other employees take an oath prior to receiving their salaries.

The McCormack amendment, however, does definitely prevent the advocacy of communism in the public schools of our Nation's Capital. The Board of Education desires the privilege of advocating communism in the public schools of the District of Columbia. They proclaim that right under a nebulous self-developed right which they have proclaimed as "academic freedom."

The rank and file of our American school teachers never have asked for the "academic freedom" which would give them the right to advocate communism in the public schools.

Communism destroys religion. What will ministers of the gospel all over America say, if this Congress legalizes the advocacy of communism in the public schools of the Nation's Capital. What will our American veterans say? What will our patriotic organizations say, and what will our patriotic citizens say? The efforts of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia to legalize the advocacy of communism in the public schools of our Nation's Capital is of vital interest to citizens in every city in America. H. R. 148 must not be made law unless the McCormack amendment is part of it. I sound a solemn warning that if Congress permits the legalizing of the advocacy of communism in the public schools of our Nation's Capital, communism will be advocated in a short time in every public school in America.

I appeal to the Members of this House of Representatives and American citizens in every State in the United States to become militant. I appeal to them to become aroused in order to prevent the advocacy of communism in the public schools of our Nation's Capital and the public schools in every city and community throughout America. The time has come for the citizens and the Congress to take decisive action and resist this bold attempt to legalize the advocacy of communism in the public schools in the city of Washington, our Nation's Capital.

I pray that you realize the great importance of my plea and keep faith with the American people in order that our American form of Government might be protected against the scourge of communism. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 1 minute in reference to the statement made by the gentlewoman from Indiana regarding a citizen of Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. The gentlewoman from Indiana made an unfair statement about Thomas Minehan, of Minnesota, who wrote a very famous book of 1933, Boy and Girl Tramps of America, which happened to be a "best seller" of 1934 in the sociological field of literature.

Mr. Minehan is a graduate of the University of Minnesota, and holds a master of arts degree from another college in the East. He is a sociologist of unquestioned standing in America.

His book is the result of a case survey composed of 2,000 personal investigations made over a period of 2 years. Mr. Minehan himself, stricken in youth by the same disease as the President, has won his way to success the same way as has the President. He was on the road for 2 years, traveling in box cars, hitchhiking, living in camps, and living in slums. Mr. Minehan has made a great contribution to literature and science, and deserves a boost rather than unfair, disparaging criticism.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TEIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address made by me over the radio March 10 dealing with the reorganization of the Federal judiciary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short article I wrote myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement by a constituent, William B. Cowan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address by Governor Roosevelt on the subject of Constitutional Government in America.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I had intended to ask unanimous consent that the House adjourn until 11 o'clock tomorrow, and had so informed several Members, but the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] stated he must object if I made the request because of a meeting their group is holding at 10:30 tomorrow. Therefore, I will not make the request and force the gentleman from Wisconsin to object.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CURLEY (at the request of Mr. O'MALLEY), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. SMITH of Virginia (at the request of Mr. BLAND), indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. BOREN, for 6 days, on account of important business in his district.

To Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan, for 6 days, on account of important official business.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

989. Also, petition signed by Mrs. J. Salsberg and 36 other citizens of Riverdale, N. J., opposing the Supreme Court plan of President Roosevelt and urging Congress to oppose the issue; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

990. By Mr. THOMASON of Texas: Resolution adopted by the Commissioners' Court of El Paso, Tex., urging an appropriation for eradication of noxious weeds; to the Committee on Agriculture.

991. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Gallipolis Chamber of Commerce, relative to the matter of flood control; to the Committee on Flood Control.

SENATE

FRIDAY, MARCH 12, 1937

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, the Lord and giver of life, Thou dayspring from on high: Visit us with Thy salvation and give us the strength, wisdom, and patience needful for the exactions of the day.

Help us to realize that only by yielding our wills to Thine do we enter the doorway to the fuller life of service in which our powers are raised to their highest possible degree of perfection, and may every citizen make instant response to this challenge by giving his full measure of devotion to the God who loved him into being and to the Republic which fosters those ideals of citizenship which lead along the way of justice, truth, and love unto the city of our God. We ask it in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, March 11, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

SIGNING OF AN ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION

The VICE PRESIDENT announced that, under authority of the order of the Senate of the 11th instant, he signed on yesterday, after the adjournment of the Senate, the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 249) authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to grant further extensions of time for filing returns under title III of the Revenue Act of 1936, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

RELIEF OF GOVERNMENT DISBURSING OFFICERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize and direct the Comptroller General of the United States to allow credit for all outstanding disallowances and suspensions in the accounts of disbursing officers or agents of the Government for payments made pursuant to certain adjustments and increases in compensation of Government officers and employees, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

HALLE D. M'CULLOUGH

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize and direct the Comptroller General of the United States to allow credit in the accounts of Halle D. McCullough, former superintendent and special disbursing agent of the Fort Berthold Indian Agency, Elbowoods, N. Dak., for payments made to the International Oil Co., Minot, N. Dak., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Whereas the port of Philadelphia is of great importance as a port in the volume of domestic shipping and the domestic commerce flowing through the port of Philadelphia has increased substantially over and above increases in such commerce for other ports on the eastern seaboard; and

Whereas despite such increase in domestic commerce there has been no increase, but on the contrary a diversion and decrease in the flow of foreign commerce through the port of Philadelphia for the principal reason that the channel to and from Philadelphia to the Atlantic Ocean is not deep enough to accommodate the entry of ships coming from foreign ports; and

Whereas the port of Philadelphia is the only port of this Commonwealth for the entry and flow of foreign commerce and it is of vital interest to protect and develop facilities necessary for such foreign commerce; and

Whereas in order to prevent great economic loss to industry in Pennsylvania by reason of lack of a channel deep enough to admit entry of foreign commerce it is necessary that the channel be deepened from Philadelphia to the Atlantic Ocean: Therefore be it

Resolved (if the senate concur), That the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania respectfully petitions the Congress of the United States to enact the necessary legislation and to make the necessary appropriation to deepen the channel from the port of Philadelphia to the Atlantic Ocean to a depth of at least 40 feet with suitable widths; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and to each Senator and Representative in the Congress of the United States from this Commonwealth by the chief clerk of this house.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas the United States and Canada negotiated a treaty in the year 1932 providing for the joint construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway, which treaty has been ever since, and is now, awaiting ratification by the United States Senate; and

Whereas the early completion of this great international waterway project is necessary, not only to establish equality in transportation costs between seaboard States and Midwestern and Northwestern States but also to restore prosperity to the entire Northwest, including North Dakota; and

Whereas the President of the United States has repeatedly approved the St. Lawrence Seaway project and has recommended the ratification of said treaty at a previous session of Congress: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the President of the United States is hereby memorialized to resubmit said treaty to the United States Senate for ratification at the present session of Congress, and that the Senate of the Unied States is hereby urged to ratify said treaty at the earliest possible time, to the end that the necessary enabling legislation for the completion of this waterway project may be adopted by this Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate, and to each Member of Congress and the Senators from North Dakota.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Whereas there has been introduced in the Congress of the United States a bill known as the Wagner-Van Nuys antilynching bill; and

Whereas one of the greatest blots on the escutcheon of the several States and the fair name of our country as a whole is the evil of lynching and the unrestrained activities of such lawless mobs; and

Whereas among the victims of these atrocities have been not only men but women and children, some 5,068 lynchings have disgraced our country since 1882, 15 of which occurred in the year 1934; and

Whereas the governments of the several States have been unable to cope successfully with the continuous uprising of mob law in that respect: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate of the thirty-first general assembly (the house of representatives concurring herein), That the Congress of the United States is hereby respectfully memorialized and urged to enact the said Wagner-Van Nuys antilynching bill into law.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Senate of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Whereas legislation has been introduced, sponsored by the President of the United States, to increase the number of Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States; and

Whereas said legislation provides, among other things, that whenever a Supreme Court Justice, having attained the age of 70 years and having served 10 years upon the Federal bench, fails to retire, an additional Justice may be appointed by the President, subject only to the limitation that there be no more than 15 judges upon the Supreme Court; and

Whereas it is vital to the preservation of our American institutions and our American form of government that the three great branches of our Government should remain separate and independent, and there shall continue to be a judicial review by the independent court of justice of the acts of the Congress and of the President in order to determine judicially whether the inalienable rights and liberties guaranteed under the Constitution have been infringed upon; and

Whereas the separation of the executive, the legislative, and the judicial branches of our Government, and the mutual independence of the three branches one from the other, are fundamental to the genius of our Constitution and our Government: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of California, That the Senate of the State of California does respectfully urge and memorialize the Congress of the United States to reject that portion of the proposed legislation which will give to the President of the United States the right to appoint additional Justices to the Supreme Court of the United States in the event that any of the Justices of the Supreme Court fail to resign, and to reject any legislation which will destroy the independence of the Supreme Court and render it subservient to the Presidency; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to all the Senators and Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Dairy Employees' Local Union No. 754, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Stablemen, and Helpers of America, of Chicago, Ill., favoring the enactment of legislation to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Kiwanis Club of Portsmouth, Ohio, favoring the appropriation of funds and enactment of legislation to construct reservoirs and other projects for flood control in the Ohio River Basin, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Bowers, of Schuyler, Va., praying for the enactment of old-age pension legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Md., praying for the enactment of old-age pension legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a petition, signed by 152 citizens of Victoria County, Tex., praying for full support in Congress of the President's proposal to reform the Federal judiciary, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DUFFY presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Joint resolution relating to Federal aid for Bang's disease control

Whereas the Federal and State cooperative Bang's disease control program which has been carried on almost entirely by funds appropriated by the Congress of the United States and administered by the Federal Bureau of Animal Industry, has resulted in greatly reducing the incidence of Bang's disease among cattle in our State, and has proven otherwise extremely beneficial to the cattle breeding and dairy industry of Wisconsin; and

Whereas these funds to conduct this very essential disease control work have been made possible through the initiative and support given by all the Wisconsin Members of both Houses of Congress; and

Whereas continued Federal assistance for the ensuing year is imperative for effective control of this destructive disease in the State of Wisconsin: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the members of the senate and the assembly of this State take this means of expressing their appreciation to all the Wisconsin Members of Congress for their interest in and support of this cause; be it further

Resolved, That each Wisconsin Member of both Houses of Congress be earnestly requested to make every effort to obtain passage of legislation by the Congress of the United States providing necessary funds for continued Federal aid for control of Bang's disease in Wisconsin for the ensuing fiscal year; and be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to each Wisconsin Member of both Houses of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, favoring an appropriation to continue Federal aid for the control of Bang's disease in Wisconsin for the ensuing fiscal year, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

(See joint resolution printed in full above when presented today by Mr. DUFFY.)

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—DIFFICULTY OF CONSTITUTIONAL-AMENDMENT METHOD

Mr. GREEN. I present a resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the State of Rhode Island, endorsing the proposal of the President of the United States to reorganize the Federal judiciary. I ask that the resolution be read; and, after that shall have been done, I should like to make a brief comment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

House resolution endorsing the proposal of the President of the United States to reorganize the judiciary of the United States

Whereas the house of representatives has been apprised in the public press that the President of the United States, by means of a special message to Congress, has proposed certain changes in the judiciary of the United States; and

Whereas such proposal is strictly in accordance with the Constitution of the United States and has as its sole aim the relief of congestion in the Supreme Court and the growing need for liberal interpretation of our statutes in keeping with modern conditions of living; and

Whereas the restriction of an age limit for members of the judiciary is in accordance with general practice in educational and business institutions: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this house of representatives places itself on record as being heartily in favor of the proposal of the President of the United States to reorganize the judiciary of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution shall be forwarded by the recording clerk of the house of representatives to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Rhode Island.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, in presenting this resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Rhode Island entering the proposal of the President to reorganize the Federal judiciary, it is fair to add that I am informed that a resolution protesting against the same proposal was recently passed by the Senate of the State of Rhode Island. I cannot, however, present the latter resolution, since I have not been officially informed of its passage. These two resolutions serve as an admirable illustration of the difficulty of securing the passage of any constitutional amendment relating to the Supreme Court.

It is sometimes argued that since the President received an overwhelming vote in the last election, carrying 46 of the 48 States, it should not be difficult to secure the adoption of a constitutional amendment, since it has to be approved by only 36 States. Rhode Island offers an admirable illustration of the fallacy of this argument. In the last election President Roosevelt carried Rhode Island by a plurality of 39,807 votes, in round figures, 40,000. State senators were elected at the same election. The Republicans elected 28 and the Democrats 14, or only one-half as many. Yet the 28 Republican senators received a total vote of 53,647 and the 14 Democratic senators received 118,381, or over twice as many. In other words, the President swept the State, and the Democratic senators received twice as many votes as the Republican senators, and yet the Republicans have twice as many senators as the Democrats. And just as this Republican senate of the State of Rhode Island, misrepresenting the people of that State, has passed a resolution protesting against the President's proposal, so any amendment on the same subject will receive similar disapproval at its hands.

The same thing is true, though probably to a less extent, in at least 12 other States in the Union. Yet the submission of constitutional amendments is sometimes described as "giving the people a chance to vote on the proposition."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution of the House of Representatives of Rhode Island, presented by the Senator from Rhode Island, will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 329) to further extend the period of time during which final proof may be offered by homestead and desert land entrymen, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, to which was referred the bill (S. 413) to extend the time for the completion of the investigation of reclamation projects authorized by the act of April 14, 1936, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 172) thereon.

Mr. O'MAHONEY, from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, to which was referred the bill (S. 48) to authorize an appropriation for investigations under the Federal reclamation laws, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 173) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WHITE:

A bill (S. 1839) to authorize the conveyance by the United States to the town of Bristol, Maine, of a portion of the Pemaquid Point Lighthouse Reservation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. 1840) for the relief of Alfred P. Paquin; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 1841) granting a pension to Martha Cooper; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRIDGES:

A bill (S. 1842) to amend the Social Security Act by defining the term "domestic service in a private home" as used therein; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

A bill (S. 1843) for the relief of Emma Gregory; to the Committee on Claims.

(By request.) A bill (S. 1844) for the relief of Alva (Albert) Ellsworth Porter; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. ELLENDER:

A bill (S. 1845) to amend the act entitled "An act to prohibit financial transactions with any foreign government in default on its obligations to the United States", approved April 13, 1934; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McADOO:

A bill (S. 1846) to reduce by 100,000 the number of 50-cent pieces authorized to be coined in celebration of the opening of the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge, and to authorize the coinage of not to exceed 100,000 50-cent pieces in celebration of the opening of the Golden Gate Bridge; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.
